School books, stationery, etc., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their children or wards, with such other information as may be deemed proper and necessary.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm.—The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath and recite a Bible lesson each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July; at which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, etc., to be made to the President of the College.

13,000 ACRES OF LAND FOR SALE.

THE lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Chastor Grants." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in process of construction, and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy; the water is excellent and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Title perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. Dan'l Ely. JAMES B. BRIGHAM.

THE ensuing scholastic year will commence on Wednesday, the 1st of October.

The Institution has entered on its sixth session under the auspices of the same Principal. A sense of duty, interest and pleasure binds his future connexion with the institution permanent and perpetual.

The apparatus, Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical, is large and well selected.

There is a numerous cabinet of minerals and fossils in connexion with the Seminary.

There is a library of more than one thousand volumes accessible to the pupils, which will shortly be increased several hundred volumes.

The number of musical instruments, piano, harp, guitars, etc., is always sufficient to meet the wants of the department.

The Institution is furnished with a large and excellent collection of maps, charts, diagrams, plates, globes, etc.

The grounds of the Seminary have been enlarged and the entire premises tastefully enclosed.

UNIFORM.

The Trustees and Principal at a meeting lately held, adopted a uniform for the following reasons:

1st. To secure economy in dress. It is impracticable to secure it otherwise.

2d. Our young ladies are of diverse pecuniary conditions, as is but to be expected where such a number are thrown together, and this diversity is published to the world by the different styles and quality of dress on all public occasions.

3d. On public occasions we have often—as well as the young ladies, been mortified to hear this diversity remarked.

4th. Without a uniform, there being no rule in the article of dress, the region of whim and caprice is left boundless, and the trouble of satisfying these endlessly diverse fancies in every article, is burdensome and annoying in the extreme. For the above and other good reasons, we have adopted a uniform, and commend it to our patrons and the public. It must be regarded as a law of the Institution.

THE MINING.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire:—Dear Brother—There are, as practiced in this country, five kinds of mining—the surface, hydraulic, tunneling, river and quartz mining.

1. The surface diggins, as it is usually styled, is the first that was practiced in this country, and for a time was more profitable than any that has succeeded it. This is usually done by digging from two to four and five feet into the surface of the earth, and throwing the loose dirt into a long box, or rather an extension of boxes, through which a rapid stream of water is running, and across the bottom of these sluice-boxes as they are called, strips of wood are nailed called ripples. The water dissolves the dirt, releasing the particles of gold that are in it, and these, being heavier than any other particles in the dirt, fall against the ripples and are secured to the miner. It is sometimes the case more effectually to accomplish this, that quicksilver is placed against these strips, which receives and retains the particles of gold, and refuses to receive anything else. The gold is relieved from the quicksilver by evaporating the latter by heating it in a pan. The washing through sluice-boxes, however, is an improvement in mining. The former method was to wash the gold out of the dirt in a box, fixed on rockers and called a cradle, until the gold is relieved from the dirt. This washing takes place in a riddle, which is placed over the bottom of the cradle, and through which the dirt that is being washed passes, and falling against strips in the bottom of the cradle, the gold is secured as in the case of the sluice-boxes. An improvement on this method was the introduction of a box, at the end of which was attached a sheet-iron riddle. This riddle rises gradually from the bottom of the box, permitting the water and dirt to pass through it, and catching the coarser pebble and stone which is to be thrown off. On the bottom, under this riddle, is the ripple made by the cross strips, as before noticed, against which the particles of gold are caught and secured. The middle, and the box with which it is immediately connected, is called the Long Tom; but the extended sluice-box often, but not always connected with it, is no part of the Long Tom. The cradle and Long Tom are now but seldom used, except by Chinamen.

2. The second method of mining is the hydraulic. This is effective and powerful. In this method the miner gets his water usually from ditches passing along high upon the hill or mountain-side, which is conveyed to him through hose to a pipe which he holds in his hand, and through which he directs at will a powerful stream against the side of the hill or mountain, which tares it down with rapidity and power. These ditches which afford great facilities to mining, are generally conducted from rivers at an immense expense, and are sometimes brought from twenty to forty miles, the water of which is sold to the miner by the square inch. They are very profitable to the miners. The dirt thus torn from the hill is washed through the sluice-boxes, and the gold is secured in the boxes in the manner already noticed.

3. The third mentioned is that of tunneling. This is now a very common method, and when successful is most profitable. It is, however, very expensive, and is usually undertaken by companies. Tunneling is accomplished in two ways. One is to tunnel from the side into the bosom of the mountain. Another is to sink what they call a shaft until they strike the gravel dirt, which contains the gold. Both of these methods have their difficulties. To explain which I must give you some account of the peculiar formation of the mountains containing the gold. These are invariably resting on a bed of rock that lies in a basin position, and very usually if not always contains water. It is therefore important to the miner that he strike the basin in the right place, so as to drain off the water and give him access to the pay dirt. If he is too high he has to try it over again; if too low to ascend. If the man who sinks the shaft comes in coutact with the water he has to pump it out if he can. If he cannot his labor is lost. Or if he fail to strike what is called the lead of the pay dirt, he has lost his labor and the cost. In the process of tunneling, when they reach the rim of the basin, they have to pass through it, which is usually found to be very hard. These tunnels are most usually from two to three years in digging, and at a cost of from ten to fifty dollars per foot, and are rarely less than from three to twelve hundred feet. In prosecuting this work they are sometimes interrupted by bad air, which they overcome by heating the mouth of the tunnel with a stove, and the rarified air draws out the unhealthy air. Another method is to sink a shaft so as to connect the tunnel with the surface of the earth, when by these methods the gold leads are fortunately struck, it usually affords an ample fortune to the proprietors. It is not unusual to find the gravel very strongly cemented, so as to make a strong resistance to the operator. These leads of gravel are supposed to be the beds of former streams of water, however deeply bedded under the mountains.

4. The fourth method is the river mining. In this the river is turned out of its bed, usually by flumming, and the bed of the river is then washed out and the gold taken from it. The gold, being heavier than anything else, makes its way in the greatest quantities to the bed rock, if there be such in the river. The washing is generally done through the sluice-boxes, as before described.—The flume by which the water is removed from the river, is a large plank box, surrounded and sustained by timbers, and when necessary propped, so as to lead the water out of the way. This is said at present to be the least profitable, and the most uncertain kind of mining, and can only be resorted to in low water.

4. The fifth description of mining is the quartz. This involves so much of cost for machinery, tunneling, etc., that it has proved disastrous to the miners, and has caused the total failure of a great number of men; but great improvements have of late been made in this kind of mining, and it is becoming more profitable. Some companies have succeeded very well, and it is now presumed that this is destined to become the most common and profitable of all the mining of this country. Exceedingly rich veins of quartz have been discovered at Quartzburg, Mariposa county and elsewhere. Some beautiful specimens were shown me at Quartzburg. The process of separating the gold from the quartz, is first to brake up the quartz into pieces sufficiently small to be crushed by the pestles of the quartz mills. These beat the stone into a powder, and the water at the same time let in upon it in such a manner as to wash it into troughs, where the gold is washed from it into quicksilver, deposited as before described.

The method of obtaining the quartz is generally by tunneling. The quartz is usually found in rather regular veins, and sometimes you may see these projecting through the earth in long white rows, and on little ridges ascending the mountain sides. These are sometimes found bedded in earth and stones, and also in immense masses of slate. They associate very much with slate in this country.

The cost of mills by which these quartz are crushed are very considerable. There is one in Grass Valley belonging to an English Company, which cost from seventy to eighty thousand dollars: Another at Strong's Diggins, on the North Fork of the American River, that cost something over forty thousand dollars. There are numerous others in various portions of the State—at Placerville, Quartzburg, etc.

For a number of the facts contained in the above statements, I am indebted to Mr. Augustus Williams, of this State, who is now a practical miner. He is a native of Kentucky, but an immigrant from Missouri to California. I have also witnessed in person all the various species of mining in the country.

Ever truly yours,

W. H. KAVANAUGH.

P. S.—Bishop Scott, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, arrived in this city by the last steamer—preached here on Sabbath last, and will hold the Conference at San. Jose, commencing on the 27th inst. The Bishop, though generally in feeble health, seems to have stood the voyage pretty well—appears cheerful and in the spirit of his work. This leaves me in good health, Mrs. K. in tolerable and improving health.

Yours, W. H. K.

A NEW OFFICER---WHO IS HE?

THE BISHOP OF ALABAMA, U. S.

The London Morning Star announces that "the Bishop of Alabama, U. S., preached to large congregation, at St. Bartholomew's Church, Moorfields Cripplegate," on Sunday evening, 3d inst.

We have heard of the Governor of Alabama, and other State officers recognized by its Constitution. But who is this "Bishop of Alabama" preaching at "St. Bartholomew's Church, Moorfields Cripplegate?" Hasn't John Bull been hoaxed by somebody?

Bishop Andrew resides in Alabama, and from his position and the influence and relative strength of the Methodists there, he, if any one, is entitled to the distinction of "the Bishop of Alabama." But Bishop Andrew has not taken a trip across the Atlantic lately. The Rev. Mr. Cobb, who is the Bishop of a very small sect, in Alabama, has had leave of absence from his Diocese. Is it possible he has been passed off on the credulous abroad for "the Bishop of Alabama, U. S?"

The Conferences---The Preachers.

As the time for holding the Conferences is drawing nigh, the Agents would respectfully request the Preachers to make arrangements to settle their accounts in full at Conference, where it is not done before.

The amount of cash required in our business makes it necessary that we collect our debts. The Preachers will greatly oblige us, therefore, by cashing their accounts at Conference, or before. It would afford us great pleasure to extend accommodations where it might be desired, were we in circumstances to do so; but we know you will properly appreciate our necessities, and, if need be, will borrow the money to pay us. We know on whom we rely when we appeal to Methodist Preachers. We need only to state the case, and no doubt you will do your utmost to comply with our wishes.

Resolutions of Joint Board.

PARSONAGE, Natchez, Miss. Aug. 30, 1856.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire:—Dear Brother—The Joint Board of Centenary College adopted several resolutions at their last annual meeting, which they ordered to be published in the Advocate:

"Inasmuch as it has pleased God to remove Brothers Rev. John Lane, Rev. A. T. M. Fly and John Robson from our midst—

Resolved, That we, while we submit to the will of Providence, deplore their loss as Christian friends, and especially as members of this Board.

Resolved, That we in our associated capacity, as a Board of Trustees and Visitors, sympathize with their families in their bereavement—and trust that their many virtues in their intercourse with men, and integrity in the discharge of their duties, may ever be remembered by us, and be incentive to emulate their worthy example.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and presented to the families of the deceased.

Confessions of a Tobacconist.

Ever and anon we hear from the tobacconizing article. Many have been led to quit the practice and turn the savings into a bank that pays good interest. Others have not quit but mended their ways. So if the quid has not been affected the quidmodo has been.—[Ed.

Mr. Editor:—Permit me to communicate to the Christian public a few facts. It was about the year 1830 I commenced the practice of tobacco smoking. In this unprofitable trade I was a zealous laborer up to the commencement of this present year. The annual average expense to me has been about thirty dollars. The gross sum about seven hundred and fifty dollars! I have put the figures as low as I could, and be justified by facts. A moderate smoker—say three cigars per day—and who that smokes at all does not go beyond that number?—pays more than fifty dollars a year for wasting time and tobacco.

Thus far in this year I have not used the weed at all. I feel no inconvenience from this abstinence, and know of a truth that I feel better than for many years past.

The amount thus withdrawn from this insipid luxury (?). I shall transfer to the benefit of the Church of which I am at present a member.

Fayette District---Mississippi Conference.

Brother McTyeire:—By the 21st of July I had completed my third round on this District, and intended soon to give your readers some account of our prospects, but severe family affliction has prevented me until now. Though much of the time I have traveled and labored "in weariness and painfulness," having been almost constantly afflicted with sciatica and inflamation of the throat, yet I have been able to meet all my appointments except one, which occurred at the time of the heavy sleet last winter. After the close of the unusually cold winter our congregations have generally been large, attentive, and often deeply impressed with the religious services of our quarterly meetings. Our love feasts have invariably been held according to rule, and God has made them a blessing to his people as in former years. They have been happy seasons to the faithful.

I notice that where our preachers, instead of complaining about the neglect of class-meetings, enter heartily themselves into the exercises of the class-room, a large portion of our people seem to be as fond of them as ever before. This has been particularly manifested on the Georgetown Circuit, now under the pastoral care of Brother Ers canbrack. I find where our preachers, thirsting themselves for the sweet communion of Saints, invite the membership to meet them in class, they respond as readily as in former time. It is true that some do not, and such has always been the case, but "what is the chaff to the wheat?" Thirty years ago, that embodiment of ministerial excellence, Bishop Roberts, advised us if we could not preach a sermon of ordinary length and hold class-meeting afterwards, we had better preach a short sermon than to neglect meeting the class. A pious layman, of fine practical sense, once said to me, "that faithful preaching was like driving a nail in a sure place, and holding class-meeting afterwards was like clinching it on the other side to prevent its drawing out." I endorse the opinion.

The great object of our mission as Methodist preachers being to "spread scriptural holiness over the land," the subject of Bible holiness has been brought prominently before our membership, and I am happy in saying that I have never known our people more interested on the subject of personal holiness than they now are in many parts of this District. The Guide to Holiness, and our standard books in connection with the Holy Scriptures are being read and studied on the subject, and many are hungering and thirsting after "the fullness of the blessing of gospel of Christ." Some, blessed be God, have already believed and entered into the enjoyment of perfect love. May the number be greatly increased!

Our preachers are all doing a good work in circulating our books and tracts among the people. They consider it no disparagement to their ministerial dignity to fill their saddle bags with these "leaves from the tree of life, which are for the healing of the nations," and call the attention of the people everywere to a lot "of good religious books," which they have brought along for their special benefit. Solomon truly said "of making many books there is no end," and the same may be said in regard to selling books, the more we sell the greater will be the demand. A jovial friend of mine, who, I regret to say was in the habit of indulging too freely in his cups, once said to me, when he took one dram he wanted another, and very soon a third, and when he got to thirdly he then wanted all that was in the barrel. This is somewhat the process of reading good books. Get a man to read one, and forthwith he wants another, and then a third, until he finds his head and heart so improved, and withal has acquired such a taste for reading that it has become a life-long source of pleasure and profit to him.—In a large portion of my District the "Great Iron Wheel" had been industriously circulated by those whose mendicable calling seems to be to hate the Methodists and to misrepresent our doctrines and church government; and early in the year they flattered themselves that no one would undertake a refutation of Mr. Graves' book; but they have met with a sad disappointment and a terrible overthrow in the sudden appearance and wide-spread circulation of Brownlow's "Great Iron Wheel examined." The general impression among those who have read Brownlow's book, is, that he has effectually "answered a fool according to his folly."

In the Eastern portion of my District we greatly need a Colporteur who can visit every house and circulate our religious and denominational literature in detail among the people. There are large neighborhoods almost wholly under the influence of the Baptist Church, and where but little is known about our church except what is false and unfavorable; and thus it has been for more than thirty years to my certain knowledge; and thus it will ever be until people learn from ourselves who and what we are. I have been looking around all the year for a suitable man to undertake this business, but hitherto have looked in vain. I believe an active and industrious man, with a benevolent heart and winning manners, would do much good in this way to others, and make good wages for himself. I have heard cheering news, especially from Pearl River Circuit, since my last round, but more of this hereafter.

Yours affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

The Physician's Delay.

"Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sisters, and Lazarus. When he had heard, therefore, that he was sick, he abode, two days still in the same place where he was." John xi. 5, 6.

There is something very remarkable in that word, "therefore." I feel sure that if you had given human reason the fifth verse, "Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus," and ask for the legitimate inference, the sixth verse would have continued thus, "When he had heard, therefore, that he was sick, he hastened and went at once to Bethany." But as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are his ways higher than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts—and he "abode two days still in the same place where he was."

We can easily picture the intense anxiety of the sisters. Will our messenger reach the Lord in time? will our urgent necessity appear? will he come at once? And when sufficient time had elapsed for his arrival, what painful and fruitless conjectures as to his absence! Jesus was not unmindful of their deep distress. Witness the serenity with which, when his hour was come, he fearlessly returned to Judea where "the Jews had sought to stone him," witness how, when he saw Mary weeping and her friends weeping with her, he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled; witness how he wept and groaned again, though he knew that one brief hour would turn their mourning into joy; still, with the keenest appreciation of all they were going through, because he loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus, "he abode two days still in the same place where he was."

The reason is no mystery to us now, for we know the sequel. Through this delay his mightest miracle was wrought. Suffering saint, you are passing through the furnance. You know not what Jesus is doing now, you see not the bright sequel. Take comfort from the family of Bethany. For you, too, eternal blessings are connected with protracted affliction.—[Bickersteth.

How Older Ministers may Benefit Younger Ones.

Dr. Wayland, in one of his late articles to the Examiner, New York, discourses at largo how older ministers may benefit younger ones. We have room only for this extract:

"He may teach him to form the plan of a sermon, show him the errors of the plans which he presents, hear him preach, point out his awkwardness in language and delivery; encourage him in all that is good and acceptable, and prune away all that is the reverse. In this way a pastor may be of invaluable advantage to his younger brother in the ministry. Nor need this be done in the form of stiff and formal lectures. It may nearly all be accomplished in the way of pleasant, fraternal conversation, while riding to visit the sick, or while walking together to attend a meeting, or working together in the garden or the field. Older brethren in the ministry have little idea how greatly they might improve their juniors by conversation of this kind. One of our most distinguished and most eloquent ministers, on whose lips the first men in the nation have hung with solemn attention, once told me that all the instructions which he had received in preaching was contained in a single remark addressed to him by an aged father in the Gospel. 'Tell the people,' said he, 'precisely what they tell you.' He had the good sense to understand the precept and reduce it to practice. In visiting his people he remarked the various forms of religious experience, in affliction, in joy, in conversion, remorse, repentence, faith, doubt, trust, in sickness and health, and in the hour of death. He told the people what they told him, and hence his preaching was distinguished for vivacity, knowledge of the human heart, and richness of religious experience, which has been rarely excelled. Probably in no six months of his life did that old minister ever do so much to advance the cause of Christ, as by uttering these few words of advice to his younger brother."

In Conversation.—Set a watch, O, Lord before my mouth; keep thou the door of my lips. Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight, oh, Lord, my strength and my Redeemer. Preserve me, oh, Lord, from vain conversations; give me grace never to be ashamed to speak of thee and thy law.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Vigilance on the Eve of Disbanding.

JUDGE TERRY RELEASED.

By the arrival of the steamer Philadelphia Monday afternoon, with the California mails, we have dates from that State to the 20th ult.

The news is of an interesting nature. Several events of importance have transpired since the sailing of the last steamer.

From the summary of the fortnight's news, which we find in the True Californian of the 20th, we extract the following:

Two events have transpired during the past fortnight just closed, which in future time will be referred to as having had a more than ordinary influence upon the times: we refer to the People's meeting for bringing into the field an independent ticket for our local offices, and the Grand Vigilance Demonstration, which took place the day before yesterday, August 18th, and which is understood to be the ceremony preceding the unbinding of the Committee.

The Coroner's Jury which held inquests over the bodies of Brace and Hetherington, the men hung on the 20th July by the Vigilance Committee, brought in a verdict, on the 6th of August, to the effect that the deceased came to their deaths by being hung by a man named Robert Nixon, assisted by other men, whose names are unknown, supposed to belong to an organization styling themselves the Committee of Vigilance. It is said, on good authority, that Robert Nixon can prove by indisputable testimony that he was not on the ground at the time of the execution. The verdict was received by the people with general ridicule; and a writer in one of the papers stated that the zeal of the Coroner has not been excelled since the time when so much care was taken to ascertain "Who killed Cock Robin?"

At two o'clock on the morning of the seventh of August, David S. Terry, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, so long held a prisoner by the Committee of Vigilance, was released. He was convicted of the assault on Hopkins, but as there was no punishment within the power of the Committee to inflict commensurate with such an offence, they concluded to discharge him with a resolution of censure. This action caused intense excitement, and for a few hours produced much dissatisfaction in the ranks of the General Committee. But the lapse of a little time sufficed to calm down the excitement, and few said anything except in acquiescence on the next day. Judge Terry, upon leaving the rooms, which he did before daylight, proceeded at once, as a measure of precaution against the wrath of the populace, which had been so highly raised against him, on board the U. S. sloop-of-war John Adams, lying at that time in the bay. The same evening he proceeded to Sacramento.

On the 18th August the Committee of Vigilance turned out in full force for a grand parade. Near five thousand men were under arms, and had there been more arms the number would have been increased. After parading in procession through most of the principal streets for the greater part of the day, they disbanded without accident or disturbance. During the march the streets were strewn with flowers by the ladies, who had assembled in great numbers on the galleries and porticoes overlooking the route of the procession.

The Alta of the same date has the following in regard to the release of Judge Terry, and the closing acts of the Vigilance Committee:

A few days after the execution of Hetherington and Brace, the Committee having examined with great care and deliberation the case of Judge Terry, about which there had been more solicitude than any other upon which they had been called to adjudicate, decreed, by a large majority, to release him from custody. This produced considerable dissatisfaction amongst many members as well as friends outside their body; but on all the facts being published, the course of the Committee met with a cordial approval from all; even those most disposed to murmur, being, in many instances, the first to renew their expressions of confidence, and pledges of support. It is now conceded on all hands, that the Committee have acted with consummate wisdom and justice, not only in this instance, but throughout their whole proceedings. It is in the mouth of every body that they have yet to make their first mistake.

Thus entrenched in the public confidence—endorsed by the whole community—the object of general gratitude and approval—all opposition withdrawn, or dwindled down into insignificance, the national vessel that threatened to fire upon our town sailed from port—the General Government turning a deaf ear to the application of their foes—everywhere triumphant—their work accomplished—the people satisfied—justice vindicated—crime rebuked, the long and arduous duties of the Committee draw to a close, and they contemplate with joy the end of their labors. A few days after the discharge of Terry, the remaining prisoners were released, and the work of dismantling their fortifications commenced. This accomplished, they resolved, on Monday, the 18th inst., to marshall all their forces, and openly, before the world, to march to their quarters and there consummate their work by resigning into the hands of the people the power delegated to them at the commencement of their labors.

The King Testimonial Committee published a report on the 15th of August, by which it appears that the whole amount of the fund contributed by the people of this State for the benefit of the widow and orphans of the late James King of Wm., is $34,559 43. This money is to be invested by trustees for the beneficiaries.

On Monday evening, August 11th, there was an immense gathering of the people in front of the American Exchange, on Sansome street, they having been called together by a published card, signed by about three hundred of our most respected and substantial citizens. The meeting was understood to be a movement for the organization of a People's party, pledged to vote for the best officers, irrespective of partisan or political connections. Ira P. Rankin was elected chairman. Thirty-six Vice-Presidents were also chosen. An attempt was made by the old party hacks to disturb the deliberations of the people, but they were quickly put down; and a committee of twenty-one was selected to bring out a People's ticket, which is to be reported for ratification at a future mass meeting. The Committee on nominations subsequently held a meeting, and have published a resolution that they will put forward the name of no man who directly or indirectly seeks to obtain a nomination from them!

On the 5th of August, a fire broke out at Diamond Springs, and destroyed a great portion of the town.

Beverly Wells was executed at Benicia on the 7th of August, for the murder of Dunn, in February last. He died protesting that he had acted in self-defence, and that his conviction resulted from perjury by a witness against him.

Highway robberies still continue very frequent in the interior of our State. On the 12th of August, the stage from Comptonville to Marysville, in which was a number of passengers and a large sum of money, was attacked by six mounted highwaymen. The driver and passengers were armed with revolvers, and defended themselves stoutly. A "young" battle ensued, in which a number of shots were exchanged; it is thought that several robbers were hurt, as one or two of them were unhorsed. The stage was riddled by balls, and a female passenger received one in her head, inflicting a dreadful wound. The robbers eventually retreated. The driver had one of his arms broken by a ball; one of the passengers was shot through both legs, and another received a glance shot across the forehead, which made a slight wound. Parties of Rangers have been organized to scour the country in pursuit of the highwaymen, but as yet none have been arrested.

From Oregon.

We copy the following Intelligence from Oregon from the True Californian of the 20th:

Our dates from Portland, Oregon, are to the 9th August. Some severe battles had been fought between the volunteers and the Nez Perces, in which the Indians were defeated with great slaughter—sixty being left dead on the field. These reverses had made this tribe quite tractable, and were at last accounts anxious to retreat.

It is reported that rich gold mines have been discovered in the Nez Perces country, which is in the northern part of Oregon.

T. J. Crawford, a large owner of the Albany Mills, was lately murdered by a man named Fox. Crawford seduced Fox's sister, and refusing to marry her, the latter drove a pistol bullet through his heart.

Later From China.

By the arrival of the bark Cesar from Hong Kong, the True Californian has the following items of Chinese intelligence:

The Hong Kong China Mail, of June 20th, says:

A trading-boat belonging to Sai-wan was plundered by pirates off that place on the 17th inst.

Peace Celebration.—To-day, on account of the Peace, H. M. S. Nankin has been dressed out in colors, and royal salutes were fired at noon by the Nankin and U. S. ships San Jacinto and Levant, afloat, and the Murray Battery ashore.

The Hong-Kong Shipping List contains the following among its other ship news:

Ship Mary Welshaint was totally dismasted; was towed into port by steamer. Ship Monsoon, from Sydney, put into Hong-Kong June 20th, in distress; had experienced a severe typhoon; lost main-yard, chains and anchors. Portuguese barque Smyrna lost mizzen-mast; had to return. Had heard of several other vessels being ashore.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADIAN AT QUEBEC.

The steamship Canadian, from Liverpool on the 27th ult., arrived at Quebec on the 9th inst. She brings intelligence four days later than that brought by the Persia at New York.

Great Britain.

The dinner to the Guards was given in the Surry Gardes, London, on the 26th ult. Two thousand men partook of it. Major Edwards, the oldest soldier in the army, presided. The whole affair passed off very pleasantly.

Sir Wm. Temple, Minister at Naples, Lord Palmerston's only brother, is dead.

Sir Colin Campbell is to be appointed Inspector General of Infantry.

A large Chartist meeting was held at Todmorton to welcome the return of John Frost to public life.

France.

Everything is dull. The papers are wholly employed with quarreling with each other.

The Emperor and his family continue at Biarritz, and letter writers continue to assert that the Emperor is suffering much from disease of the liver.

Spain.

We continue without definite intelligence from Spain. The Government is occupied in appointing new officers to all the Civil Departments, and they are mostly appointed from the liberal section.

The Epoca announces that the decree to suppress the whole National Guard will appear in a day or two. The National Guard of the Province of Madrid has already been disarmed. A further sum of thirty thousand pounds for the Cuba loans of 1834 and 1839, will be paid September 5th.

Portugal.

The bread riots are over and quiet restored. Cholera is on the decline at Lisbon.

The Portuguese Government announce a loan of fifteen hundred contos in six per cent. bonds, for public works.

A great many arrests have been made, both among the troops and citizens, in the endeavor to detect a conspiracy in the recent riots. Some excitement was felt at the arrival of a strong French squadron in the Tagus.

The harvest in Portugal is now over, and is even less than had been anticipated. The vines will prove a complete failure.

Italy.

The principal item of news comes in a sheet not strictly reliable, namely, "that the King of Naples, by the advice of Austria, demands to submit his differences with the Western Powers to the arbitration of a European Congress."

A very doubtful letter of the 11th says that a collision had taken place at Palermo between the Neapolitan troops and the Swiss.

The crops are said to be not so large an average throughout the Neapolitan Territory as was expected.

Prussia.

The Prussian papers publish minute accounts of the recent encounter between the Prussian Corvette Danizic and the pirates. The main facts do not differ from those already published. The event caused intense excitement in Berlin, but it is probably incorrect that Prussia has asked the aid of France and England—the feeling being that Prussia herself should undertake the chastisement of the Pirates. Russia has volunteered two or three ships to aid any expedition that Prussia may fit out.

Denmark.

A letter from Hamburg says that in the affair of the Sound Dues, great hopes are entertained that England will speedily accede to the plan of capitalization. These hopes were strengthened by the return of Mr. Buchanan, the English Minister, who had been to London to confer with his Government on the subject. During the past month, 2,046 vessels had passed through the Sound. Of these 900 were Swedish, 700 English, 250 Prussian, 70 French, 50 Russian, and 22 American.

Sweden.

Some few fatal cases of cholera had occurred at Stockholm. Gen. Andrew Bodisco, the Russian Military Envoy, was the first victim.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Tuesday morning of the steamship Mexico, John Y. Lawless, commander, from Galveston via Powder Horn on the 14th, we have received full files of Texas papers, from which we extract the following items of intelligence:

Galveston Custom-House.—The Galveston Civilian, of the 12th inst., has the following:

The Collector of Customs has received a telegraphic dispatch, directing him to re-advertise for proposals for building the Galveston Custom-House, etc. The proposals to be opened the 20th October.

We learn from the same paper that a meeting was held in Brazoria, on the 8th inst., to take into consideration the present state of affairs in Kansas. Resolutions were adopted, strongly denouncing the course of the Freesoilers on the Kansas question. There were twenty-four volunteers enrolled, and the amount of seventeen hundred dollars was subscribed towards defraying their expenses.

The Galveston Confederate, of the 12th inst., says:

The business season, judging from appearances, has come upon us, all at once. Within the past few days there have been a dozen or more arrivals from sea, as our shipping list will tell, and goods of every species and description, from Yankee clocks and wooden nutmegs to lagging and rope, are crowding the wharves and filling the warehouses. The upper bayous are sending out the bay steamers, which have been lying idly by during the summer months and refitting for the winter's trade.

The late Legislature, according to the Austin Intelligencer, was a remarkable body, having "served through the coldest winter and hottest summer ever felt in Texas. They served three months in winter and two in summer. They have spoken, written, printed and circulated more speeches and reports than were spoken by the Federal Congress and Convention, from 1776 to the end of the Federal Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States.

Capt. Gumman, of the bark Mustang, which arrived at Indianola on the 9th, reports as follows:

September 5th, in lat. 26.01 N., long. 87.22 W., saw a vessel bottom up, with masts alongside, black mast-heads, and appeared to be a schooner about 100 tons. Bottom coppered, with black top. Rudder unshipped.

The Indianola Bulletin, of the 12th, says:

The brig Storm King, from N. Y., which arrived here during the week, picked up at sea a small schooner within one hundred miles of Cuba, and brought her into the port. She had either been abandoned, or broke loose from some port during a storm. The name painted on her stern was El Rosario.

The Galveston Civilian has the following in regard to this vessel:

A passenger by the steamship Louisiana, from Matagorda bay on Wednesday last, stated that a vessel had arrived at Powder Horn and reported that she had discovered a schooner; abandoned at sea, floating about with her helm lashed and everything made snug. She is described as a vessel of about 100 tons, and of that fast sailing and peculiar build and rig which causes her to be suspected of having been engaged in the slave trade. It is furthermore said that her interior fixtures leave little room to doubt that she had but recently been occupied by a living cargo. The strange craft was taken into port, and of course we will shortly learn more about her.

Derivation of the word "Cash."—There can be but little doubt that the word cash is derived from the Italian cassa, the chest in which Italian merchants kept their money, as do at the present time the Spaniards in their caja, and the Portuguese in their caxa, and the Frech in their coisse.

The application of the word cash to money is altogether English, it not having a corresponding term in any other European language.

Cash having been so inconsiderably adopted instead of cassa, (chest,) entries in the cash book (it should be chest book) are made in English counting-houses in this unmeaning way: "Cash Dr." and "Cash Cr.;" whereas the chest, and not the money, is Dr. for what is put into it, and Cr. for what is taken out.

Great mischief has too often arisen, as is well known in bankrupt courts, from the misuse of the word cash, in which large deficiencies often appear, and which would not be the case if the word chest were used as it ought to be. Instead of the cash account in the ledger, it should be chest account; but we have yet much to learn in England regarding mercantile book-keeping. [Notes and Queries.

Mineral Water in Sumpter County, Georgia.—The Macon Messenger mentions the discovery of a valuable mineral spring in the county of Sumpter ten miles from Americus.

The President left Washington on the 6th inst., for Warrenton Springs, where he intends remaining a short time.

Fire in Columbia, Pa.—A great fire occurred in the above named town on the afternoon of the 8th inst., destroying a large amount of property. Twenty-one buildings valued at from $20,000 to $30,000 were burned.

"Let's take a horn," is a phrase of frequent utterance. The blast of that horn may be the signal for the porter to open the gate of death.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1856.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Last week we said, for the encouragement of our Agents, that our list was firm. We now add that for some time past, new subscribers have been coming in at the rate of twenty five a week. The accounts sent forth show a large amount due. Don't let your preacher start to Conference without paying all you owe; and while at it, it would be as well to pay up a year in advance. It may save you hereafter being charged $2 50 or $3 00. If the Agent passes you by—please call him and settle. If he will not answer and come to a settlement—then enclose a bill to us and have it credited to your account and you shall have a receipt for the same.

N. B. Unless large collections are made on the accounts now out, before the sessions of the Conferences, we shall not be able to meet the current expenses of the year.

THE NEW BOOK AGENT.

IN AND OUT.

From our Nashville correspondent it will be seen that Rev. J. E. Evans has resigned his post, and Rev. F. A. Owen been reappointed.

The letter of resignation of Mr. Evans, to the Book Committee, speaks kindly of his social and personal relations in the Book Concern—these were all pleasant and calculated to hold true. Bnt his conscience was not easy:

"The Great Head of the Church has workmen suited to, and designed for, every station in the vineyard. And while I am satisfied that he has called me to preach the gospel, he has some one well suited to the responsible station now resigned."

Sound doctrine for a first rate Presiding Elder and preacher, such as he is known to be, oven a first rate Agent is a poor exchange. Can't a layman be found willing to have his salary fixed by the Church, and feed out of the same portion with preachers, competent to such work? This is our doctrino and has been.

Mr. Evans' lotter shows him to have passed through painful exercises; and considering how long the subject has been before him, it seemed hard to settle:

"Having consented to the appointment, I determined to try to believe it my duty; and to remove everything out of my way that might act as a consideration to induce the abandonment of my position. I purchased a comfortable home for my family, and tried to feel settled. But so far from relieving my doubts as to duty, they have ripened into a profound conviction that my appropriate place is in the regular pastoral work of the ministry. You may well imagine that I have passed a very trying ordeal in reaching the determination."

His return to the pastorate will be a rejoicing to Georgia Methodists—however, it may affect the Book Committee. We hope however he will not preach such doctrine as the above extract. Do a thing and then determino to try to believe it right! Such casuistry would hardly stand the test of Prov. 20:25; and of Romans, 14:23. This yea and nay style looks like trifling, where such great interests are involved.

FEES AT FUNERALS.—The subject of fees at funerals occupy the attention of a number of our exchanges. Ono of them has this paragraph on the subject:

"People are more negligent in such matters than some persons imagine. A pastor is often subject to direct expense in attending funerals, and yet receives no compensation for his labors, nor even has his expenses paid. We have, in a number of instances, been called to attend funerals when it was considerable inconvenience for us to do so, and have gone to the livery and hired a horse and buggy at an expense of from one to two dollars or more, and yet have never received the amount paid for horse hire, nor even a thank you, for our services. Such cases are not of rare occurrence, and they prove a heavy and onerous tax on the purse. Certainly the minister has a right to expect his actual expenses to be paid at least. It is sufficient in any circumstances, if he gives his time and labor."

NEW SCHOOL PRESBYTERIANS.—The Synod of Mississippi, (New School,) at their late meeting, adopted the following action:

The Committee on the Minutes of the General Assembly, offered the following report, which was accepted and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the agitation of the subject of slavery in our General Assembly for several years past, has produced alienation of feeling between the Northern and Southern portions of our Church, weakening thereby the bonds of both Church and State, and crippling, in some degree, our influence,—therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That while we feel bound by the most sacred obligations, to seek the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, and deeply deplore any schism in the body of Christ, we are constrained to say that such agitation is unjust, oppressive, and unwarranted by the Word of God.

"2. That, as a Synod, we hold ourselves in readiness to co-operate with our brethren in the other Southern Synods in any action which may seem to be demanded by our relation to the General Assembly.

"That the Stated Clerk of this Synod is hereby directed to open a correspondence with a view to fraternal interchange of opinion between the Southern Synods upon this subject, and submit the result of said correspondence at the next meeting of the Synod."

IN DIFFICULT CIRCUMSTANCES.—I will lift up my eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. Hear my prayers, oh, Lord, and let my cry come unto thee. Hide not thy face from me in the time of trouble. Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee. Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me. In all my ways I acknowledge thee; and do thou, in mercy, direct my path.

LIQUORING ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Our readers have heard of wooding on the Mississippi, gambling on the Mississippi, and oven blowing upon the Mississippi. A late trip on that famous highway introduced us to what is not less than any of those a peculiarity—liquoring on the Mississippi.

Did you ever, reader, salt cattle on a lick-log, or give vermifuge to a score of little negroes on a plantation? Unless you have done both, you cannot conceive of a morning liquoring scene on a Mississippi steamboat. It takes the first to give you an idea of the relish, and the second of coming up to it one by one. We rose early, and by accident drew a chair on the guards, where a full and inside view of the bar presented itself.

The bar-keeper knows the habits of his customers singularly well. At certain times he strolls about—at others is constantly in attendance. Like a Surgeon, who, before going into an operation, has all his bandages and liniments and knives arranged and in reach so the bar-keeper did. We saw him do it. Here the sugar and the ice, and there the pick to break off more small pieces from the lump when needed. The slop-tub, just under the counter, for passing tumblers through, is replenished—the corks are drawn and fitted in easy—the faucets in order. If, peradventure, a weak stomach craves it, a lemon is cut and laid by the squeezer. All ready, he wipes off the board again and again.

Here comes a man in shirt sleeves, dry as a fish—takes a pull at the big bottle—goes back to bed. Next one fills up the glass to taper point—works his lips together as his hand touches it—turns it round on bottom—stops it an appreciable part of a second, just before the final tilt into a dry and thirsty abyss that doubtless had swallowed a cotton plantation in detail—seemed to see prismatic beauties as he hold it sunward. Down it went, slow and easy. Took his chair near by and looked thoughtfully out on the shore, wo wondering how his innards feel.

A man below the ordinary statue, but thick set, wearing calico pants and a loose linen coat, leads the way with two others, one looking seedy, the other careless. They agree after consultation as to the dram—don't seem hard to suit, and it works like a charm. They draw two chairs close, while the third sits on the railing in front, and laugh and talk boisterously till breakfast.

Next an elderly gentleman—looks rather shy—he is quick in this movement—has the change ready—wipes his mouth and is gone.

A young man, all neatly dressed and hat on, saunters up and says, "cock-tail," or something with a tail to it.—Did you ever see a cock-tail fixed up? It requires two glasses, and mixing requires a genius. From one to the other glass, right, left, left, right, up, down the sparkling fluid falls in a lengthening curve. It actually seems to rope—the liquor does. At last it rests in one. It was a curiosity to glance at the gentleman who ordered that extra article. He toyed with it until we feared the foam that had been got up with such effort, would subside before he got it down.

They come thick and fast now—fortunate foresight in the bar-keeper to have everything where he can lay his hand on it. Young men come, very young men, and men old enough to know better. We saw no father take up his son. They do these things apart. In some cases we painfully suspected that a member of the Christian Church, feeling away from witnesses and restraint, was indulging an old appetite.

Ever and awhile a deck hand would come to the side-door near, and pulling out a bag with money, get a dram without ice or sugar or water—the undiluted stuff. These were mostly Irishmen.

The variety in all this dreadful unity is not the least interesting fact. One comes for the liquor and nothing else—gets it and goes. Another likes the place, lounges about it, is in no hurry and orders the dram with an air of indifference. The concoction is not strong enough for this man, and he says something to bar-keeper, who sprinkles something into it; that man throws down the drink at a gulph and throws a glass of water after it as though he had swallowed fire. One takes it apparently for his stomach's sake, and don't wan't to get the taste of it on its way there. Another seems to wish his throat was as long a fence rail, that he might taste it all the way down.

The ardent and pure stuff is good enough for some, while others coax and combine the elements in every variety:

A little to make it hot,
A little ice make it cool;
A little water to make it weak,
A little brandy to make it strong;
A little sugar to make it sweet,
A little effort to make it go down."

Verily, temperance has this stronghold of her enemy yet to take—a Mississippi steamboat.

All creatures are nothing compared with God, and absolutely nothing without God.

They that fear God least have the greatest reason to fear him.

REVIVALS.

HOMER, La., September 1, 1856.

About four weeks since, a meeting was commenced at Forest Grove. It lasted a week, during which some eighteen persons were converted to God. It was considered by the members as the best meeting ever held there. And to judge from what I saw one night, it must indeed have been a triumph of truth over sin. The congregation was large, but when the call for mourners was given, not a single sinner remained on his seat!

Since that time many other meetings have been held, by means of which God blessed the Church in a most encouraging manner. The local ministers have come up nobly to the work, and like skillful officers have effectually led the hosts of Israel on to battle and to victory. I believe that near one hundred have been converted and added to the church.

The Baptists are also holding some very good meetings. The Presbyterians will soon hold a camp-meeting in the northern part of the Parish, when much good is likely to be effected. A meeting, Methodist, was held at Arcadia, on Sparta Circuit, a week ago, during which nearly seventy-five were happily converted. While I write a meeting is going on in town. The congregations are large, and the altar filled with mourning souls. Other appointments are made for two months in advance. In this way the church here will save the "six months," which you feared might be "lost."

I think the meetings might be made better if the preachers would only refrain from preaching quite so long, and if the exhorters would do the same. Perhaps I am wrong, but it seems to me that so much talking is calculated to weary the mind. Another thing that I think would increase the usefulness of the church is this: Let the members throw aside reserve and go out into the congregation in search of sinners. This I have long known as an effectual means of bringing them to the cross. It will not do to depend too much on the preachers. The church must work if they would increase their usefulness. I make this suggestion in love, and hope it may prove beneficial.

Professor Stacey has arrived, and this morning the Preparatory Department was opened by him. He appears to be well fitted for his post.

SILVICOLA.

LINDEN CIRCUIT, Alabama Conference.

I have just closed a very interesting protracted meeting at a new appointment taken into the Circuit just two months ago. I organized a society then of twenty four members. At the close of the meeting above, we numbered just sixty. It was a glorious time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The most of the subjects of conversion were persons of families.—Some of the converts were young persons. All the conversions were highly satisfactory. Eternity alone will tell the final result of our efforts upon that occasion. One result I must mention—would to God it was universal after all revivals—the family altar has been erected in every house that I have heard from since the meeting.

One brother, who had been converted during the meeting, spent the evening with his family, with a neighbor brother a convert, and before they parted had prayers, upon his return home at night, his little daughter requested her father also to have prayers in his family, he declining, she went at it herself, and prayed. He promised her he would attend to it afterwards himself.

I have taken in thirty one on trial.—Raised $340 missionary money, and have collections to make at other places. Raised half of our Conference assessment, and will get it all I think.

To God be all the glory. Amen.

J. A. CLEMENS.

PATTERSONVILLE, September 9, 1856.

REVIVAL—ATTAKAPAS INDIANS.

I has been some time since I have said anything about the work among the Indians. I am happy to say that the work has been progressing. We now number in class thirty. Twenty of that number have professed religion, and at a two days meeting held last Saturday and Sabbath, their profession was manifested in the clearest light.—I must say I have not witnessed such displays of Divine power at any time or place before. I failed in getting help or assistance to carry on the meeting, but God was with us during the two days with power, and it resulted in three or four conversions, and four accessions. Among the number was an aged Frenchman, numbering in years seventy-two; another, a young Italian, raised a Roman Catholic, and three years from Italy.

No one could behold the joy expressed by those Indians and not feel a desire to posses that which afforded them so much happiness.

Oh Brother, there is nothing affords so much rejoicing, as to see this people—a people whose rights have been trampled on and abandoned as it were by man—praising God with a fervor of heart I may almost say unequaled by the white man, and manifesting, I may say, more stability, for where are those instances on record of a neighborhood, of say from forty to sixty inhabitants, abandoned to vice and dissipation, where an immediate and entire and permanent reformation has taken place? Here it has; not one has touched or tasted spirituous liquor since there has been preaching among them; and not one has backslidden. Although some among them have not attached themselves to the church, yet a reformation has taken place among them, and when, as they say, they can control themselves and bring themselves under the control of the Spirit, they will then join the church. With such feelings they can but be firm when they do join the church. My heart is with this people.—Pray for us that God may continue to bless us, and help us to praise him for what he has already done.

JOS. KNIGHT.

LOWER PEACH TREE CIRCUIT, Ala. Con.

We have just closed a protracted meeting of nine days continuance of great interest. Some thirty conversions and twenty two accessions.—Rarely have we ever witnessed more wonderful displays of divine power than on that occasion. The services were conducted under an arbor near Sweet Water. Before the meeting closed the consecrated plat of ground was secured by deed to the M. E. Church, South—and steps taken to build, right away, a church thereon.—Rev. Stephen Gilmore was in attendance with us. Oh, that this may prove the first fruits of the ingathering harvest.

J. B. BAIRD.

GAINSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 11, 1856.

On 3d September we closed a meeting in Gainsville which had been protracted for twelve days in the Methodist Church. Fifteen or sixteen persons were soundly converted, twelve united themselves to the church and one other has promised to do so as soon as practicable. We had truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; backsliders were reclaimed, the "hearts of the double minded were purified," the hands of sinners cleansed, and the church of God built up and established. So powerful and all pervading was the divine influence upon our town and so intense was the interest felt in spiritual things, that our house though abundantly ample on ordinary occasions, in several instances could scarcely contain the multitudes that crowded to hear the word of God. On the last night of our meeting sectarian bigotry was rivetted down, and all denominations by the grace of God mingled into one, wept and rejoiced in the hope of the glory of God.

Bro. S. Y. Ramsey was kind enough to remain with us during the meeting, we thank God for past blessings and pray for and expect more.

THOS. P. CAYMES.

HOLMESVILLE, Miss., September 1, 1856.

The good work still goes on. We have just closed a meeting in Holmesville, at which we had ten or twelve conversions and thirteen accessions, and the church was greatly revived. And notwithstanding this point has been the "fore-front of the hottest battle" between us and the "Iron Wheel," during the year, yet our church never was on a firmer basis in the town of Holmesville than it is at the present time.

We have had troublesome times on Boguechitto this season, but notwithstanding we have been continually assailed with a maliciousness sometimes akin to the spirit of the Pharisees of old, and at others with "all lying deceivableness," we are beginning to work the "Wheel" by a reverse action, and its friends begin to learn that its teeth are sharp set the wrong way. Thanks be to God that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

H. M. YOUNGBLOOD.

BLOUNTSILLE, Alabama Conference, Sept. 1, 1856.

It might be interesting to the friends of religion to learn that the Lord is reviving his work on the Blountville Circuit. On the first Sabbath in July last Brother Crump and myself commenced a protracted meeting at Blountville, which, with the assistance of other local preachers, was continued twelve days, during which time fifty-four members were received on probation. On the fourth Sabbath in July we commenced a meeting at Gwin's Cove, which continued twelve days and resulted in fifty accessions to the church.

During this year the increase of members on this circuit has been two hundred and twenty-five. The good work in many places still goes on. The members seem deeply interested. The local preachers, exhorters and leaders are at work, and from present appearances it is highly probable that the membership on this circuit will be doubled during this conference year.

The China Mission.

One of our Missionaries writes the Corresponding Secretary, Dr. Sehon, an interesting letter, dated April 10, 1856. We give extracts:

PREACHING.—Preaching the gospel we regard as our first and greatest work. Every other agency we consider as subordinate to this. In this department, we can report but four preachers at present, including our native man, Liew. As to our abilities and qualifications for the discharge of this important office, it is not for us to speak particularly. Liew continues a faithful and zealous helper. He speaks the Shanghai, and also the Mandarin, or Court dialect, with great fluency. His pulpit efforts are much above mediocrity, and we have reasons to believe his labors are telling for good upon his countrymen. He preaches every day, and sometimes twice and three times a day. His acquaintance with Christian theology is quite respectable, and his manner of presenting the truths of the gospel clear and impressive. We regard him as an invaluable treasure to the mission.

You need not be told that we have no church-house in Shanghai as yet.—Could you see and appreciate the want of one as we do, our frequent appeals on this subject, would meet your entire approbation and support, as no doubt they do. We have rented a Chinese dwelling-house, not all suited to our purpose, but the best we could procure at the time. It costs us $9 per month rent. In this house we have preaching every day during the week, and twice and three times on Sabbath. The congregations are not usually large, owing to the locality. I have built a small chapel in my yard in which a good congregation can be gathered almost any time. In this place we also have preaching two or three times a week. Brother Lamhuth has rented a room in a Chinese village some five or six miles in the country, in which he and Liew preach twice and three times a week. Thus we average between fifteen and twenty sermons every week. Had we suitable houses to preach in, our labors would be much more pleasant, and doubtless more successful. We hope to receive funds soon for buildings.

Yet we believe in giving out good books, hoping they may fall into the hands of those who can and will read them. It is our duty to sow beside all waters, and not to withhold our hand from any available means of doing good.

Our printing press has arrived, but for want of funds to finish the necessary buildings, procure type, etc., nothing as yet can be done in the way of printing books.

Thus I have briefly sketched the outlines of our work. In subsequent reports I shall enter more into particulars. Meantime, I would suggest the propriety of requesting each missionary to write you occasionally in regard to his own particular work. It is impossible that everything which you ought to know concerning the work here should be embraced in these quarterly reports. We are far removed from the seat of authority; and left, as we are, wholly to our own resources, we need your counsel and advice, which you cannot so well give unless well acquainted with the details of our operations.

Permit me now, in conclusion, to assure you and the Board of the high esteem and regard in which you are held by your missionaries in China.

The health of the missionaries is good at present. The cases of sickness which existed among us some time ago, are now recovered.

With a sincere prayer for your welfare, and kind regards to the Board, I am your brother in Christ,

W. G. E. CRNNYNGHAM.

A Triumphant Death.

Till glad I lay me down,
Thy servant, Lord, attend;
And oh my life of mercies crown
With a triumphant end.

It has been said that the most illustrious act of a man's life should be his death. And so it should. As the sun, after a day which has been overcast with clouds, frequently sets in with a clear sky, so should the sun of life. The clouds that obscure life should be dispersed in death, and amid a clear serene sky, the sun of being should go down, blessing with radiance unknown before the world which it is about to leave forever. And was it not so with the one of whom we are about to write.

MRS. MARGARET GIBSON died at Springfield, Ind., July 9, 1856. After exhausting all the remedies known to the best skill in Mobile, where she resided, her friends advised a change of climate, and undertook with her a journey to the West. But a few weeks proved the disease invincible, and amid loving friends and kindred she passed into the skies. She had known Christ from a child. In the morning of her life he was her "bright morning star." Blessed with godly parents, her infant feet were early taught the way to the cross; ere the evil days came her espousals to Christ were sealed with the blood of sprinkling. The twig, thus bent heavenward, grew that way, despite the storms which blew in an opposite direction; and being grafted into the true vine, it budded, blossomed, and bore the fruits of righteousness. In a pre-eminent degree did she illustrate the beauty and excellency of Christianity; not with show, ostentatiously by much speaking and voiced professions, but unobtrusively and quietly did her life preach Jesus and him crucified. The Methodist Church was her choice, and never did she remove the landmarks of the fathers, by treating slightly or neglecting its usages and customs. Her piety was of the primitive prayer and class-meeting type, and hence it was practical, lifeful, experimental, and not of that sickly, dead or pampered kind, frequently produced by and attended upon the ministrations of the pulpit merely. One incident may illustrate the tone of her piety and the depth of her devotion. The concert of a celebrated female vocalist was announced. Her husband procured tickets for the family, but it so happened that her prayer meeting came off upon the same evening, and notwithstanding the tickets had been purchased, she went to the house of God. Her Saviour called and that was enough. The sheep know the voice of their shepherd, and a stranger's voice will they not hear. Pleasure was secondary; religion, duty and her God were first. With her there were no songs comparable to the songs of Zion; the melody of the heart attuned to prayer and praise, was sweeter than the most exquisite strains of earthly music.

One may anticipate how she endured her long and painful illness, and how she at length fell asleep. A short time before her death she remarked, "I cannot put my finger on a spot where there is no pain," and addressing a sister who attended her, wished to know if death was not upon her. Upon being told that it was perhaps near, she said "the will of the Lord be done." Then recollecting a fond husband and dear children who were far away, she exclaimed "I may die to-night, and the ties of earth are still unbroken." It was proposed that prayer be offered that she might be able to give up all; upon which she was propped up, the prayer ascended, and ever after she said, "I give them up, they are the Lord's."

It is edifying to notice how rapidly during her illness she ascended the scale of religious experience. Every step was a victory, revealing new glories and higher joys. She requested that the sacrament be administered to her, feeling that she was about to enter upon the dark journey of death, and that her soul needed the refreshments of the Lord's table to prepare her for it. When the minister entered the room she said, "Brother, I am going home, yes home, yonder where my father is. I have grace for this affliction—I have gained the victory through Christ." The emphasis with which she repeated the last word showed whom she had trusted, and to whom she ascribed the glory. Being troubled much with that stupor which frequently precedes death, and is a presage of it, she asked those around to prayer with her, that it might be removed, and that she might retain her senses to the last. Faith prevailed and it was done. New lustre from the heavenly world was being continually shed upon the dark way before her. The end being near, she was asked where she would like to have her remains deposited. With calmness she gave direction, adding, "put upon my tomb-stone a sinner saved by grace." Her words after this were, "no doubts, no fears, no temptations;" "all the promises of God are mine and I claim them." But upon being asked if there was nothing else for which she would like to pray, after a short pause she replied, "Oh yes, I want sanctification." Then turning her eyes upward, she offered prayer ending with the words, "sanctify me throughout soul, body and spirit, and cleanse me from the least and last remains of sin." Her sister said, the answer comes, "yes said she, I have it, glory be to God." Soon after this she passed away with the praise of God upon her lips.—The day of her death was better than that of her birth. Her last moments were her brightest and happiest. Her light shined more and more unto the perfect day. The clouds which had shrouded her weary day, were gradually dispersed, and as the sun of her life went down, it burst forth with unclouded radiance, leaving a bright triumphant farewell to all below. Bereaved husband and motherless children, walk by the light thus thrown upon your pathway, and weep not, for happy, thrice happy are they who die in the Lord!

OUR NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—There has been a long pause in my scribbling propensities of late, for which no doubt your readers have been duly thankful. Some of them on seeing a certain signature, may be ready to exclaim "Monsieur Tonson come again!" but if you don't care, I don't, so I will just tell you what made me think of sending you another letter, without supposing however that the facts are new to you or your readers.

We were all in a state of profound satisfaction about matters and things in general, and those of the Publishing House in particular, when suddenly, without a word of warning, or even a cloud the bigness of a man's hand, our new Book Agent made an announcement which upset everybody's calculations, nonplussed the Book Committee, and, I am afraid, made Stevenson & Owen and Stevenson & Evans look like they were playing at "hide and seek" with each other. When conscience has the floor, every other speaker is out of order; but you may be sure that we all wished it had spoken out last spring or at the last General Conference, or, what would have been better (at this juncture,) not spoke at all until one year from next May. Of course you have heard of Brother Owen's reacceptance of the post so unexpectedly vacated, and since this "tempest in a teapot" blew over, there has been a calm; matters going on as usual. I confess to having been greatly troubled at first as to how all this would look in the eyes of the church and the world, until it occurred to me that there had not been time for half the people to learn certainly the new style of the firm, before the old one was restored; so that those persons who had persevered in directing to Stevenson & Owen, were not so much mistaken after all.

Politics are the order of the day here as every where else. A short time since, some zealous Fillmore men got up a procession with music etc., to escort Gen. Haskill from the suburbs to the Public Square, where he made an able speech in behalf of his party.—Both sides are sanguine of success, bets run high, and rowdies get drunk, while sober people look on, with no small amount of foreboding as to the future of this glorious union. May God preserve it.

Speaking of this reminds me that Bishop Pierce passed through here the other day en route for Kansas. He was looking very well, and went on his way to the seat of civil war, cheerfully and hopefully. I hope there is no danger of his coming in contact with one of the notable rifles sent out there by the Northern brother (!) to keep the peace!

Several of the churches in our city have been enjoying revivals of religion recently. Elysian Grove, a small congregation in South Nashville, has had a large accession to its membership.—Many of the conversions during the meeting which lasted some weeks, were clear and powerful, and much good seems to have been done. The congregations at McKendree church are immense. As the second year of Dr. Irwins ministration there draws to a close, the people seem more and more loth to give him up, but the Conference will no doubt be able to supply his place satisfactorily.

The number of buildings being erected in Nashville this year, is greater than during any previous one. Several elegant warehouses have gone up on the Square, while others are in process of completion, so that in four or five years so far as the surrounding buildings are concerned, it will be one of the handsomest in the union. The grounds surrounding the State House are now being graded and improved, and I hear of lots having been sold up there for private residences, which will make it one of the most beautiful parts of the city.—Notwithstanding all this however, our most inconvenient and provoking evidence of the increase of our population still exists in the scarcity of houses for rent. Strangers coming here, complain that it is almost impossible to procure one of any sort, and it seems a pity that some of the superfluous capital in the city, should not be employed for their accommodation.

I was sorry to see in one of the late papers an announcement of yellow fever in your city, and most sincerely hope that its prevalence will be neither long nor great. Our physicians here still have very little employment, but must do them the justice to say, that the common remark about their having long faces under such circumstances, is a slander in the cases of these gentlemen. They seem to be as much gratified at the absence of aches and pains as the rest of us are.

It has been raining hard, and almost constantly for four days, but we have hitherto escaped the storms which have been so destructive to the regions both North and South of us.

The river is still very low, with but a slight rise from these rains. No prospect of clearing off yet.

Your friend, CHORCHER.

MARRIAGES.

DEATHS.

Died.—In Selma, Alabama, July 25, 1856, Miss ELIZABETH STREET, in the 15th year of her life.

The deceased was a member of the Methodist Church—was a faithful and punctual scholar in the Sabbath-School, and died triumphing "in the faith" which she so early embraced. Cut down at so tender an age, full of hopes and desires to be useful, it is saddening to her bereaved parents, but she "is taken from the evil to come," and they "sorrow not, as others which have no hope." D. C. B. C.

Died.—At the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. G. Bean, in the city of Columbus on the 4th August, Brother JOHN CROSS.

He embraced religion under the ministry of Rev. George Shaeffer, in the 55th year of his age, and was upwards of 70 when he died. His son-in-law says that when death came he calmly resigned himself into the hands of God, saying to his weeping children, "I am willing to depart, weep not for me, I am ready." C. D. O.

Died.—In Jackson Parish, La., on the 21st August, 1850, ELIZA REBECCA, aged ten months and eighteen days, infant daughter of the Rev. Dabney P. and Ann Eliza Cullon.

"Earth hath no sorrows
That heaven cannot cure."

☞ Nashville Advocate please copy. D.

Died.—In West Feliciana La., on the 6th of June, 1856, Mrs. TERESA ANN CARMENA, in the 46th year of her age.

She joined the M. E. Church at fifteen, she was never able to point out the very time and place of her conversion; yet she lived in the enjoyment of religion almost from the time of her connection with the church. She was fond of religious worship, and when able to be at church her seat was never vacant. Her house was the preachers' home. She loved her Bible; it was almost the only book of her reading. During the last four years of her life she was closely confined by wasting consumption, and her sphere of usefulness was greatly limited. To her husband she gave many an earnest exhortation to meet her above. With her friends religion was the delightful theme of conversation; always gratified to have them read the Bible or sing to her one of the songs of Zion. On Sabbath days when she could have her servants about her she often went beyond her strength in reading and explaining the scriptures to them, and catechising the younger ones. Many a hair have they shed over her sleeping dust. Her strength beginning rapidly to fail, her joy become great at the thought of soon being with God. For more than twenty-four hours the soul and body were slowly parting; she asked a lady if she was dying: on being answered that she was, she replied I feel this is death, it is sweet; I have not felt so well for many years." She asked again "How long do you think I will live." She was answered—"You may live until to-morrow twelve o'clock." She replied—"I do not want to live that long." So on Sabbath morning at eight o'clock the hour when in her younger days she used so often to begin her preparations for attending divine service she hurriedly, as if in haste to depart, bade adieu to her husband and friends, breathed her last and went to spend her Sabbath in Heaven.

Several new cases of fever had been reported since the gale.

Kansas Affairs.

Washington, Sept. 12.—Later instructions have been sent to Geary and Smith, announcing the purpose of the President to employ all the military force necessary to suppress the insurrection.

No military operations are to be allowed in Kansas, except under the direction of Gen. Smith, who will permit the employment of no armed bands not regularly mustered into the service of the United States.

The Nicaraguan Minister.

Washington, Sept. 12.—It is the general impression here that the new Nicaraguan Minister will not be received.

FOREIGN ITEMS BY THE ARABIA.

New York, Sept. 13.—The London Star says that communications of an unfriendly character have passed between England and France relative to Spanish affairs.

The Star virtually admits that England will make every concession in order to secure the friendship of America in the event of a rupture with France.

Gov. Geary had arrived in the Territory.

St. Louis, Sept. 12.—Gen. Richardson had been captured by the Free State men, and liberated by Lane.

Great consternation was felt at Leavenworth in consequence of a rumor of a contemplated attack by Lane. General Smith had sent four companies of troops to protect the town.

Lane is reported still at Lawrence, with no intention of leaving his position.

St. Louis, Sept. 15.—Advices have reached us from Kansas that Judge Lecompt has released all the State prisoners on a bail of $5,000 each.

Gov. Geary has issued a proclamation commanding Gen. Smith to stop all the Missourians from coming into the Territory.

The Missourians are all leaving for home.

The Territorial militia have disbanded. Lane has promised to disband.

Capt. Whipples' company captured a party of thieves and recovered eighty horses.

A fort capable of holding a thousand men has been completed at Lawrence.

Fire in Frankfort, Ky.

Louisville, Sept. 16.—A fire took place in Frankfort on Sunday night, destroying a whole square of buildings. The loss is estimated from $25,000 to $30,000, partly covered by insurance.

Another fire occurred last night by which several buildings were destroyed. They are supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

Domestic Markets.

New York, Sept. 16.—Flour is quoted as a trifle lower. Straight State $5 90 to $6 35; Ohio, $6 45 to $6 70.

Wheat—White, $1 67 to $1 70.

Corn—Mixed, 60½c. Lard, 11½c.

Cincinnati, Sept. 16.—The Flour market is firm at $5 80 to $5 85 for good brands. Red Wheat, $1 16. Whisky, 27½c.

Later from Rio.—The bark Clara Haxall arrived at New York on the 9th inst., with advices from Rio to the 30th July. The clearances of coffee for the United States are 75,000 bags. Stock at present on hand is 80,000 bags. The coffee market exhibited more firmness, and prices had advanced a shade.

Arrival of the Barcelone.—The French steamship Barcelone, Lemaire, from Havre Aug. 21st, arrived at New York on the morning of the 8th instant. She brought eighty-nine passengers, and had to contend during the voyage with heavy westerly winds and high seas. She brought no news. During the voyage, one of the crew of the vessel not answering to the call, search was made in vain in all parts of the vessel, and the route of the ship was changed to return to the supposed place of disaster, but no discovery was made. The captain supposes it to have been a case of suicide.

Later from Havana.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP PHILADELPHIA.

The United States Mail Steamship Philadelphia, J. McGowan, Commander, from New York via Havana and Key West, arrived here Monday afternoon. Mr. H. J. Bailey, purser of the Philadelphia, has kindly furnished us with the following memoranda:

United States Mail Steamship Philadelphia, J. McGowan, Commander, left New York at 2 P. M. of the 5th inst.; made fast to the buoy off the Moro Castle at 8 A. M. of the 12th, and landed thirty-two passengers, the mails and $45,000 in specie. Having received on board the mails for New Orleans, but no passengers or freight, sailed at 9 A. M. for Key West, as that place received the California mails and passengers from San Francisco, August 20th, and sailed at 10 P. M. same day for New Orleans. The Philadelphia brings a large cargo and fifty-six passengers for this port.

In Havana much anxiety was felt on account of the non-arrival of the British mail steamers from St. Thomas and Vera Cruz, both of which were long overdue. The city was perfectly healthy, all traces of yellow fever having disappeared since the late hurricane. The Captain-General was still absent from Havana.

The "W. D. Miller" arrived at Havana on the morning of the 12th inst.

We have received by this arrival dates from Havana as late as the 12th, from which we glean the annexed items:

The Diario de la Marina copies from a paper at Sagua la Grande a long account of the destruction caused by the late gale which swept over the South. A large number of houses were destroyed and great destruction of other property, but we see no mention of the loss of life. Appended to this account is a list of the vessels lost in the bay of Sagua la Grande, among which we notice the following:

American bark Arkansas, Capt. Albel, with a cargo of sugar; bark Aquilla, Capt. Barker; bark Warden, Capt. Gill; brig Galveston; brig John Hathaway, Capt. Smith; also an American bark whose name is unknown—almost all of which are a total loss.

Besides these were also a large number of vessels from different countries. Accounts are also given from other parts of the Island and the neighboring islands, showing that the gale was very general in its visits, but nothing of any importance are contained in them.

Postal Treaty Between the United States and Canada.—We learn from a dispatch in the Baltimore Evening American, dated Washington, 10th inst., that the articles (additional to those of March, 1851,) between the Post-Office Department of the United States and the Post-Office Department of Canada, providing for the exchange of registered letters between the two countries, will go into operation on the first October next.

The first article provides: "Letters alleged to be valuable, posted at any Post-Office in the United States or its Territories, and addressed to Canada, or posted in Canada and addressed to the United States, and deliverable at any of the respective offices of exchange, to be thence conveyed to their destination, shall be registered at the office of mailing, on the application of the person posting the same, provided that the full postage chargeable thereon to destination, together with a registration fee of five cents on each letter be prepaid at such mailing office, and providing also, that such registration shall not be compulsory, and shall not render the respective Post-Office Departments of the United States or Canada, or their revenues, liable for the loss of such letters or packets, or the contents thereof."

The Charter Oak, Jr.—Mr. George Francis, of Hartford, has a young oak tree, (10 years old, 19 feet high and 12 inches in circumference near the surface of the ground,) raised from an acorn of the famous Charter Oak, which was recently blown down. This young oak, which he calls "Charter Oak, Jr.," he has presented to the Hon. I. W. Stuart, who has undertaken to transplant it, at the proper season, to the site of the old tree.

The number of deaths which occurred in New York city during the week ending on the 6th inst., is reported by the Board of Health of that city at 503, showing a decrease of 27, as compared with the previous week.

Brothers in Congress.—The election to Congress of three brothers, from different and distant States, last year attracted attention. Hon. Israel Washburn of Maine has been renominated for the fifth district of that State. Hon. Cadwallader C. Washburn of Wisconsin has also been renominated in his district, comprising some twenty-three counties. And the first district of Illinois has again presented the Hon. Elihu B. Washburn for re-election.

The Frigate Macedonian.—A dispatch from Boston, dated the 6th inst., says that the U. S. frigate Macedonian, which has been undergoing an examination for the past week, is pronounced unseaworthy, her timbers being found to be much rotted. She will have to undergo very thorough repairs to make her fit for sea.

There were 85 deaths in the city of Brooklyn during the week ending on the 7th inst., of whom 30 were infants.

Destructive Fire in Philadelphia.—Messrs. Arthur & Bonghani's patent Self Sealing Fruit Can Factory in the above named city, was burned on the morning of the 9th inst. Loss estimated at $20,000, mostly insured.

The steamship City of Baltimore, from Liverpool on the 27th ult., arrived at Philadelphia on the evening of the 10th inst. Her news has been anticipated by the arrival of the Canadian at Quebec.

The Effects of the Storm in Florida.

The Savannah Georgian has a letter dated Tallahassee, August 30th, from which we extract the following in regard to the storm:

Quite a gale is just subsiding here; it commenced yesterday evening about eight o'clock, and blew quite harihdnring the night, with heavy rain. This morning the wind increased in violence until it blew a heavy gale. At 12 o'clock, M., it began to lull, and has since gradually subsided, and now (5 o'clock, P. M.,) it is pretty well over with. The streets of Tallahassee present a melancholy appearance—large and beautiful shade trees are prostrate, several the roots are torn off, the gable of one end of the capitol blown in, some of the windows smashed, and many other buildings are slightly damaged. The most serious damage, however, is done to the beautiful shade trees—very few of which has escaped being totally demolished. No person I believe has been hurt. It is supposed that much damage has been done to the crops, and the result upon the Gulf coast it is feared has been disastrous.

The Wakulla Times, which is published at Newport, a town on the St. Marks river, a few miles from the village of St. Marks, has the following in regard to the gale in that vicinity:

We were visited on Saturday night last by a heavy gale. The wind blew fresh all Saturday and that night, from east and southeast, until Sunday morning about daybreak, when it came in from the south and continued from that direction until about half-past 11, when it veered to the southwest. During the whole of that time the water was blown from the Gulf into the Apalachee Bay, and from thence into the St. Marks and Wakulla rivers, overrunning their banks and spreading over the surrounding country, until it had risen about nine feet above high water mark, and within about ten inches of the height it reached in the gale of 1851.

The weather for two days previous indicated an approaching storm, and our citizens had made every preparation for it, consequently but little damage has been sustained by the goods in our stores and warehouses. The wharves have sustained slight damage, but can be easily and speedily repaired.

At St. Marks the wharves and one of the cotton sheds were injured, and some small out-houses, fences, etc., carried away. About 300 yards of the railroad washed up.

The schooner Hallock, at St. Marks, went ashore, and is now lying across the mouth of the bayou.

The steamer New Boston, lying about a mile above St. Marks, was not injured.

We learn that there was no damage sustained by the St. Marks lighthouse.

From Sicell Point we learn that considerable injury has been done to the cotton crop, and by the blowing down of fences.

We published, some days since, an account of the effects of the gale at St. Andrews Bay, which was furnished us by a seaman of the schooner Visitor. That account, as a matter of course, was quite vague and imperfect. From a letter which we find in the Mariana Patriot, dated St. Andrews Bay, Sept. 1st, we quote the following, in which our readers will find all the particulars:

On the night of the 30th and morning of the 31st, we were visited by the severest storm ever known in the annals of this place.

The wind blew all night and until about 9 o'clock in the morning, sweeping during the time from northeast to southwest. Breakers were seen during Saturday, breaking ten feet above some of the highest hills visible from the town side—some of these hills are not less than twenty-five feet high. In many places the water came rolling in over the narrow strip of land which separates the Bay and Gulf, in great volumes. The tide rose about nine feet above the ordinary height. It has cut away the bluff to within a few feet of many of the houses—carried away every boat and fish-house—bath-house and wharf from the beach—broken and ruined many boats.

Among the wrecked are the Black Sal, Bettie Hunter and Pete, belonging to Capt. Wynns; Old Lady and Hog Fish, belonging to J. L. L. Baker; Simon Peter, T. Godwin, Fish Hawk, Duke Hickson, and others. Among the injured are the Pelican, Zephyr, Fashion and Patsey Honey; the missing are the Odyssey, Eola and sloop Mary Lawrence. The schooner Visitor, belonging to Messrs. Yonge, Woodlin & Co., parted her cable near the Bentz Mills, and now lies about one hundred and fifty yards up in the pine woods, on the west side of the Bay, about two miles from the Mills. The Mills are but little damaged, the stack and roof being blown off; about 35,000 feet of lumber and some stocks have drifted away. No lives have been lost, nor has any one been hurt. I have not heard from East Bay.

The Madison Messenger says:

A very severe storm occurred on Saturday night and continued until noon Sunday. With the exception of one chimney, fences and trees being blown down, no damage was sustained in our town. In the country, however, we believe, much damage was done. T. L. Whitlock, Esq., we learn, had his gin house and other property destroyed, to the amount of about $1,000.

The Storm in Southern Georgia.—The Bainbridge Argus gives a deplorable account of the effect of the late storm in Bainbridge and the surrounding country. It lasted from 4 o'clock P. M. Saturday, until 3 or 4 Sunday P. M.

Nearly every street in the town was blocked up with fallen trees, and the roofs were torn off several houses, and two churches were almost totally demolished. The Argus says:

The crops in this section, we presume, are partially, if not completely destroyed. From all we could learn, through our exchanges, the crops of every species in Decatur county were better, by far, than they are in any portion of Georgia, but this storm, we fear, will place our planters on an equal footing with the farmers in Middle and Northern Georgia, where the crops have been nearly destroyed by the drought.

In an article, apparently written at a later date, the editor says:

In consequence of the recent storm, rendering the roads impassable, we presume the Thomasville Convention will be but poorly attended. Mr. McElveen, who resides eight miles east of this, in the direction of Thomasville, came into town on yesterday morning, and stated that he counted two hundred and sixty-five trees lying across the road between his residence and Bainbridge.

The crops in this county are completely ruined, from the representations made to us; and the probable damage to the county will not fall short of two hundred thousand dollars.

From Costa Rica.—We learn that President Mora has addressed a proclamation to the people of Costa Rica, enforcing upon them and the citizens of the other Central American republics the necessity of an oblivion of their past differences, and of a united and energetic resistance to the aggressions of Walker and his filibusters. This document is said to be remarkable for the lucid exposition which it gives of the causes which have enervated and retarded the people of Central America in the path of progress, and it points out the means by which they may raise themselves to the level of those who now presume upon their weakness to spoliate them of the magnificent heritage which Providence has bestowed upon them.

Singular Case of Spontaneous Combustion.—The Concordia Intelligencer, of the 12th inst., relates the following:

Mr. V. O'Bryan, of this parish, informs us that a few days ago he painted some towells with a mixture of white and black lead, linseed oil, and turpentine, for the purpose of making a waterproof covering for cotton, and during a rain he had it placed in a shed adjoining the gin house, where it had not remained two hours before it was a spontaneous flame of fire. The towells had been painted two days. Mr. O'B. says he smelled something burning some time before he discovered the fire, and had his gin stopped several times to examine the gudgeons, etc., thinking it was caused by friction, but discovering no signs of fire he examined elsewhere, and discovered the cause just in time to save the building from being consumed.

The Crops.—The extremely hot and dry weather of the last six weeks has, we fear, seriously impaired the value of the cotton crop in this section of the State. The forms are falling in great numbers. It is so late in the season, that no great fears are entertained from the caterpillar; on some plantations, they are said to have appeared, but not in sufficient numbers to injure the crop thus far. On the whole, there will be much below an average crop, both of corn and cotton, this year, in this parish; and we learn that the same may be said of the crops in DeSoto and Sabine.

Natchitoches Chronicle, 6th inst.

Lafourche Items.—The Thibodaux Minerva, of the 13th, has the following local items:

The weather has been remarkably fine for and during the entire week. The health of the country remains without change. It is now believed that we shall escape all disease this season. Our planters are preparing themselves for the sugar making season. The cane crop is improving rapidly.

A Tall Cane.—Our young friend Theophilus Haraug, Esq., presented us on Tuesday last with a matoonoth sugar cane of the ribbon species, measuring fifteen red joints. The cane was grown on his plantation, "the Choctaw farm," in this parish, at about fifty miles below Thibodaux. The cane is nearly eight feet in height, and may be considered as a fine specimen—especially for this season, one of the most unfavorable ever experienced in the sugar-growing region of Louisiana.

Recruits for Walker's Army.—The New York Sun, of the 10th, says:

Michael Flood Nagle, an Irish political exile of considerable literary and military attainments, and late adjutant of the 75th regiment N. Y. S. M., sailed yesterday in the steamship Calhoun, for Nicaragua, to join Gen. Walker. He goes, also, as the correspondent of Meagher's Irish News. He takes out some of the green blunders.

Later from Texas.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP LOUISIANA.

The steamship Louisiana, Capt. W. H. Talbot, from Indianola and Galveston September 11th, arrived here on Saturday morning last.

By the arrival of the Louisiana we have received full files of our Texas exchanges as late as due, from which we extract as follows:

Negro Insurrection.—The Galveston News, of the 11th, has a letter giving the full particulars of the recent intended insurrection among the negroes in Columbia county, from which we extract the following:

Our suspicions were aroused about two weeks ago, when a meeting of the citizens of the county was called, and a committee of investigation appointed to ferret out the whole matter and lay the facts before the people of the county for their consideration. The committee entered upon their duties and in a short time they were in full possession of the facts of a well organized and systematized plan for the murder of our entire white population, with the exception of the young ladies, who were to be taken captives and made the wives of the diabolical murderers of their parents and friends. The committee found in their possession a number of pistols, bowie-knives, guns and ammunition. Their possession of organization were adopted, and their motto, "leave not a shadow behind."

Last Saturday, the 6th inst., was the time agreed upon for the execution of their damning designs. At a late hour at night all were to make one simultaneous, desperate effort, with from two to ten apportioned to nearly every house in the county, kill all the whites, save the above exception, plunder their houses, take their horses and arms, and fight their way on to a "free state" (Mexico.)

Notwithstanding the intense excitement which moved every member of our community, and the desperate measures to which men are liable to be led on by such impending danger, to which we had been exposed by our indulgence and leniency to our slaves, we must say the people acted with more caution and deliberation than ever before characterized the action of any people under similar circumstances.

More than two hundred negroes had violated the law, the penalty of which is death. But by unanimous consent the law was withheld and their lives spared with the exception of three of the ring leaders who were, on last Friday, the 5th inst., at 2 o'clock P. M., hung in compliance with the unanimous voice of the citizens of the county.

Without exception, every Mexican in the county was implicated. They were arrested and ordered to leave the county within five days, and never again to return under the penalty of death. There is one, however, by the name of Frank, who is proven to be one of the prime movers of the affair, that was not arrested, but we hope that he may yet be, and have posted out to him such a reward as his black dued demands.

We learn from the Houston Telegraph that the Governor vetoed 25 bills passed by the Legislature during the late session. Gov. Pease must be "some pumpkins" on the veto.

The Houston Railroad.—The Telegraph has the following regarding the railroad which is being built to Galveston:

We learn by an intelligent citizen, just down from Falls county, that our railroad is gaining many friends in that section. The whole of the most intelligent population of that region seem to be fully aroused to the importance of this species of internal improvements. Liberal subscriptions are being made in aid of the extension of our railroad in that direction. The people seem convinced that the navigation of the Brazos will not do to depend on, and that railroads are their only resource. We assure our fellow-citizens of that growing part of our State, of the most cordial co-operation of our community in extending to them railroad facilities.

The San Antonio Herald, of the 6th, notices the falling of refreshing showers of rain in that neighborhood. They came in time, it is presumed, to save much loss and suffering among the cattle.

The Crops.—Accounts from all parts of the State concur in the prophecy of short crops this season, on account of the drought which has prevailed during the whole spring and summer. Some papers insist that the planters will not make enough corn to feed themselves and negroes, and that all will have to buy for seed to plant next season.

The Touro Infirmary.—This splendid institution which had its origin in the benevolence of the late Judah Touro, is now, in its perfect management and appointments, one of the most valuable establishments of its kind in the Southern country. Admirably situated with easy distance of the ship and steamboat landings, it presents peculiar advantages not possessed by any other institution in the city, while the high reputation of the faculty employed, recommend it to all classes. The director and resident physician, Dr. Joseph Bensadon, and the visiting physician, Dr. Thomas Hunt, are among the most skilful practitioners in the South, and deservedly occupy high positions in the estimation of the New Orleans public. The apartments of the institution are all spacious and airy, and the prices of board and medical attendance are regulated to suit all circumstances. The best of attention and nursing is secured to patients and no contagious disease is admitted. This establishment is well worthy the attention of our planting friends. See the advertisement of the Infirmary in another column.

Louis Napoleon's Fete Day Celebrated in the United States.—The New York Courier and Enquirer, of the 8th, says:

The fete of the French Emperor was celebrated on the 15th of August, at the settlement of the copper mines of the French company on the borders of Lake Superior, where but a few years since their Jewish only a few scattered Indian tribes. An altar was arranged in the forest, near the mouth of one of the shafts of the mine. Divine service, followed by a Te Deum, was celebrated by Rev. Louis Thiels, Catholic missionary of Eagle Harbor. Immediately afterwards he blessed the shaft, which he baptized by the name of Napoleon. A banquet and canal races followed. The tri-colored flag waved for the first time on the borders of Lake Superior, and mingled its folds with those of the American flag.

Important Arrest in Mobile.—An Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Limbo. The Mobile Tribune, of Saturday morning, has the following interesting item:

Don Vicente Hernandez de Ayala, Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary from the Republics of Venezuela and Granada, etc., etc., was yesterday arrested by Marshal Maury and Deputy Marshal Scollick, on charges of forgery and swindling. After his arrest he made an attempt to swallow forged drafts to the amount of six thousand dollars, but was prevented by a prompt squeeze on the throat by the Marshal, while Mr. Scollick drew the papers from his mouth.

He is a Spaniard, well educated, and a most accomplished swindler, and many sufferers in New Orleans will rejoice at his incarceration.

His detection and arrest, on a very slight clue, were most artistically planned and skillfully executed.

An Honorable Testimonial.—The New York Shipping List states that Capt. Champion, of the ship Victoria, (London packet,) has been presented with a massive gold medal, handsomely set in a case, by the Life-Saving Benevolent Association of that city, for rescuing, on the 13th of July last, the crew of the British bark Rose; which had become disabled by running into an iceberg nine days previous.

Later from Nassau, New Providence.—The New York Daily Times, of the 8th inst., has the following.

By the arrival of the brig Alma, from Nassau, we have dates up to Aug. 26. Capt. Brown reports Aug. 8, the American ship Colchis, from Boston, bound to New Orleans, was wrecked on the Gingerbread Ground. Cargo of dry goods, etc., saved in good condition. Aug. 23, British brig Baltic, from Ragged Island, with salt, bound to Nassau, was wrecked on the Green Cays; vessel total loss.

An Indian Story.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Intelligencer, writing from Petersburg, Kansas, a new town just laid off, tells the following touching story connected with the early history of the ground on which it is situated:

Petersburg is laid off upon the section of land granted by the Governor to Peter Cadue, at the instance of the Kickapoos, whose interpreter he had been for a number of years. It is a point remarkable for its picturesqueness and its beauty—its antique hills and heavy forests. The Missouri river sweeps it on the east, and fertile prairies roll away upon the west. On the north a vast extent of woodland reposes in perpetual shade, while on the south are flower-wreathed pinnacles and rocky dells. A spring stream passes through its center and yields an abundance of clear, cold water; while from a fissure in a rock, at the base of a declivity, there is a mineral fountain of the saline chalybeate, to which the aborigines resorted for their health. It was at this fountain that the Pawnees and the Omahas last met. It was many years ago. An old Indian has recounted to me the circumstance, and as it is an incident of historic interest with those who delve in native lore, I will relate it briefly.

Some forty years since, the Omahas and Otoes were allied as friendly bands, to resist the encroachments of their hereditary enemy, the Pawnees. Many and frequent were their battles, freely had their blood bedewed the plains, but they still were driven back by the superior prowess of their implacable and deadly foe. From the neighborhood of Lexington into Ray, from Ray into Clay, from Clay into Platte—all of which region was without a name—they were forced across to these beautiful hills, which they believed would be their final resting place. They lived here in peace for many moons. The forests and the plains supplied them with abundant game, and they were happy. They soon discovered the healing virtues of this mineral fountain.

At length sickness spread through the Pawnee nation; a mortal epidemic, which wiped them out by numbers. An Otoe maiden, who had met with and received a passion for a young Pawnee brave, through fear that he might fall a victim to the plague, bore him a pouch of the liquid antidote. He was the son of a chief who then was ill. He gave the water to his father and he was cured. The fame of its properties spread far and wide. All sought to obtain it, but none knew where. The young brave would not betray his fawn, but induced her to bring him such quantities each night, that he was soon able to destroy the pestilence and restore his people.

The craft and cunning so peculiar to the Indian character were actively aroused to discover the source of this health-giving draught. One cloudy night, as young Metella sped his bark canoe across the rapid waters, to be prompt at assignation with his faithful Thema, there followed in his wake something like a shadow. The paddle dipped with his, the movement was the same; but it made no sound, and the darkness rendered it impalpable to vision. It was the night, when, after ceaseless importunity, his Thema was to conduct him to the fountain. A stealthy tread pursued him. He heard it not, nor did he dream of the doom that the incautious girl was bringing on her people and themselves. As the sun next mounted on the brow of day, he heard his savans were in secret council. The war-cry was then sounded, the braves were drawn in battle line and all their boats were launched. He soon discovered that the secret of the fountain was revealed; and that his nation were determined to possess it. He offered himself as mediator to effect a treaty which would entitle all the tribes to use it, but the head men would not listen. They had long sought a pretext to revive the ancient feud. Ideleaper had made time irksome, and peace had grown to be a burden. Besides, they had exhausted the game around them, and desired to extend their hunting grounds.

The Otoes and the Omahas witnessed, from these heights, the hostile movement. They already had entrenched themselves by scooping deep circumvallations near the tallest summits, and into these they gathered their forces and prepared for the final conflict. They had gone until they were weary with going, and had resolved to go no farther. The Pawnees had been so long used to victory, they were resolved to be again victorious. So that, with a firm determination on each side, the battle was most desperate. It lasted four long days and nights. Hundreds were slain on both sides. The Otoes and Omahas upon their hill-tops, were cut off from food and water, and many famished. The Pawnees saw their extremity, and persevered. When wholly exhausted, the Otoes and the Omahas proposed a peace and promised to evacuate the country. The Pawnees were in a condition to readily assent, and thereupon the conflict ceased. It was the last battle between these tribes; both where whipped and both were satisfied.

But where was Thema? She could not be found. Metella looked for her in vain. The Otoes and the Omahas moved to the distant country of the Platte. The Pawnees settled upon these hills. Here they remained until the Iowas and Kickapoos came in. They then migrated beyond the Nemaha and had frequent battles with the Iowas. It was in one of these that the famous White Cloud lost an eye, and for the last of them, in violation of the strict injunctions of the Government, he was displaced from the chieftainship by Col. Vaughan; which degredation broke his brave, proud heart.

Thia finally became the country of the Kickapoos, and Peter Cadue, their interpreter, built his habitation here. It was the resort of all the friendly tribes, who came here each summer time to drink the healing waters; and for many years after, in the still hour of night, a female form of strange and wan appearance could be seen hovering around the spring, wringing her hands and giving evidences of deepest woe. She was a miserable maniac, who was unknown; but whose hopeless condition excited the commiseration of all who saw her.

At length a Pawnee Indian came to his former hunting grounds. He was received kindly by the Kickapoos. He pitched his wigmam near the spring. That night the moon shone with unusual brilliancy, and the stars were radiant as crystals. He sat beside the rock, from whose front gushed the fountain, and burying his face within his hands, seemed laden with some secret sorrow. He could not see the wild, wearied form which glided near him. As if thinking audibly, he pronounced lowly and distinctly, Thema. The form beside him started with a shriek, and fell lifeless at his feet. He was Metella and she was Thema. The next day he buried her upon the summit of the highest hill, and lingered around her grave by daylight, and by the spring at night, until one morning old Mathena, the prophet, found him lying dead where Thema died. He had him buried by the side of Thema, and Peter Cadue, with pious hands, erected a rude cross above their grave, which can be traced to this day.

There are still knives and arrow-heads of flint-stones lying round, and human bones are oftentimes exhumed by the mere action of the elements.

At this romantic place—this place of beauty, of interest, and of accident—Peter Cadue has laid out a town, and busy men are preparing to build houses, and a large saw mill will soon make the quiet hills and slumbering woods pulsy with harsh echoes. Such is progress—such the march of civilization.

The Bouquet and the Bible.

The day was a fine day, but an unexpected shower suddenly drove two or three little parties into the cottage for temporary shelter; a Bible and a bouquet of flowers lay on the table.

A shrewd-looking man, one of the company, approached the table—he was an infidel. He opened the Bible, and closed it again with a smile that was mingled with derision. He then took up the bouquet. "This suits me best," said he with an exulting air, "for it has no mysteries; I can understand it; its colors are fair and its scent delightful." Saying this he pulled a flower from the bouquet, and stuck it in his bosom.

A pause succeeded; but it was soon broken by an old gentleman, whose meek and mercy-loving face was grateful to gaze on, and whose grey hair entitled him to respect. He had heard the remark of the infidel, and felt quite anxious to counteract its influence; advancing to the table, he also took up the bouquet.

"How bounteous in this gift," said he "is the Father of Mercies." This bouquet in delightful. How delicately formed are these beautiful flowers! How rich are their varied tints, and how sweet the fragrance they inhale! But shall we forego the joy of inhaling their fragrance, and the delight of gazing upon their beauty, because we cannot explain the hidden mysteries of their existence? We know not how dry, husky, unsightly seed, when set in the ground, could start up into such glorious forms. We cannot tell how it is from the same soil such different stems should spring, and on the same flower such varied tints appear; nor know we why some of the fairest flowers should be thickly pointed with thorns. These things are mysterious; but if we wait till we can comprehend them, the flowers will fade away, for their life is short. Let us gaze, then, on their beauty and inhale their fragrance while we may."

"And why should we not," continued he, putting down the bouquet and taking up the Bible—"why should we not use the word of God in the same way? This blessed book prompts us to all that is good, warns us against everything that is evil, and, amid the darkness of this bad world, points us to a better. Mysteries it has—deep and awful mysteries—which its almighty Author alone can explain; but shall we waste our short lives brooding over them, and neglect the greater part, which is quite plain, and overlook the manifold mercies it proffers for our acceptance? While the Holy Scriptures rejrore us in error, guide us in difficulty, console us in sorrow, and support us in sickness and death, shall we undervalue or neglect them? Never, let us leave, then, the mysteries, both of providence and grace, till it shall please God to unravel them to our understanding; and in the meantime, let us, while rejoicing that God's works and words both show that he is The Wonderful," gratefully place the glowing flowers of the bouquet in our bosoms, and the consolations of the Bible in our hearts."

CRAMPTON RE-KNIGHTED.—The Anglo Saxon, a paper published in Boston, states that Mr. Crampton, the late British Minister at Washington, is to be knighted, by the express desire of the Queen. As nobody but her Majesty has the power to confer a knighthood, it is very likely that, if done at all, it will be by her wish; and as Mr. Crampton so thoroughly befogged her by his dispatches from Washington, she probably thinks it would be a very appropriate compliment to be knight him.

Missing, a Married Gentleman.

BY DR. KING.

About the year seventeen hundred and six, I knew one Mr. Howe, a sensible, well-natured man, possessed of an estate of seven or eight hundred pounds per annum. He married a young lady of a good family in the West of England; her maiden name was Mallet; she was agreeable in her person and manners, and proved a very good wife. Seven or eight years after they had been married, he rose one morning very early, and told his wife he was obliged to go to the Tower to transact some particular business. The same day, at noon, his wife received a letter from him, in which he informed her that he was under a necessity of going to Holland, and, should probably be absent three weeks or a month. He was absent from her seventeen years, during which time she neither heard from him, nor of him. The evening before he returned, while she was at supper, and with her some of her friends and relations—particularly one Dr. Rose, a physician, who had married her sister—a billet, without any name subscribed, was delivered to her, in which the writer requested the favor of her to give him a meeting in the Birdcage Walk, in St. James' Park. When she had read the billet, she tossed it to Dr. Rose, and said, laughing, "you see, brother, as old as I am, I have got a gallant." Rose, who perused the note with more attention, declared it to be Mr. Howe's handwriting. This surprised all the company, and so much affected Mrs. Howe that she fainted away. However, she soon recovered, when it was agreed that Dr. Rose and his wife, with the other gentlemen and ladies who were there at supper, should attend Mrs. Howe the next evening to the Bird-cage Walk. They had not been there more than five or six minutes, when Mr. Howe came to them; and, after saluting his friends and embracing his wife, walked home with her, and they lived together in great harmony from that time to the day of his death.

But the most curious part of my tale remains to be related. London in the only place in all Europe where a man can find a secure retreat, or remain, if he pleases, many years unknown. If he pays constantly for his lodging, for his provisions, and for whatsoever else he wants, nobody will ask a question concerning him, or inquire whence he comes, or whither he goes. When Howe left his wife, they lived in a house in Jermyn street, near St. James' Church. He went no farther then to a little street in Westminster, where he took a room, for which he paid five or six shillings a week; and changing his name, and disguising himself by wearing a black wig (for he was a fair man,) he remained in this habitation during the whole time of his absence. He had two children by his wife when he separated from her, who were both living at that time; but they both died young, in a few years after. However, during their lives, the second or third year after their father disappeared, Mrs. Howe was obliged to apply for an Act of Parliament to procure a proper settlement of her husband's estate, and a provision for herself out of it during his absence, as it was uncertain whether he was alive or dead. This act he suffered to be solicited and passed, and enjoyed the pleasure of reading the progress of it in the votes, in a little coffee-house near his lodging, which he frequented.

Upon quitting his house and family, in the manner I have mentioned, Mrs. Howe at first imegined, as she could not conceive any other cause for such an abrupt elopement, that he had contracted a large debt unknown to her, and by that means involved himself in difficulties which he could not easily surmount; and for some days she lived in continual apprehension of demands from creditors, of seizures and executions. But nothing of this kind happened; on the contrary, he not only left his estate quite free and unincumbered, but he paid the bills of every tradesman with whom he had any dealings; and upon examining his papers in due time after he was gone, proper receipts and discherges were found from all persons, whether tradesmen or others, with whom he had any manner of transactions, or money concerns. Mrs. Howe, after the death of her children, thought proper to lessen her family servants and the expenses of her housekeeping, and therefore removed from her house in Jermyn street to a little house on Brewer street, near Golden Square. Just over against her lived one Salt, a corn-chandler. About ten years after his disappearance, Mr. Howe contrived to make acquaintance with Salt; at length he acquired such a degree of intimacy with him, that he usually dined with Salt once or twice n week. From the room in which they ate, it was not difficult to look into Mrs. Howe's dining room, where she generally sat and received her company; and Salt (who believed Howe to be a bachelor,) frequeutly recommended his own wife to him as a suitable match. During the last seven years of Howe's absence, he went every Sunday to St. James' church, and used to sit in Mr. Salt's seat, where he had a view of his wife, but could not be easily seen by her.

After he returned home, he never would confess, even to his most intimate friends, what was the real cause of such a singular conduct. Apparently there was none, but whatever it was, he was certainly ashamed to own it. Dr. Rose has often said to me that he believed his brother Howe would never have returned to his wife, if the money he took with him, which was supposed to have been one or two thousand pounds, had not been spent; and he must have been a good economist, and frugal in his manner of living, otherwise his money would scarcely have held out: for I imagine he had his whole fortune by him (I mean what he carried away with him,) in money or bank bills, and daily took out of his bag, like the Spaniard in Gil Blas, what was sufficient for his expenses. Yet I have seen him, after his return, addressing his wife in the language of a bridegroom. And I have been assured by some of his most intimate friends that he treated her, during the rest of their lives, with the greatest kindness and affection.

Dr. King adds in a note that he was well acquainted with Dr. Rose, and also with Salt; that he often met them at King's Coffee-House, near Golden Square (Dr. King was an active diacohite, and Rose was of French connexions;) and that they frequently entertained him with this remarkable story: relating these and many other particulars which had escaped his memory.

Napoleon and the Woodman.

As Napoleon was riding out, attended by several officers, I was one of the party—we rode past n forest where some woodmen were cutting timber. Observing one of them singing, the Emperor, with a smile, turned round to us and said:

"Observe that man, who, though toiling hard for his daily bread, seems to be quite happy."

The woodman, observing so many persons looking at him, made a respectful bow and approached us to inquire if we had lost our way.

"No," said the Emperor, "but tell me, my honest man, what makes you so cheerful? What may you earn a day?

"Three francs, your honor."

"Three francs!" said the Emperor; "does that support you and your family? Tell me, how do you manage to do so?"

"With pleasure, your honor, if you will step a little this way. With three francs I not only keep my wife and family, but I also put money out at interest, and pay off my old debts."

"Explain yourself?"

"Willingly, your honor. I keep my wife and children—I place money out at interest by educating the latter at school, and pay off my old debts by maintaining my aged father and mother. So you see, your honor, I may well be happy."

"Excellent man," said Napoleon, "here is a Napoleon for you," tossing him the money. "Keep what you have now told me a secret. I am your Emperor, and on pain of my displeasure, I enjoin you to tell no one till you have seen my face at least a hundred times."

"Sir, it shall be so."

Napoleon turned his horse's head and rejoined us.

"The same evening, as he appeared thoughtful," General Rasp asked him if anything unpleasant had occurred that day.

"No," said the Emperor, but I met a man this morning, who, with three francs per day, told me he kept his family, placed money out at interest, and paid off his old debts. "Gentlemen," continued the Emperor, "you will please me much if any of you can tell me the meaning of what he said."

All of us were very anxious to please our monarch, and knowing that he had spoken to a woodman in the forenoon, we rode off on the following morning—and having found the woodman, asked him if he knew to whom he had spoken on the previous day.

The man said, "yes, I had the honor of talking with the Emperor."

"What did you say to him?"

"Excuse me, gentlemen, that I must not tell you."

One of the party said, "I will give you fifty Napoleons to tell me."

The man said, "No, I dare not."

"You shall have one hundred if you will oblige us," rejoined our companion.

The woodman, after pausing n minute or two, said: "Place the money in my hand, and I will tell you."

We placed it in his hand—and, after he had carefully examined every piece, he told us all that had transpired.

We rode off, and on our arrival at the place, asked to be admitted to the Emperor; when we expounded his riddel.

Napoleon, pale with anger, said:

"Bring the woodman before me, dead or alive!"

He was soon found, and ushered into the presence of his angry monarch.

"Sirrah, how have you dared to break your promise with me?"

"Sire," said the woodman, with great composure, "I have not disobeyed your commands."

"How, slave," said Napoleon, "dare you tell me a lie."

"Sire," said the woodman, "you told me I should tell no one until I had seen your face one hundred times." Then, putting his hands deliberately into his pockets, he laid the pieces of money, one by one, before the Emperor, with the heads upwards. "There, sire," continued he, "have I not seen your face one hundred times?"

Napoleon burst into a loud fit of laughter, gave him a slap in the face, called him a clever fellow, and made him captain in the artillery, where he proved himself deserving of his good fortune.

NEGRO CHILDREN IN THE SOUTH.

THE "army worm" is not more destructive to Southern crops than intestinal worms are to Southern negro children. Thousand are swept off annually by the complaint, which is not only directly fatal in many cases, but even in its milder forms is the parent of a variety of deadly diseases. Every planter, therefore, if only from motives of self-interest, should keep on hand a supply of WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE which invariably destroys these disgusting creatures and the means in which they are generated. In fact no family, North or South, should be without this safe, certain and speedy remedy.

Be particular and remember the name "Winer's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. For sale in New Orleans wholesale and retail by

A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country is healthy, the water is plenty, the water in excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Wednesday, the 1st of October.

The Institution has entered on its sixth session under the auspices of the same Principal. A sense of duty, interest and pleasure reunite his future connexion with the institution permanent and perpetual.

The institution is furnished with a large and excellent collection of maps, charts, diagrams, plates, globes, etc.

The grounds of the Seminary have been enlarged and the entire premises tastefully enclosed.

UNIFORM.

The Trustees and Principal at a meeting lately held, adopted a uniform for the following reasons:

1st. To secure economy in dress. It is impracticable to secure it otherwise.

2d. Our young ladies are of diverse pecuniary conditions, as is but to be expected where such a number are thrown together, and this diversity is published to the world by the different styles and quality of dress on all public occasions.

3d. On public occasions we have often, as well as the young ladies, been mortified to hear this diversity remarked.

4th. Without a uniform, there being no rule in the article of dress, the caprice of whim and caprice is left boundless, and the trouble of satisfying these endlessly diverse fancies in every article, is burdensome and annoying in the extreme. For the above and other good reasons, we have adopted a uniform, and commend it to our patrons and the public. It must be regarded as a law of the institution.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

HARRISON ON HARRIS.

I propose, Mr. Editor, to throw a little light on the interesting discussion in the Advocate on Motives, by referring to the following passage in Dr. Harris's Moral Philosophy, p. 412:419, where one is virtuous from a spontaneous principle of his own, he may be of a character altogether unlike to one who is virtuous in conduct after that lawgiver, armed with the irresistible power to punish and destroy, hath appeared on the side of virtue. When these two elements are complicated together, as they appear to be under the economy of our existing moral government, it may be extremely difficult to assign the precise character of our obedience. It may even very naturally be thought that the, now superadded terror will overbear the better and the more generous principle altogether, and reduce what might have been the willing services of love and liberty to the crouching servilities of bondsmen. At all events it is evident that it is only when rendered in the spirit of a free and heaven-born sacredness that they can at all be recognized as the genuine emanations of a right principle within; and they instantly degenerate into the selfish and sordid, when they are but extorted offerings, under the law and the lash of authority. Till those two elements then be disentangled, it is truly difficult to appreciate the quality of any performance which in the matter of it may be right, but which in the motive of it may differ as widely as the ecstatic delight of a seraph does from the ignoble drudgery of a slave. It is indispensable to virtue that it be done ex amore; and any thing else that bears its semblance, or passes under the name, is but low and wretched driveling. We have ever held it to be one chief recommendation of the evangelical system, that by it alone the disorderly element in question has been effectually, that by means of its leading principle, it, at one and the same time, releases us from the terror of the law and inspires us with a taste for its service; that what before we toiled and grieved at in the spirit of bondage becomes, under its influence a service of gratitude and good will; that it removes from our view those menaces and penalties, the terror of which overhung and polluted all our attempts after rectitude; and so gives space and emancipation to its disciples, for breaking forth with alacrity upon a way which may well be termed a way of new obedience. * * * Every act of the Deity, instead of coming forth as an impulse from without, is an emanation from the fountain-head of his own character. And unless there be a rule similar to this struck out in the bosom of regenerated man, and whence there may proceed the willing performances of him who deals in virtue because he delights in it; there is nought of divinity in his character; and let the offerings be what they may, which fear or force hath extorted, he is but an earth-born slave. It is a high achievement of Christianity to infuse a taste for the service of the law, while it utterly does away the terror of its penalties; and the disciple who best understands, and hath most fully imbibed its spirit, now under the operation of a principle more generous than fear, abounds in all the deeds and desires of virtue, not because virtue is his task, but because it is that pure and healthful element in which he most loves to expatiate. If it be the fear of theological moralists lest this principle should cast us loose from the authority of God, we hold," etc., etc.

It is to be considered in this question, that the union of fear and hope with love, is not the same as the unity of them; that the two former may be factors of the latter without being integral parts of it. St. John says:—"There is no fear in love, for fear hath torment; but perfect love casteth out fear." "He that feareth is not made perfect in love." As fear is thus expanded (if not excluded by it) into love by the Apostle John, so hope and faith are subordinated to it by the Apostle Paul. "And now abideth faith, hope and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity?

The beginning of the christian life is properly the forgiveness of sin; but that abolishes fear and introduces love. Our savior has illustrated this in the parable of the two debtors, by which he taught that "to whom much is forgiven the same loveth much." Fear may precede and hope may follow, but love is the prime motive of the christian life.

F. M. GRACE.

WHEN EVIL ENTREATED.—Give me, oh my God, a heart full of Christian meekness and charity, that I may willingly forget the evil I have received, and be disposed to do good to others.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.

Bishop Andrew, in detailing the particulars of his daughter's death, in a letter to the Southern Christian Advocate, gives the following touching incidents:

"Tuesday night will never be forgotten by those who were present.—Many of the neighbors came in, to each of whom she gave an affectionate charge and continued through the night to talk of dying and being with God, with unfaltering confidence, and with as much calmness and composure as though she were planning a visit to her sister.—There seemed to be no excitement at all, but everything seemed to be spoken calmly, deliberately, confidently. 'Oh!' said she, 'I have many dear friends in heaven; but the best of all is, Jesus is there, and I shall see him. Oh! I am lost in wonder at the goodness of God; to think that I have been such a poor, unfaithful Christian, and yet God blesses me so abundantly.' She sent messages to many of her absent friends, and to the class of which she was a member. She several times quoted appropriate verses of hymns: 'Oh! let us meet in heaven. Let us all meet in heaven,

In heaven above no sorrow's known,
And there's no parting there.'

"After a little while she said, with great animation,

Then round my senseless clay,
Assemble those I love;
And sing of heaven, delightful heaven,
My glorious home above.'

"Some time after, she broke out in a strain of devout exultation:

'If this be death, I soon shall be
From every pain and sorrow free;
I shall the King of glory see—
All's well, all is well!'

"She often expressed her great gratitude to God, that in his providence he had so ordered it, that I should be with her in her last moments, and also that all her sisters (except dear Octavia,) were with her; and Oh, how grateful I am, that I was permitted to hear the dying testimony of my precious child, to the power and efficacy of that gospel, which has been the solace and prop of my own soul, and which I have been trying to preach to others for nearly fifty years.

"But I may not attempt to write all the glorious and precious things which fell from the dying lips of my precious child. I shall only add a few more and close. She requested that Bishop Pierce should preach her funeral, from that beautiful text found in Rev. xiv: 13, which he did, the day following her death, in the little church where she had been in the habit of worshipping; to a deeply affected congregation; the preacher himself being so overcome by his feelings as to be scarcely able to perform his task. Surely the glory of God filled the house. Throughout her whole sickness she maintained an unshaken confidence, which never seemed to falter—not even for a moment; and a patience that knew no abatement. She suffered for hours the most excruciating agony, yet she never asked for its removal; but her constant prayer was, 'Lord help to bear it with patience.' Once, after recovering from one of her sinking spells, I was standing by her bed-side. She said, 'Pa, I thought I should have been at rest, but you know we must suffer all the will of God.' She gave directions about everything connected with her burial, and said she wished to be burried near her dear mother. 'I should like,' said she, 'to lie between my mother and step-mother,' to whom she was tenderly attached.—On being told that that place was reserved for her father; 'Well,' said she, 'bury me as near my mother as possible, for I expect to rise with her in the first resurrection."

Short Sermons.

We believe that preaching is in danger of losing its power, from a tendency on the part of preachers to succumb to a false popular taste. Let preaching be what it should be, beaten oil brought into the sanctuary, and it will not be hurried off by a weak popular clamor, into a twenty or thirty minutes' performance. The objects of preaching, the purposes to secure by it, cannot be gained by these short fancy sermons. We heartily adopt the views of the following extract from the Morning Star:

SHORT SERMONS.—The rage for thirty minute sermons, which now prevails, is wrong, and foreboding evil. Men must be kept under the influence of the truth long enough to warm up the sensibilities. But the effect of a week's devotion to the world is to paralyze and stupify the moral feelings, and it requires time as well as skill to break up the stupor and move the heart. It is easy to preach more thought in fifteen minutes than the majority will digest; for in fact they will not digest anything, unless their feelings can be excited. Thought will not stick to their intellect; the heart must be melted to receive the impression; then it will linger before the mind's eye.—Raw short sermons will not usually produce this effect upon the careless. It often requires repetition, various illustration and pungent appeal to move the heart; and this fact should never be forgotten in our decisions upon the length of sermons. They should not be so long as to exhaust the emotions, nor so short as to fail to excite them.

Errors Piled Up---Hamill and Henderson.

Mr. Editor:—I have just read a discussion with the above caption, Mr. Hamill representing the Methodist and Mr. Henderson representing the Baptist Church. To those who have heard, but not seen it, I will offer the following extracts and notices. It was occasioned by Mr Henderson publishing in a paper of which he was the Editor, a slanderous article from the Western Watchman. From this article we extract the following errors, not to say palpable falsehoods:

1. P. 4th, "The Bishops possess unlimited power over the preachers and the people."

2. P. 6th, "Let them (the Methodists) print their views and circulate their opinions (about church government,) and excommunication is the penalty at once."

3. P. 6th, "A Methodist preacher cannot publish a book that shall encourage free inquiry into Episcopacy without fear of exclusion."

4. P. 6th, "The Methodist Episcopal press is now under the control of the Bishops."

5. P. 7th, "Methodist Bishops demand all the property belonging to the Methodist Church."

6. P. 7th, "Methodist Bishops hold the deeds for every inch of ground and every Episcopal Methodist Church in the land."

7. P. 9th, "The public moneys and public buildings of the Methodist Episcopal Church are controlled by the Bishops."

These slanders Mr. Henderson endorses. On page 48 he says:

"Our Brother Hamill sadly mistakes us if he supposes we had repudiated the 'slanderous' article.

To this pile of errors and slander we shall add some more from Mr. Henderson's pen:

8. P. 96, "Methodist Episcopacy has imposed articles of faith upon the people without their consent."

9. P. 146, "Methodist Episcopacy maintains an absolute proprietorship in the churches, and assumes to establish its doctrines and discipline."

10. P. 210. "The clergy of the Methodist Episcopal church can reinstate an excluded member or preacher, over the head of the very church from which he was expelled."

10. P. 217, "The right of petition for redress of grievances is not known in the Methodist Episcopal Church."

12. P. 221, "In the Methodist Episcopal Church the church property is held and disposed of by the clergy."

If all the errors and mistakes of Mr. Henderson, with their deductions, were taken out of the book, but little would be left to make a book. But the reader must have a specimen of Hendersonian logic, as Brother Hamil justly styles it. On page 97 he says:

"The bishops hold the deeds of every inch of ground, and every Episcopal Methodist Church in the land."

Now the proof. On page 307 he says:

"Every deed, etc. is taken in the name of the Methodist Church so."

Therefore, the Bishops and the Methodist Episcopal Church are the self-same thing. This is logic of a new school, truly Hendersonian. Perhaps the reader would like to see some Hendersonian theology. Here is a bit to hand. Page 181 he says:

"The tribe of Levi owned no kind of property."

But Joshua tells us that the Levites had forty-eight cities with their suburbs.—Josh. 21:41.

Again, p. 203, he represents the Scriptures as teaching but two forms of the church—local, as the Church at Ephesus, and collective as the seven churches of Asia. Are these all the forms of the church of which the Bible speaks? Is not the universal form seen in Col. 1:18. And he, Christ, is the head of the body, the Church. If much repetition oft repeated, could gain the victory, Mr. Henderson certainly has it.

Brother Hamill has acquitted himself well, evincing a kind and Christian spirit, not as full on some side issues as might be desired, Mr. Henderson most studiously avoided giving us any comparison between the Baptist Church and the General and State Governments.—What a beautiful Republic is the Baptist Church! Look at it:

1st, It has no appellant Court.

2d, It controls liberty of conscience on the Lord's Supper.

3d, It excludes all witnesses out of its own pale.

4th, It has no general Constitution.

Now, wouldn't such be a model Republic?

We will reconstruct Brother Henderson's position on page 23: The Baptist Church is anti-Democratic and anti-Republican—and, in so far as its operation is unrestricted by modifying agencies, it is essentially and necessarily in direct antagonism with our free institutions. I had intended saying much more, but my paper is full.

It is granted that the Methodist Church is not Republican in all its features, nor any other Church, much less the Baptist Church. "The Church differs from the State in its origin, constitution and end."

Welsh Preaching.

Extract of a sermon by Rev. John Elias in the presence of 25,000 people. The effect of it was overpowering—breaking down many a proud heart.

"Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?"—Isaiah, 49:24.

Satan, what dost thou say, shall they be taken from the mighty? "No, never, never;" I will increase the darkness of their minds, the hardness of their hearts the lust of their souls, the strength of their chains, and my hold shall be made stronger. The captive shall never be delivered. I utterly despise the puny efforts of ministers."

Gabriel, thou messenger of the most high God, shall the prey be taken from the mighty? What dost thou say? "Ah! I apprehend not; I have been hovering these two days over this vast assembly, hearing the word of God, expecting to see some chain broken, some person liberated—but now, the opportunity is near over, and the multitudes are on the point of separating. Ah! there is no sigh of one being converted, and shall not have to convey the glad tidings of one sinner repenting for his sins, to the heavenly world."

What think you, ye ministers of the living God, shall the prey be taken from the mighty? "Alas, who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? We have labored in vain, and have spent our strength for nought. The Lord seemeth to hide his face from us, his arm is not stretched out. Oh we fear there is but little hope of the captives being delivered." Zion, shall the prey be taken from the mighty? And what do you say, "Ah, the Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me, I am left alone, and am childless, so that my enemies say,—This is Zion whom no man seeketh after; though I am afraid, none shall be delivered."

Praying Christian, what do you think; shall the prey be taken from the mighty? "Lord God, Thou knowest! High is thy hand, and strong is thy right hand. Oh, that thou wouldst put forth thy strength and overcome, let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee, according to the greatness of thy power, preserve thou those that are appointed to die. Though I am nearly weary in crying, yet I have a sleuder hope that the year of jubilee is at hand." And what is the mind of the Lord respecting these captives? Thus saith the Lord, even the captive of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered. Oh! delightful, there is now no doubt or hesitation respecting the liberty of the captive, it is postively declared, they shall be delivered, they shall be loved. Yea, the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.

Gems for Christian Ministers.

Seriousness in a minister is agreeable, not only to the serious but to men of all tempers.—[Paley.

For a person to leave public worship in raptures with the minister's abilities, is no proof that he has received spiritual benefit.—[A. Booth.

A sick conscience spoils the tongue of the eloquent, and makes it stammer.—[Ambrose.

You must restrain your copiousness, lest you expand it into feebleness; you must often severely chastise the inventive faculties, lest, whilst you occupy the imagination, you miss the conscience.—[R. Watson.

Never make an unprofitable visit.

The celebrated Thomas Hooker having heard the Rev. Jonathan Burr, the puritan preacher, observed,

"Surely this man will not long be out of heaven; he preaches as if he were there already."—[Brook's Puritans.

Ministers will never do much good till they begin to pull sinners out of fire.—[Sutcliff of Olney.

Human eloquence should be subservient to the word of God, and not the word of God made the slave to human eloquence.—[Austin.

If it pleased the Lord to let his faithful ministers suffer, it is because He will receive more honor by their suffering.—[Hildersam.

What is more odious than a finical, conceited, dressed up young minister, who thinks he is the mighty orator?—[Mr. Thornton's Letter to C. Winter.

Be servant-like, but not servile.—[Whitefield.

Figures are the ornaments of speech, and ornaments lose effect by being set too thick.—[Preacher's Manual.

Men had rather hear of Christ crucified for them, than be crucified for Christ.

If Christ denied innocent nature out of love to us, shall not we deny corrupt nature out of love to him.

Curious Bible Translations.

Since the exposure of Rev. Dr. Maclay of the many inconsistencies of the Bible Union of New York, quite a number of circumstances have come to light of a very curious character. We append specimens of translations proposed to be made by the risers of the Union. The reader will observe the egregious folly of the man:

John 3:12, "If I said to you the earthlies, and you did not believe how if I say to you the heavenlies, will you believe?" Phil. 2:10, "That in the name of Jesus every knee should bend of heavenlies, and of earthlies, and of infernals." Eph. 2:6, "Sit together among the heavenlies;" Eph. 6:12, "Struggle not against blood and flesh, but with the principalities, with the powers, with the worldly forces of the darkness of this age, with the spirituals of the heavenlies." Acts 4:24, "Master, thou art the God who made the heaven and the land."—Luke 2:29, "Now Master, thou lettest thy servant depart in peace." 2 Pet. 2:1, "Destructive sects, denying even the Master who purchased them." Tit. 2:9, "Exhort bondmen to be obedient to their own masters." Col. 4:1, "Lords, the just and the equal give to the servants." John 13:13, "You title me the Teacher, and the Lord, and you designate well, for I am."

1 Cor. 10:16, "Is it not a partnership of the blood of the Anointed?"

2 Cor. 13:14, "The partnership of the Holy Spirit be with you all."

Eph. 3:9, "To me, who am less than the least of all the consecrated, was this very kindness granted—to publish among the nations the incomprehensible wealth of the Anointed."

Acts 3:19, "Repent, therefore, and return in order to the obliterating of your sins."

2 Tim. 4:2, "Announce the word; be on hand conveniently (and) inconveniently."

Phil. 1:6—8, "Who, being in God's form, did not esteem the being like God a robbery—yet he divested himself—he assumed a bondsman's form—he existed in a similitude of men—and, being found in appearance as a man, he let himself down—was submissive till death—death, indeed, by a cross."

Col. 3:10, "You have put on the young man."

THE INAUGURATION OF THE FRANKLIN STATUE IN BOSTON.—The inauguration of the statue of Franklin, which occurred in Boston on the 17th inst., was truly a grand affair, surpassing in some of its most imposing details the great civic event of the introduction of the Cochituate water.

The procession, embracing nine divisions, was escorted by the First Brigade of Massachusetts Militia, including the Boston Light Artillery, the National Lancers and Light Dragoons. The procession was over two hours in passing a given point, and represented nearly every mechanical trade and manufacture. Among the special attractions was a new and beautiful locomotive and tender named Benjamin Franklin, mounted on trucks and drawn by eighteen horses; a sugar-grinding mill for Cuba, drawn by twelve horses; the House and Morse Telegraph instruments; the electric fire alarm; Franklin's old Printing Press, on which was being struck off and scattered to the crowd a fac-simile of his newspaper, dated 1723; immense structures on wheels representing school-rooms filled with scholars at the desks, and a vast number of other novel and interesting features made up one of the grandest displays ever witnessed. The Masonic Fraternity, the Firemen and Mechanics' Association and numerous other charitable societies of Boston, and Mechanic and other societies from the adjoining cities and towns, were out in full force. Also the Franklin Medal Scholars, Children of the Public Schools, etc. The procession reached the site of the statue at the west front of the City Hall, soon after 3 o'clock. Here several thousand took possession of the temporary seats and platform, while other thousands filled every standing place in the vicinity. The drapery which had hitherto concealed the statue was then raised, when it was greeted with thunders of applause. The exercises consisted of music by the band, singing by the pupils of the Public Schools, prayer by Rev. M. Hudgent, addresses by Mayor Lee, Masonic Ceremonies of Inauguration, &c.

The oration was then pronounced by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, and occupied an hour and a quarter in its delivery. It was listened to with close attention, broken only by repeated outbarts of applause.

The hymn of Old Hundred was sung by the vast audience, and a benediction by Bishop Eastburn closed the inauguration.

The number of strangers and citizens that thronged to witness the pageant, was greater than ever before seen in this city. The side-walks and balconies, the entire route of the procession, were crowded. Many buildings and streets were handsomely decorated.

NAVAL.—The New York Evening Mirror, of the 17th inst., says:

The sloop-of-war Plymouth, the practice ship for the Naval School at Annapolis, has arrived at Portsmouth from a cruise.

The steam frigate Wabash, Captain Eagle, which has taken the place of the Potomac, as the flag ship of the home squadron, Commodore Paulding, is now at anchor off the Navy Yard.

Captain Hartstein arrived at the Navy Yard yesterday, to superintend the repairs in the Resolute. Between two and three hundred mechanics and laborers have been mustered into employment in the yard during the past day or two.

THE U. S. Ship BAINBRIDGE.—The New York Times of the 17th inst. publishes the following extract from a private letter, dated Rio de Janeiro, July, 1856:

The people out here, the American citizens more particularly, are loud in their outcries against her, and demand that she be sent off the station. We feel outraged and insulted by her presence, mainly on account of some things of a shocking nature which have lately come to light, and some which have passed in this and other places out here before the eyes of all—the vessel is consequently shunned, and is a "bye-word" amongst the various squadrons, and here in Rio and everywhere else she has been.

There is such strong and general feeling against the vessel, so many strange and outrageous stories circulating regarding her, that she is decidedly "under a cloud" out here, and we, as citizens of the United States, actually pray that she may soon be relieved from the station.

It seems the vessel has been sent home by the Commodore, and arrived at Norfolk a few days since, and we understand that a court martial will be convened, giving a full expose of the matters referred to in the foregoing extract.

A NOVEL ENTERPRISE.—The Norfolk Argus of the 16th inst. has the following notice of an enterprise proposed near that city:

Mr. Raymond Thomassy, a French gentleman of character and intelligence, arrived in our city on Saturday, and intends to apply for the use of low lands on the sea shore, as near Norfolk as convenient, for the purpose of establishing an extensive salt factory, this important article of commerce to be made by solar evaporation, and with the aid of winds. Mr. Thomassy is entrusted with official commissions in relation to salt works in Italy and the French West Indies. By adopting the plan proposed for making salt, immense quantities can be produced in our vicinity, and the cost per bushel will be only two to three cents for a superior merchantable article.

DEATH OF REAR-ADMIRAL SIR JOHN ROSS, C. B.—The English papers announce the death of Rear-Admiral Sir John Ross, the celebrated Arctic navigator. He was in his 80th year. The gallant Arctic voyager entered the navy as far back as 1786, and during the late war was constantly engaged actively. His most important services were rendered in the Arctic regions, where in 1818 he proceeded alone with Sir W. E. Parry. He was afterwards, from May, 1829, until October, 1833, employed in the Victory steamer on a fresh expedition to the Arctic regions. During the late war Sir John Ross, in three different actions, was thirteen times wounded, in consideration of his services he was presented by the Patriotic Society with a sword valued at £100; and, for services performed by him in the Baltic, he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Swedish Order of the Sword. He was also a Knight of several other foreign Orders.

The steamship Atlantic from Liverpool on the 3d inst., arrived at New York on the 15th. The news by this steamer has been anticipated by the arrival of the Arabia at Halifax.

FIVE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARABIA AT HALIFAX.

The Royal Mail Steamship Arabia, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool, arrived at Halifax on the morning of the 13th inst. She left Liverpool on Thursday, the 4th inst. at 11.30 A. M., and has thus made the run in a little over 8½ days; notwithstanding a detention of several hours off the port on account of fog.

The Collins steamship Atlantic left Liverpool at 11 A. M. on Wednesday, the 3d inst., with 123 passengers for New York.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Philadelphia, arrived at Liverpool on the 3d inst.

At the mouth of the Channel, on the 5th inst., the Arabia passed the American ship Dirigo, bound in.

England.

The news from this country is quite meagre; the following is all we can find of an interesting nature:

The London Star says: "It need not any longer be concealed that the Governments of France and England, that is to say, Louis Napoleon and Lord Palmerston, assume confidential terms with respect to to have passed between them of anything but a preliminary character. We may as well state that our opinion has found its way to the other side of the Atlantic, that England is ready to make every concession in order to obtain the friendship of the United States, and that this determination has been come to in the event of a rupture with France. This improved tone of the London journals is interpreted in this sense, and the New York Herald makes much of the topic. We have hitherto hesitated to say so because these are matters of great importance which should not be paraded merely for the sake of raising public excitement, but as the Paris correspondents of our own press now begin to talk so much about the matter, reserve must be put aside, and the public should be instructed that, while there may be, in reality, no danger, it is always a serious thing to have one foreign policy under the direction of a premier like Palmerston."

The Star, further says: "A contemporary announces that the Central American difficulty has been solved satisfactorily by a Convention between Honduras and Great Britain. Good news may bear repetition, but then it ought to be news. The satisfactory settlement alluded to, of this at one time threatening question, was announced five weeks since.

France.

The health of the Emperor of the French undergoes much discussion. That the Emperor has some malady of a dangerous character may be inferred, but its exact nature is concealed from the public.

Spain.

The Spanish Government has not yet published its decrees dissolving the Cortes and fixing a new election. There is still remains a subject of discussion. At the latest dates Lisbon was tranquil, but circumstances had occurred to show that the late riot was essentially political in its scarcer.

Italy.

In Italy discontent is spreading. Alarm is manifested in Naples in consequence of the now ascertained movement of the Muratist party. This party has been circulating a programme or proclamation at Naples with secrecy and activity.

Australia.

The ship Kent, from Melbourne, arrived off Dartmouth on Tuesday afternoon, with eighty-two thousand ounces of gold, and dates to the 10th of June. Trade is satisfactory. Gold is quoted at £3 17s. 6d., per ounce.

THE LATEST.

LONDON, Wednesday Morning.—The campaign projected by the Russians against the Circassians is indefinitely postponed.

The Times is officially authorized to declare that a report to the effect that the Portuguese Government had applied to the British for a squadron on the occasion of the recent riots at Lisbon, is destitute of foundation.

The Persian Ambassador at Paris is to proceed to London to terminate the Anglo-Persian disputes, offering full satisfaction to England on condition that Mr. Murray be recalled.

The Times has another leader on Mr. Marcy's proposal respecting merchant ships in time of war.

The Post estimates the cost of the war with Russia at eighty millions pounds, and recommends that an annual sum be applied to converting personal annuities into terminable ones.

The Cotton Trade.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday Evening, August 26.—The cotton trade, its condition at the present moment, and its future prospects, call for the serious attention, not only to those engaged in the trade, but every individual interested in the prosperity of this country. We say so advisedly, for all will admit the magnitude of the trade itself, and the wide-spread influence that it exercises not only at home, but in our commercial relations with the whole world. The increase in it has been so rapid that it is within the recollection of many when the annual consumption of the raw material was a mere trifle, nay, if we will only look back to the year 1841, we find the consumption to have been only about one-half of what it is now. We may, therefore, be excused if we place before our readers a few statistics of the present stock and probable supply to meet the growing consumption. All we desire is to render a plain indisputable statement, so that all may know as clear as figures can show, what are the prospects of the trade. Statistics are sought after eagerly—sought after, and strange to say, ridiculed—and stranger still, followed in spite of the ridicule—laughed at in public, yet in private checked over most carefully, and secretly acted upon, sneered at for the mere love of contradiction, yet quietly guided and influenced by the solid truth that there is no better guide at hand.

In the first place we find by the general brokers' Price Current of 22d August, the total stock in Liverpool was 735,700 bales; but it is generally admitted that at least 40,000 bales have been forwarded from the quay direct into the country, and not included in the brokers' returns made weekly, we shall therefore deduct this amount, and of course add it to our estimate of consumption. For the import to the close of the year we shall estimate the quantity at sea, 40,000 bales; to ship by 1st September of old crop, 30,000 bales; and of the new crop to arrive prior to 31st of December, 180,000 bales; making a total of 250,000 bales of American to receive to 31st December. And for other descriptions we shall take it at the same as last year, which will approximate near enough for our purpose. Say:

Total stock 22d August	735,700
Import, American	250,000
Other kinds	281,000
Total supply	1,217,000

As to consumption and export we find that adding, as we before stated, 40,000 bales to the brokers' estimate, the total outgoings for the first thirty-four weeks of the year reach 1,568,500 bales, and in the same proportion for the remaining eighteen weeks of the year will take 830,380 bales, reducing the stock on the 31st December, 1850, to 386,620 bales, against 428,810 bales on the 31st December, 1855.

Now, the question arises, are we correct in surmising that the trade will require for the rest of the year in proportion with the past. We believe that we are rather below than above the mark, for new machinery is being weekly set in motion, and the trade in Manchester is so profitable at the present time, that there can be little doubt the consumption now going forward is as great as at any time in the history of the trade. To justify us also in this estimate, we may state, what is admitted on all hands, that spinners hold very small stocks at the mills, and that, therefore, their supplies must be drawn from this market. We have thus far confined our attention to the supply and demand for this year out—we will now look forward to the year 1857; and, first, let us ask as to the probability of the amount required for our consumption. We have peace with all the world; we have the world as our customers; and if we are favored with a favorable gathering in our harvest, we shall have a well-fed, busy population at home to clothe. The number of new mills now building is, perhaps, larger than ever known—so much so, that there is an estimate very generally made that these new mills will require as much as 4,000 bales of cotton per week.

This, added to our present large consumption, will swell the requirements of the trade of this country to at least 45,000 bales per week. Surely, we may ask, where is the supply to come from? Can we expect another crop in the United States of 3,500,000? We shall require 3,700,000, and even that will leave us with a smaller stock at the end of 1857 than at the close of this year. We may turn to India, and ask for a supply from thence. Bread is giving us less rather than an increase. Egypt may furnish us with a few bags more, but it is to the United States alone that we can look for any hope of supply. Truly consumption has outstripped production, and machinery is constructed faster than the raw material can be produced to keep it in motion. No wonder the trade are so anxious to hear of favorable reports of the cotton crop, for they well know the effect of bad weather, insects, bad picking season, or an early frost, all of which the crop is endangered by. The trade require an enormous quantity to keep prices moderate, and it remains to be seen whether their requirements will be supplied. We have seen that the large crop of this year has failed to maintain the stade on a par with last year. What will be the result if any accident to the growing crop?

A wise man being asked how old he was, replied, "I am in health;" and being asked how rich he was, said, "I am not in debt."

Later from Central and South America.

The steamship George Law, from Aspinwall on the 6th inst., arrived at New York on the 14th.

By this arrival we have received Aspinwall and Panama papers to the 3d Sept., from which we extract the following items:

The Legislature and Gubernatorial Election.

The Panama Star and Herald says:

The Legislature met yesterday, all the members, we learn, being present. They will probably be some days in deciding who is to fill the Government chair.

Sr. Calvo has now 4,775 votes of a majority in the State; but the Diaz party are the strongest in the Assembly, and it is therefore probable that the latter will be elected.

The supporters of Diaz have publicly given notice that the Cabrera party (Calvo) will not, if elected, be allowed to take his seat, in which case there will, very likely be a collision, and a general row among the two parties.

Sr. Mariano Arosemena has been elected President pro tem. of the Assembly; Sr. Urrutia Anino, Vice-President; Sr. Figueroa, Designado; Sr. Mateo Iturralde, Secretary.

If they should have a fight we hope they will have

The Presidential Succession.

The same paper says:

The vote for President on Sunday last in the city stood thus: For Thos. C. Mosquera 54, for M. Murillo Toto 18. The election was held very quietly.

The Flag Ship Independence.

We learn from the Panama Star that the United States ship-of-war Independence, bearing the broad pennant of Commodore Merwin, reached that port on the morning of the 31st ultimo, having made the passage up from Callao in the remarkable short time of fourteen days. Annexed is a list of her officers:

Commodore, Wm. Merwin. Lieutenants, T. B. Hunger, Albert N. Smith, D. A. McDermit, James A. Green, J. W. Hester, W. P. McCan. Fleet Surgeon, W. S. W. Hutchenegger. Purser, Lewis Warrington. Passed Assistant Surgeon, F. M. Gennell. Chaplain, Fitch W. Taylor. Master, Trevett Abbott. Marine Officer, Captain Addison Garland. Second Lieutenant Alban N. Baker. Midshipman, T. O. Selridge, J. N. Miller, J. M. Stribbling. Carpenter, George W. Flint. Sailmaker, James R. Childs.

From Nicaragua.

The Royal West India Mail steamer Dee arrived at Aspinwall on the 21st ult., from Graytown, with dates to th 18th inst.

The following rumors were current at Greytown, but must be received with great caution:

Guatemala is said to be advancing with four thousand men under Carrera, and Costa Rica has notified her intention of again trying her fortune under the same commander. Illvas still holds his position at Leon with seven hundred men, and is fortifying his outposts. If deserters are to be believed, Walker's position at the present is very critical to say the least. The harsh measures he has adopted towards the wifes fighting with him has rendered him distasteful to them as a commander. Provisions and money were both scarce at Granada. Walker tried a senior officer of the name of Tallaya, a Nicaraguan, for treason, and shot him; he belonged to the Rivas party.

South America.

We learn from the Panama Star that the Panama Mail steamship Bolivia, Capt. Henry Wyld, arrived at that port on the 21st ult., bringing dates from Valparaiso to the 1st, and from Callao to the 11th.

The news from the Coast has little or no interest, being more barren than usual.

In Chili the elections were going on, but so far there had only been one vote against the return of D. M. Montt as President of the Republic.

It has been decreed that all merchandise introduced from the Argentine Republic, and deposited in the Valparaiso Custom House, after the 10th of May, is to be exempt from duty, as expressed in the new treaty.

The treaty of friendship and commerce with Sardinia has been concluded.

A project to construct a railroad from Conception to Tulcahuman by Luis Cousino was about being submitted to Congress. The works on the Valparaiso railroad are actively going on.

The Republic is very tranquil. Business is not brisk, arrivals being limited; prices generally steady.

Peru.

It may be said that political agitation is the normal state of that Republic. The National Convention prolongs its session without any success; the country is far from satisfied with its constitutional labors, and Government has not gained popularity by the provisory state it has already maintained during nineteen months.

Government was considerably alarmed on account of the Peruvian refugees' famored expedition, which, it is said they were preparing in Chile, and which had lately acquired a semblance of reality, the Peruvian Minister, Senor Zegarra, having sent from Valparaiso the steamer Fosfore with dispatches to his Government, stating that Generals Echinique, Lafuente and others had sailed to the Peruvian coasts in order to head the reaction which was to take place there. This announcement may have given rise to some troubles, the more to be regretted as these gentlemen are still in Valparaiso, safe from the dangerous projects attributed to them. This steamer will carry to foreign parts the news of the consequences of such an information, as also the results of Deputy Cavero's attempt to arraign the Minister of Finance before the National Convention.

From Africa and Iquique we have the following commercial advices:

Commercial operations during this month (July) have been extensive. The market has been well stocked with merchandise by the last importations, and considerable sales have taken place. Besides this, all fears of disturbance in Bolivia had ceased, and speculators had acquired great confidence.

Bolivia.

Nothing new has occurred in this Republic. There has been a rich discovery of gold diggings in the river Choquemata, which were beginning to produce some sensation in the country. We have not had further details, but we will be careful to reproduce whatever may be known on the subject. The country was in a tranquil state.

IMPORTANT ARREST.—A man calling himself Chas. Wise was arrested at Cairo, Ill., and was brought to town to-day charged with having taken off two negroes belonging to James Mollaston, Esq. When arrested the negroes were with him, he representing himself as their master. Wise and the negroes were committed to jail.

MRS. Antoinette Wilson was arrested, charged with aiding the slaves to escape, and was committed for trial. We understand there are others suspected, and that in all probability they will be detected and brought to justice. [Baton Rouge Gazette, 21st.

THE SIX NEW STEAM FRIGATES.—The following are the whereabouts of the six new steam frigates: The U. S. steamer Wabash has arrived at New York, after a successful trip. The Merrimac is on her way to England. The Colorado and Roanoke are at Norfolk, the Minnesota at Philadelphia, and the Niagara at New York. The Wabash and Merrimac are the only ones in commission. The rest are afloat and in the process of completion.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—On this subject the Claiborne Advertiser says:

Within the last few days we have been blessed with a few partial showers, only enough to settle the dust. A severe drought has prevailed here for the last month, and ruinous indeed has been its effect upon the cotton crop of the parish. Up the 10th or 15th of August the prospect was bright for the best cotton crop ever produced in this section of country, but the protracted drought has blasted all of our hopes in this respect; and we now learn that the crop of the parish has been cut off at least one-half of what it bid fair to be at one time. The top bolls have all fallen off and cotton is now done for this season.

ODD FELLOWS.—The Grand Lodge of the United States assembled at Baltimore yesterday, and presented a full representation. The Grand Sire, William Ellison, Esq., of Massachusetts, being absent on account of sickness, George W. Race, Esq., of Louisiana, the Deputy Grand Sire, presided. We noticed among those present James L. Ridgely, Esq., the efficient Grand Secretary, whose services seem to be highly appreciated. The prominent business of this day is the election of officers of the Order, who do not take their seats until next year. The question of marching the Encampments with the Lodges, it is understood does not meet with much favor. The reports as to the condition of the Order, and especially in regard to the benevolent and educational features of the institution, are stated to have been very favorable and highly cheering to the members. [National Intelligencer, 16th.

It is related of Dr. Franklin that when he was last in London, he was walking one day with a pair of spectacles on belonging to a friend. He kept them on, pretending they would help his eyes. Passing along, a porter ran against him. "D——n your spectacles!" said the coarse fellow; whereupon the Doctor, laughing heartily, said: "There, my friend, you see what I said was true, for if I had not had the spectacles on, he would have d——d my eyes."

HAVE YOU ANY MISSIONARY MONEY?—Preachers who have made collections will confer an immense benefit upon the Treasury by sending the money in at once, or if they expect to see the P. E. shortly by paying to him, to be credited on the missionary draft. The last instalments are yet to be met, and it is desirable to pay them out of the collections of the year, without borrowing anymore.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE OF BATON ROUGE.—Professors Magruder and Potter are a sufficient guarantee for the sound instruction and healthy discipline of this school. The object aimed at in its organization was the "establishment of an Institution in which students can be prepared for any grade they may wish to assume in college."

It numbered during the last year over sixty students. Its seventh Ay in October.

COME TO CHRIST.

Have you sins, or have you none?—If you have, whither should you go, but to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world? Have you souls, or have you none? If you have, whither should you go but to the Saviour of souls? Is there a life to come, or is there not? If there is, whither should you go but to him, who only hath the words of eternal life? Is there a wrath to come, or is there not? If there is, whither should you go but to him, who only can deliver from the wrath to come? And will he not receive you? If he yielded himself into the hands of them that sought his life, will he hide himself from the hearts of them that seek his mercy? If he was willing to be taken by the hands of violence, is he not much more willing to be taken by the hands of faith? He that died for thy sins, will he cast thee off for thine infirmities? O! come, come, come!—I charge you come—I beseech you come—come, and he will give you life. Come, and he'll give you rest. Come, and he will receive you. Knock, and he will open to you. Look to him, and be will save you.—Did ever any come to him for a cure, and go away—without it? Thou wouldst find something in thyself; but thou findst nothing—but what thou hast reason to be ashamed of; but let not that hinder, but further thy coming.—Come as thou art; come poor, come needy, come naked, come empty, come wretched, only come, only believe; his heart his free, his arms are open; 'tis his joy and his crown to receive thee. If thou art willing, he never was otherwise.—[J. Mason.

REMOVAL.—Rev. F. G. Ferguson states that his address hereafter will be Tuskegee, Alabama.

The blood of Christ, which satisfied the justice of God, may satisfy the conscience of an awakened sinner.

We may know what Christ hath done for us, by what he hath done in us.

REVIVAL TEST.

This week we publish a number of notices of Revivals. Plodding orthodoxies who seldom have either "excitements" or revivals, may probably ask, "but are they all of the genuine sort?" A friend suggests a test which he applies when passing through a region that has been "blessed with a glorious revival." What evidences are the new members giving of improvement in the culture of their intellectual powers or moral affections? Or do they take a mole-eyed view of duty, and believe that the work of the Spirit has been consummated by the act of their conversion? What number of the Christian Advocate has been subscribed for?

When the young converts are called upon to pray; when their names are put upon the class; a copy of the Bible, Mr. Wesley's sermons and a Methodist Discipline are put in their hands; when they are told that God requires them to give at least one tenth of their annual incomes towards the support of Missions and the cause of Christ, there is a reasonable ground of hope that they will, in time, make good Methodists, and the people and his Master.

A generation of Methodists are now beginning to exist—shall it be a strong or a feeble? Whatever the Methodist Church is worth revivals are worth, for in them she lives, moves and has her being. And in proportion as revivals are improved the church will improve. Unfortunately many of our preachers think that trying to impress cold wax is better than stamping it warm. Dear Brother if God has given you seals to your ministry, see to it that upon inspection of the last day they bear all the lines of the image of your Lord.

CORNER-STONE ADDRESS.

The sixth speech of a series of nine, which were made by the Rev. C. K. Marshall, on laying the corner-stone at Centenary. His speeches suggest to the hearer the saying of Kepler, that that there are as many comets as fish in the sea. As soon think to report a camp-meeting or a Fourth of July oration. May there ever be men of this sort about. The speech given a few weeks since was one of the preliminaries—this is the one that brought the silver, as the strong wind brings down the ripe mast—$23,000. The paragraphs we give are characteristic of the address as printed:

Could archangels obtain a furlough from heavenly engagements, they might be ambitious of filling the office of Teachers, here in the very place deemed by many inferior to their rank and claims.

The obligation to educate the world's young nature is, by the great masses gracefully conceded, and with surprising facility effaced from the catalogue of daily duties. And yet, no higher calling, no more dignified office, no profession or pursuit of equal or comparable importance, is known among us. But there must be many strides of progress made in virtue by the public, and much more light poured into its vision before the masses will be able, fairly able, to rise to the ability of such appreciation.

How little the listless thousands know of the acquirements, the self-sacrifice, the industry, the multifarious studies, the daily care, the watchful love, that compose the character of the true Teacher.

I make a broad distinction between the philanthropic Teacher and the coarse school master who follows the calling from a sheer love of tyrannizing over somebody—who esteems his wig a crown, his ferrule a sceptre, the rickety old chair he disgraces a throne, and the school he masters his empire. There he rules and forrules—there he issues his decrees in tones as caustic as if his heart were filled with nitric acid. There he ceremoniously performs the task of at once defrauding the untaught pupils and robbing their deceived and thoughtless parents, who vainly imagine that a school master is necessarily a SCHOOL TEACHER.

I also distinguish between the school keeper and the true Teacher. Many parents never perceive the difference till after the pupil has lost some years of the best part of his life, and some neither know it nor regard it at all. He fulfills all their wishes, it like a good oily drone, he can only manage to keep the children in. So that the pupils are kept from outright quarrelling, and the school keeper keeps so many hours in the day, little do they care how they while away the weary hours together. And thousands of unworthy women who deplore the ill-fortune that made them mothers, thank their stars for the wonderful good luck that provided them a dry nurse in the character of a school keeper!

I would not deem such false coin worthy to brush the shoes of the capable, hearty, honest, intelligent and persevering teacher—the maker of greatness—the moulder of manly character—the author of boundless happiness to the fathers and mothers of christendom.

Such a teacher is among the greatest of men. He is the fit companion of Senators and Sovereigns, and without his offices there had been neither the one nor the other. We esteem and honor him, because he has learned to value and love the young mind and heart, and comprehends its ability of endlessly unfolding its astonishing powers. To him, the young pupil is a priceless and a glorious being. He penetrates the depths of his nature further than others.—He is, consequently, able to comprehend its many sided powers, seize its secret springs and rouse them to harmonious and useful activity. He understands its assailable points—knows its tender susceptibilities, and is prepared to stereotype them into forms of grace and power, and prepare the youth for the battle of life. Such a Teacher is a Christian Philanthropist.

NOTICE.—There will be a camp-meeting at Black Jack, six miles North of the White Sulphur Springs, Cattahoola Parish, La., commencing the 24th day of October. The preachers, both itinerant and local, and the preachers generally, are affectionately invited to attend.

R. PARVIN, P. C.

Christ may have an interest in us, though we may not be able to see our interest in him.

He that thinks he hath no need of Christ hath too high thoughts of himself; he that thinks Christ cannot help him hath too low thoughts of Christ.

REVIVALS.

BUTLER CIRCUIT, Alabama Conference, Sept. 10.

It will be gratifying to the friends of Zion to know that the Great Bishop and Shepherd of Souls has visited his people on this work. The cloud of the Divine presence spreads along the skies and "hangs o'er all the thirsty land." The salvation of God is come out of Zion.—At New Hope we commenced a protracted meeting under very unfavorable auspices, it being just on the eve of the August election, but, notwithstanding the excitement, the minds of the people were turned to religion, the congregation large and orderly, and the result of the meeting was about twelve happy conversions and fifteen accessions to the church. During the year this society has had about thirty additions. They have a flourishing Sabbath-School conducted principally by a couple of devoted sisters, who seem to be engaged heart and hand in the work. Will not some of our enlightened and warm-hearted sisters follow their noble example? The Lord help and urge them on. At Ebenezer our protracted meeting meeting continued eleven days, embracing the fourth and fifth Sundays in August. It seemed to be a set time to favor Zion. The church already had her armor on, all prepared for battle. The religious interest manifested was intense and general. Mourners crowded to the altar for prayer at almost every opportunity, and ever and anon the shout of heaven-born souls, the loud hallelujahs of the people of God, and the sweet songs of Zion, all mingling together to fill the air with heavenly music. Numbers professed having faith in Christ, and sixty-one were added to the church.

Here too we have a flourishing Sabbath-School of about fifty scholars. One of the teachers who also has charge of the every day school in the neighborhood, professed religion during the meeting and went immediately to work among his pupils, many of whom were happily converted and received into the church. What a glorious thing for the church if all our teachers were thorough, holy Christians.

I attribute much of the success of these meetings to the happy influence exerted by the Sabbath Schools. O that both preachers and people were fully alive to this great church interest. Save the cross of Christ, the church has no wider field for usefulness than opens in this department. Through this instrumentality we can have access to children and young people by hundreds, whom we can reach in no other way; and all who love the Lord Jesus Christ ought to be active in developing this mighty machinery of salvation.

GABRIEL HAWKINS.

SHARON DISTRICT, Mississippi Conference.

With gratitude to the great head of the church, I announce through the Advocate, a gracious revival of the work of God on almost every circuit in my District.

The Greensboro circuit especially has been blessed, some seventy five souls have recently been converted to God on that circuit. Starkville circuit is prospering much. We had twenty seven conversions at the third quarterly meeting for that circuit, twenty were added to the church.

Carthage camp-meeting just closed was a season of refreshing. fifteen were added to the church, a number converted and the people of God greatly revived. The camp-meeting for Sharon and Camden circuits was fruitful in good, many precious souls found favor with God. The Canton circuit was recently blessed with a gracious revival at Pearl River Academy.

On the Bankstone circuit some interesting revivals have occurred. I am not able to give particulars. On the Attala circuit there is in many respects a decided improvement though the work of conversion has not been so general. The mission to Robinson's Plantations has been greatly blessed.

I leave home to day to hold a sacramental meeting among the colored people of this charge. There is a general improvement throughout the district, a decided increase I think will be reported in every charge, except perhaps from Vernon and Livingston. The excellent and valuable Brother in charge of this work labours under disadvantages. The people of his charge most of them leave home during the summer months and do not return until it is so late that he does not have the same opportunity to hold protracted meetings and make special efforts that other Brothers have; though under his faithful administration the work is in a healthy condition. Pray for us.

Your Brother in Christ,

H. T. HARRIS.

RANKIN COUNTY, Miss. Con. September 10.

We began a meeting at Andrew Chapel near Rev. J. Y. Parker's in Rankin county, on Saturday before the fifth Sabbath of last month. I have never seen a more precious work of grace, all things considered. Up to Thursday evening we had twenty five conversions and twenty four joined our church. I heard that seventeen professed religion on Friday. When I left twenty three weeping penitents were at the altar for prayer. The meeting was to close on Sabbath evening last. I suppose between fifty and sixty were converted. An educated deaf mute came forward and was satisfied that his sins were pardoned. He felt his load of guilt removed.

Bro. Jaynes, Alford, Harris, Collins, Carr, Parker, Claylaml and wife, and in one word the lovers of Jesus were diligent and abundantly successful in their Divine Master's cause. Eternity alone must tell the good done at this blessed meeting.

GEO. W. STEWART.

WATERPROOF, Louisiana Conference.

Our meeting at Waterproof which commenced September 6th and will close to-day at 11 o'clock, has resulted up to this time in twenty three conversions and the same number of accessions to the church. We are pushing the battle throughout the district to the utmost of our ability. All of our preachers are alive to the work and are in the work fully.

N. A. CRAVENS.

CROCKET, Texas.

Dry weather, very dry season, bad crops, religion is reviving on this circuit. We are having glorious times, a great many conversions and accessions to the church.

JOHN. POWELL.

HARRISONBURG CIRCUIT, La. Con. Sept. 13.

We commenced a series of protracted meetings five weeks since, which had its desired effect. We commenced our first meeting at Black Jack, under very gloomy circumstances, which resulted in the conversion of thirty-one souls, and the accessions of forty to the M. E. Church. We had visiting brethren with us part of the time. Brothers J. Riley, a local preacher, Uriah Whatley and Uriah Riley, who labored with zeal. The meeting continued four days. Our third quarterly meeting resulted in the conversion of eight souls and the accession of eighteen to the church. Our Presiding Elder being present labored faithfully. The meeting continued four days.

We held a protracted meeting at our new church, which has been erected this year near Chickasaw, that resulted in the conversion of twenty-one souls and the accession of eighteen to the church. The meeting continued four days. Brothers T. White and J. F. Scurlock from the Chicot Circuit, and Brother E. W. Yaney, a local preacher, also U. Whatley and U. Riley, were present and labored faithfully. We have just closed a meeting on Front Circuit, which resulted in the conversion of thirteen, and several accessions to the church. Many are shouting the praises of God that hath power on earth to forgive sins. We protracted this meeting four days. The good Lord has blessed us abundantly, and is still sending his blessings. We have taken in 192 members on probation; this year 81 converted; 40 of this number are young. We have three flourishing Sabbath-Schools, and others in view. May the Lord continue his blessings in reviving his work throughout the Louisiana Conference.

ROBERT PARVIN.

WESTVILLE, Mississippi Conference.

For long years great spiritual dearth has prevailed here. Iniquity hath greatly abounded, and the love of many, nearly all, waxed cold. Almost the entire membership of the church had dwindled down to a mere handful.—Class and prayer meetings were wholly neglected; indeed there were not enough of praying members on the circuit to constitute a prayer meeting—that is, not an old fashioned Methodist prayer meeting. There were none to lead and but few to join in singing; and those that would bear any part seemed to be afflicted with weak lungs, bronchitis, or something of the kind—at any rate they made but little noise, either in singing or praying. Weakness of voice, I believe, is incident to a backslidden state.

Round after round was performed without any marked difference in the state of affairs. Again and again the watcher cast an anxious look towards the horizon. The heavens were as brass, and the earth a parched desert. The fountains were dried up, and raging thirst consumed the inhabitants, who were seeking to draw water from wells of carnal pleasure. But look again! There ariseth a little cloud alike unto a man's hand. It increases in size; it overspreads the heavens; there are a few drops; a shower; and then it pours a mighty torrent. The face of nature is changed, being clothed with verdure and beauty.

Old Santer church, so highly honored in the days of other years, was first to receive the vivifying showers. The fourth week in August, we commenced a meeting there which lasted four days and resulted in the renewal of the whole church and the conversion of several precious souls. Three joined the church.

Our third quarterly meeting was held at Skitla, lasted four days, and was a great blessing to the church, though there were no accessions or conversions. Last Friday we commenced a meeting at Mount Zion, which continued six days, and resulted in the most wonderful displays of divine power that I ever witnessed. The house was filled with the divine glory, and the whole congregation was awed into reverence, and moved to tears and sobs. The backsliders were reclaimed, the lukewarm revived, the whole church wonderfully blessed. Never this side of the eternal city, do I expect to witness a brighter manifestation of the divine glory, than was there displayed. Many said, "we have never seen it after this fashion before." For want of ministerial aid, we were compelled to suspend operations until our physical energies shall be revived, but not without first enlisting into the service of Christ and the church sixteen new recruits, making in all thirty four accessions this year.

R. B. WHITTINGTON.

NORTH WARREN CIRCUIT, Miss. Con. Sept. 15.

This leaves us in reasonable health, we have a good work on all this circuit now in progress. Good bye.

Yours, etc.,

J. NICHOLSON.

RAYMOND AND SPRING RIDGE STATION, Mississippi Conference, Sept. 19.

On last Sabbath we closed a protracted meeting at Spring Ridge. There were between sixty and seventy conversions, and with scarcely an exception they were as clear and powerful as I ever witnessed. The accession to the church was eighty one whites and fifty four blacks. Of the whites a very large proportion was composed of men of families, and among the most influential of that community. Were I to stop here in presenting the benefits of our meeting, the people of my charge would regard me as having omitted at least half. For years past the church has not only been in a state of lukewarmness, but, alas, there have been divisions among them, while that whole community has been convulsed with strifes, and in some instances, enmity beyond the hope of reconciliation.—Every effort that has heretofore been made to reconcile the various contending parties, in and out of the church has proved entirely unavailing. Now the church is not only revived, but united in brotherly love, and if there is enmity still existing between any two individuals of that community, I know not who they are. In the language (modified) of a gentleman, who is one of the happy fruits of our revival, "weapons of death have been exchanged for bibles and hymnbooks;" nor can the man be found who would presume to attribute this happy change to any other influence than (under God) that of our revival. I cannot close this already too long notice without expressing my obligation to my Father, to Bro. Drako, P. E., to Bro. Crawford, Baptist, and several other brethren for their efficient services. Bro. Drake excelled himself, and labored as few Presiding Elders are accustomed to do.

Yours truly,

J. S. LIGHT.

GEORGETOWN CIRCUIT, Miss. Con. Sept. 19.

On the 30th of August we began a meeting at Glanna's school house, which lasted four days and resulted in seventeen conversions, and twelve accessions to the church. Here we had no church, some of the people had never heard a Methodist preach.

Much of the good done here, no doubt, is attributable to the labors of a lay brother in a Sabbath-School, which he got up and had been carrying on for months. We held a six days meeting at Bethesda. The first two days of the time our prospects were gloomy. The third day a young lady was converted. The effect was powerful on the congregation. We dispensed with preaching and called for mourners. Many came to the altar and cried for mercy. Seven or eight were converted and one sanctified. On the fourth day they crowded the altar and a number soon found peace in believing in Christ. In all twenty eight were converted, two sanctified, and nineteen added to the church. The local preachers, official brethren, and private members did their duty nobly.

L. ERCANBRACK.

HUMANITY IS NOT CHRISTIANITY.—True Christianity always includes humanity; but the latter may and often does exist without the former. Good natural qualities, and justice and kindness toward mankind, are often confounded with the spiritual graces and piety toward God required by the Scriptures. There is much truth in the following rather expressive argument:

"There is a tendency is some quarters, to substitute philanthropy for piety, instead of penetrating it with and governing it by piety; to put kindness for holiness, and give a religion of humanity, charity, liberality, etc., with God left out. It is no religion at all.—It is a bold moralism, developing rapidly into Anti-Christ. It affects to abolish the eternal distinction between morality and religion, and then since the only hope of holding fast the Christian element, in popular moral movements, lies in clearly distinguishing between the religious and the moral, it gives us a vapid and strengthless moralism, with the religious element entirely emptied out, and insists that this is all we need. Philanthropy that does not grow out of piety is worth nothing."

Christ satisfied God to the uttermost, and therefore can save sinners to the uttermost.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

ROBINSON'S PLANTATION, Miss. Con. Sept. 16.

The mission to Robinson's plantation is one of the most interesting appointments in the bounds of Sharon district. This kind-hearted gentlemen is determined to afford his servants every suitable opportunity to make their "calling and election sure." The missionary is sent by the Conference to his negroes only, and is promptly and liberally paid without any tax upon the missionary society.

On last Saturday and Sunday it was determined to have all the servants from four plantations, assembled at one place and have two days preaching, the sacraments administered, etc., etc. I reached the place and preached Saturday night. On Sunday morning at 9 o'clock the large congregation was assembled in a beautiful grove, whose ample arrangements had been made to seat them and make every one comfortable. The missionary (Bro. J. S. Harris) spent sometime in catechizing his charge. They answered with great promptness. After this we had a prayer meeting. At 11 o'clock I preached again to the most attentive and orderly colored congregation, I think, I ever saw. Sermon over and prayer, I then proceeded to examine the candidates for Baptism, seventeen adults, I believe, five were baptized at once by affusion. We then adjourned for dinner. After dinner I baptized eleven adults by immersion, and administered the sacrament of the Lords Supper to some fifty or sixty communicants, and concluded the exercises of the day by baptizing twenty seven children.

The work of God has prospered greatly in this charge during the year. Quite a number have been converted and added to the church. It would have moved the heart of any one to see the grateful appreciation of religious privilege manifested on this occasion by all present. The absent master, mistress, and their children, were severally remembered in the prayers of their servants. And there in the true christian spirit the chief steward and the several managers, were remembered in the prayers of plons, faithful, humble servants.

Mr. Culhm, (chief steward,) and the several managers on the plantation were present and participated in the exercises and cheerfully contributed all that was proper to make the occasion one of pleasure and profit to the souls under their care.

The history of this mission proves that where the master does his part nobly and the managers are the right sort of men, that good can be done with the negroes as well as the white people.

H. J. HARRIS, P. E.

SECOND GERMAN MISSION, New Orleans.

At our quarterly meeting on last Sabbath the 21st. Twelve women, seven men, and six young persons joined the church. Nearly all of them had been converted during the week previous.

J. M. HOFER, P. C.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON, England, July 26, 1856.

It was a most beautiful, warm, sunny day on which we drove into Stratford-on-Avon, the quiet and quaint old village. I did not realize that this was indeed the spot where Shakspeare once lived, and that through these identical streets he had walked, and that here he had married and died. To my mind Shakspeare had only been an intellect without any body or heart. I had never thought of him as ever living or dying, and it was therefore all the more difficult for me to picture him in flesh and blood, walking as other men through the very places that my eyes were now resting on. But when once the idea had gained room it took full possession of me, and every corner was haunted—and yet the church and his father's house and the little Avon, are all that we can be sure are the same that they were nearly three hundred years ago. Our first pilgrimage was to his birth place. I was greatly disappointed, I confess, although I knew the house was that of a farmer, and that it must be rude, as even king's palaces were then compared to our erections; yet I was not prepared for the low, small house, with its humble aspect. Only two rooms, one now shown, the remainder of the house, which was originally large and lofty for the age, with the gardens attached, is now rented out and has been much altered, and the gardens are all gone. A Shakspeare Committee, who have bought the place, are about to restore the entire house to its old condition, as shown by a print taken before any changes had been made. They wish to purchase all the adjoining property that the house may be entirely isolated, and then enclosed in a mammoth glass case, hoping in this way to preserve it from fire and damp and wind. Is it not a queer idea? The front of the house is like those of Warwick; oak beams with plaster between; there are two small windows in the second story over which is a conspicuous sign-board, informing you that "this is the house in which the immortal Shakspeare was born." Below there is a small wooden door divided into two, and a large open window with a hanging shelf. At this window a watcher used to stand. Think of that. The room we enter is a small, low, whitewashed paved kitchen apparently—with the flags all broken and uneven, and the walls very rough, although scrupulously white.—Next you go into a small ante-chamber as it were, where there is an enormous fire-place, having an arm chair in it, and into this chair I crept and looked up the great black chimney, wondering if ever the poet had sat on the same spot in the summer time, and thinking it very possible, for it was such a quiet and cool sung hiding place where one would never be looked for, although all the time in sight—but enough of such foolish dreaming.

We stop before a little window to write our names, and then mount the stairs—little worn, narrow, modern steps, reminding me of those in grandma's house—and the next movement we are in the birth-chamber. How low the ceiling is—we can all touch it without any other effort than raising the arm, and the heavy beams that support it—and then the small-paned and small-sized windows—they look strong to our New World eyes. There is not a spot in all the room, either on ceiling, door, window or wall, which is not black with names—in many places names upon names, until none could be distinguished. On a little cracked window pane is Sir Walter Scott's autograph, now almost effaced by the scribblings of common names over it and on the wall were Byron's name and Washington Irving's, and many others almost as renowned, all of which are long covered up. You may be sure that we did not add our names to this innumerable list, for might we not in so doing be helping to cover up some "name known to fame?"—Some years ago a very mean trick was played in this room. A party of three or four ladies (by their dress) went into the room accompanied by the old woman, after talking a little they persuaded her to go down stairs, as she must be tired, and they would follow in a few moments; and so they did, but the time the poor old thing went up stairs, she found to her sorrow that one of this party, in all probability a disguised man, had broken out and carried off a piece of the oak beam in the chimney about a foot in length. Since then no one is allowed there alone. And at Ann Hathaway's cottage a similar or rather worse depredation was committed—nothing less than the leaf of record of births and marriages in the family Bible having been torn out—and I am sorry to say by a party of Americans. So foolish a thing too, for it never could be shown, as the name would convict them of theft, and to the world it was invaluable, as by this they traced their relation to Shakspeare's wife.

We did not go to Anne Hathaway's cottage, much as it would have gratified us to have been walking along the same road which the young lover, (for he was only eighteen) trod so eagerly on his visits to his lady-love. Our strength had been severely taxed already, and we could not walk the three miles necessary to go there and back.

Our next expedition was to the church, half a mile away, and this is an object of the greatest interest, for here the dust of Shakspeare lies, and here he used to worship. no doubt often strolled after the service was over in the pleasant summer evenings up and down the banks of the Avon which here runs close to the church walls. A beautiful lawn, sloping down to the river's edge surrounds the church, and a magnificent avenue of linden trees, their branches reaching and meeting overhead leads to the entrance. The church is small but ancient in style, and must be large enough for the place, as there are only three or four thousand inhabitants. But it lacked in the interior the time-stained appearance necessary to lead one's imagination completely astray, and we walked up with only a glance at the edifice to see that which has made it world-renowned, the tomb. A piece of matting was lying on the flagging, and we were standing on it looking at the monument fastened against the wall, when one of our party asked "where does the body lie?" "Here" was the answer, and we stepped hastily back with a feeling of sacrilege as the matting was rolled away, and I found that I had been standing on his very grave. Here we read the lines so often quoted and which have been sufficient to secure his bones lying in peace. I need not repeat them.

The clerk told us that some years ago the Sexton in digging a grave near by, accidentally broke into the side of Shakspeare's, but remembering the malediction he only peeped in and saw the bones and skull, but dared touch nothing. His wife and daughter and son-in-law he near him with inscriptions in quaintly lettered Old English over them. This last effigy resting on a cushion (which at the first glance makes you think he is in a pulpit,) represents him as a large-framed and hearty man, but the head and face are utterly unlike our preconceived notions of him. The forehead, though high enough, is not what that which the busts give him, and is far broader and rounder—the temples are very full—and the chin large and round—the chin very massive, and the nose large indeed. If this be correct, (as they say it is, asserting that it is copied after a cast taken after death) he must have been a man very fond of all extra comforts, given to eating and drinking—in short one in whom the animal balanced the spiritual nature. I was shocked to all the truth, and could not believe at first, but the plaster cast of the effigy shown in the vestry has been examined by many eminent men, Chantrey, the sculptor, among them, and he says it bears every mark of being modelled exactly after the face of a corpse, as one side of the muscles are greatly relaxed, etc. So after this I must believe, and it is sad to blot out all the noble-browed, long-haired and spiritualized Shakspeares we have seen, and substitute this round-faced, ale-drinking, roast-beef Englishman. Still the head is very fine and the more you look at it the more you forget (and forgive) the lower part of the face, and see only the wonderful man of genius before you. One remarkable thing about the head is the great distance back the ears are placed—very low and very far back, as you never see ears now-a-days. This effigy was once colored after life, the eyes a briget hazel, the hair and beard auburn: and the dress was a black sleeveless gown over a scarlet doublet; but now it is all dead white.

The clerk took out of the same spot the long, narrow, brass-edged and clasped books of register in which his baptism and burial are recorded. The ink of some was dim and the writing cramped, but still I could read it, with what feelings I leave you to imagine. How old must be the church of which these books are—over three hundred years old. Shakspeare's own house is not here now, but you are shown the site of it—also the Grammar School to which he went, but above all other places you feel that this is the "Church of the Holy Trinity" is most filled with associations and remembrances of him. And the Avon too, seems to be whispering of him as it glides placidly, just as it did in his time.

Driving from Stratford-on-Avon, we rode through Charlcote, the grounds of Sir Thomas Lacy, made famous by having taken up Shakspeare and some of his youthful companions for hunting his deer. The deer, or their descendants rather, are still to be seen, and the park is most beautiful—grand old trees such as we have in America and the rich English verdure which I wish we had, and a wide extent of country with the lineantlers of deer rising in the distance—and no underbrush whatever. Can you fill up this outline and picture an old English Park? The house we did not see nor did we enter a most picturesque little church at the end, but we carried away most delightful recollections of the grand old trees many of which have stood there since Shakspeare's own time and some were doubtless old and venerable trees even then. One more stop and we shall be in London. We cannot pass through Oxford without spending a few hours in her colleges where so many famous men have studied, so in my next letter you may expect an account of what we saw there. In speaking of Shakspeare's church I forgot to tell you an anecdote connected with the tomb of an old friend of his which first attracted our attention from the resemblance in the dress of the effigy to that of a monk. He was an old miser named John Cromlie who asked ten per cent, and who often had teazed Shakspeare for his epitaph. At last Shakspeare repeated the following lines which so offended the old man that he never spoke to Shakspeare again.

"Ten in a hundred lies buried here,
A hundred to ten his soul is not saved,
If any ask 'who lies in this tomb?'
Oh, oh, says the devil, 'tis my John o'Cromie."

To Secretaries of Conferences.

Mr. Editor:—Please publish the resolution of the General Conference of 1854, in the following words:

Resolved, That the Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are instructed to require their Secretaries to procure and keep for the use of the Conference the Journals of the General Conference as they now are, or may be hereafter published.

The fall and winter sessions of our Conferences are now fast approaching, and it is important to a satisfactory administration that both the Conferences and the presiding officers have ready access as well to the instruction and decisions of the General Conferences as to the Discipline itself; therefore the Journals should be in possession of the proper officer, and always present with the records of the Annual Conference. All these records can be gotten at Nashville or either of our Depositories, and should be procured by the ensuing session, if they have not been before.

Very respectfully,

JNO. EARLY.

DEATHS.

Died—At the residence of her father, in Channenuggee, Ala., on the 5th of September, ANNA SUSAN, eldest daughter of the Rev. Wm. H. and Anna S. Ellison, aged 19 years.

OBITUARY.

Amiable, lovely and pious, she was an object of endeared affection to her numerous relatives and friends who keenly feel her loss in every circle of social life. She calmly contemplated the transition from death to life, from the cares of earth to the unspeakable bliss of heaven. Long associated with us in the Sunday-School as a pupil and teacher, it is right and proper that we should give a suitable expression of our feelings in this sad bereavement, therefore

Resolved, That in the death of Miss Anna S. Ellison, the Channenuggee Sunday School has lost a most faithful member and efficient teacher.

Resolved, That while we bow submissively to this sad dispensation of Providence, "we sorrow not as those without hope."

Resolved, That as a Sunday-School we sympathize most tenderly with the stricken parents and bereaved family.

Resolved, That as a token of our high esteem and respect, we will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

A. E. FIELD,
V. L. DRIVER,

Died—Very suddenly and unexpectedly, on the 20th ult., Mrs. ELIZABETH, consort of Wm. F. Freeman, of Anderson county, Texas.

The deceased was the daughter of Willis and Martha Davis, and was born on the 23d December, 1808, in Tuscaloosa county, Alabama. She was married in 1846, and was converted and joined the Methodist Church the same year. She emigrated with her husband to Texas in the fall of 1850, where she again associated herself with the people of God and remained in communion until death. She named and blessed her babe but a few hours old, sweetly shouted the praises of her Lord, and without a groan or struggle, but with a smile illuminating her features, "she fell asleep." Four little children are left motherless, a husband in gloom and many friends sadly bereft.

COTTON FACTORY IN LOUISIANA—RAILROADS.

We clip the following from the Mansfield (DeSoto parish) Columbian, of the 13th, with unusual satisfaction:

We are gratified to learn that some of our most wealthy and enterprising citizens have in contemplation the immediate establishment of a large cotton factory in or near Mansfield. One gentleman proposed to take stock to the amount of fifteen thousand dollars, other proposed stockholders range from two to ten thousand. From the spirit already manifested in the enterprise we can see no good reason why it should not succeed. We look forward with no little interest to the time when from stronger developments we may be able to speak more definitely upon this interesting topic, but by all means gentlemen, roll on the good work, and we promise you the little mite we can contribute.

We trust the praiseworthy effort above referred to will be attended with unbounded success. If started right, conducted right, and carried on with skill, industry and economy, proportioned in equal degrees, it cannot fail to succeed. And that very success will crown the projectors of the enterprise with a nobler wreath than any and all the politicians of the parish ever won on a partisan field—for they will have proved themselves the real benefactors of their section, as well as of the State at large, besides setting an example which, if widely followed, will redound more to the advantage and consequent business enfranchisement of the South from the thraldom of commercial dependence, than any and everything else combined.

We, of the South, need never hope for actual independence until we become manufacturers as well as producers. We must fabricate as well as grow, in order that we may sell as much and buy as little as possible. There is no earthly reason why the cotton growing States should not manufacture every article of coarse clothing they require, instead of sending the raw material to Lowell and Manchester, paying all its expenses to those places, and then buying it back in its wrought state, paying the profits of its fabrication and the expenses of its return. No solvent reason exists why we should longer persist in this suicidal policy. Therefore, we hail with lively satisfaction every effort that opens up a prospect that our people are awakening to a practical sense of their own interests. Let our friends in Mansfield put in successful operation and keep in successful operation one extensive cotton factory, and they will have accomplished more actual good than any dozen Southern Rights State Conventions that ever have been held, with their reams of resolutions, full of "sound and fury signifying nothing," and their hundreds of speeches signifying less, if such an expression be deemed allowable.

We must bring the cotton mills to the cotton fields—not send the products of the cotton fields to cotton mills, situated three and six thousand miles distant, as we now do—if we would prosper, grow wealthy and powerful, and come up to the measure of affluence and splendor the dad of nature manifestly designed this section of the United States to enjoy. Massachusetts amasses her annual millions of dollars of profits from the manufacture of cotton and its incidents. Great Britain amasses her annual millions of pounds sterling of profits from precisely the same sources. Both the countries named make more money from the manufacture of slave grown cotton than do the slave holders themselves. This proposition, we take it, will not be controverted by any intelligent man. Is it not about time we should endeavor to save a portion of these profits among ourselves? We think so; and we are glad our De Soto friends are of the same opinion.

Here, we will take the liberty of giving our friends in Mansfield a little bit of useful advice. It is this: Wherever cotton factories have failed in the South, the cause has been distinctly traceable: First, the requisite skill has not been employed. Second, the indispensable virtue of perseverance has been lacking. Third, because profits did not immediately flow in, the projectors of a new and untried business became disposed to throw it up in disgust. And, lastly, a sufficient amount of stock has not been subscribed to and paid in promptly, to place the enterprise upon such an extended footing as would enable it to command success. The projectors of the Mansfield factory must bear these facts in mind if they would succeed. They must employ skill, practice perseverance, not be in a hurry about the profits, and supply an adequate capital to put the project fairly under way. If they do all this, there can be no doubt as to the ultimate triumph of their undertaking.

Railroads and manufactories are what the South most wants to enable her to complete her high destiny. We are rejoiced that one portion of our own State is aroused to the importance of these two necessities. In the Columbian of the same date, from which the foregoing extract is taken, a railroad article appears, the reproduction of which affords us much gratification:

THE RAILROAD SPIRIT AROUSED.—The repeated failures of Red River to supply the wants of the people of North Louisiana, in their appropriate line of trade, have at length had the effect to arouse the dormant energies of our planters and capitalists and spur them on to something like action in the matter of railroad enterprise; and their thoughts have finally assumed a palpable shape in the form of a call for a Railroad Convention, as will appear by reference to another column of our paper. All begin to see the necessity of combined action in order to save the entire planting and commercial interest from complete ruin; and if Pineland Depot can only and soundly demolish Avenue of trade, Red River, will soon have the effect to fully arouse this people from the old fogy notion that, as their fathers did so must they do, they say, let it become a bed of sand as soon as possible, and only bring their products themselves, and until our people put their shoulders to the wheel their hopes in heaven will all end in nothing.

The call contemplates the holding of a convention at Natchitoches, composed of delegates from all parts of North Louisiana to adopt measures to continue the Opelousas road from Washington via Natchitoches and Mansfield to Shreveport. With a little of that spirit of enterprise and liberality which so distinguishes us as a people, the object can be easily accomplished. The lands granted by Congress along the route will, of themselves, be almost sufficient to pay the cost of construction, so soon as they can be brought into market, and the immense appreciation of property along the road will more than compensate our planters and people for the contribution they may be called upon to make, not to mention the saving in the matter of freight and the great convenience of such a public work.

We wish all success to this important enterprise and shall direct our humble efforts toward its completion. Fondly cherishing the hope that no obstacles will be thrown in the way of its progress, with the feelings of delight we look forward to that not distant day when the snort of the iron horse shall resound through our fertile fields, as it comes to gather in the teeming crops of the husbandman and bear his wealth on the wings of the wind to the great marts of commerce—when Mansfield shall be but a suburb of New Orleans!

FIRES AT FRANKFORT, KY.—One whole square of buildings were destroyed in this city on the night of the 14th instant. Loss $30,000, partially insured. There was another fire the same night, during which several other buildings were burned. Loss not ascertained. These fires were supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

DEATH OF A PROMINENT LAWYER.—Hon. W. W. Irwin, a prominent lawyer, formerly Mayor of Pittsburg, Pa., member of Congress, and charge d'Affaires to Denmark, during Tyler's administration, died in Pittsburg on the 15th instant.

KANSAS MEETING IN MOBILE.—There was a Kansas meeting in Mobile on Friday night last. It was a very respectable meeting in point of numbers, and several distinguished gentleman made speeches. Resolutions were adopted recommending the appointment of a committee to solicit subscriptions for the purpose of sending a company to Kansas. A committee of four was accordingly appointed. Very little excitement was manifested.

☞ For the benefit of the invalid portion of our community, we extract the following from the Almanac of Dr. C. M. Jackson, proprietor of HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, hoping it may induce a trial of them:

J. C. NILES says:

SHEFFIELD, Ill., March 19, 1855.

I expect to sell great quantities of your Bitters this year. Many of my customers speak very highly of its good qualities; having proved itself most an excellent Fever and Ague preventative, a great purifier of the blood, and the very best thing on record to aid digestion and create a good natural appetite. In short, I am sure it is one of the very best medicines known for family use; being safe and pleasant for any one to take.

C. L. D. CROCKWELL says:

ANIMOSA, Iowa, May 1, 1855.

The Bitters give unbounded satisfaction to all that have used them, and I do and can always recommend them to all that are afflicted. They have cured many cases of Dyspepsia, some of them where hundreds of dollars have been spent for remedies which afforded no relief, and were considered incurable until they used the Bitters. See advertisement. se27 1m

☞ A Word to the Ladies.—In recommending to your use Dr. J. Hostetter's Celebrated Stomach Bitters, it is but justice to state, that, as a stimulant to the system, in imparting strength and vigor, preparatory to periodical stages, which are oft times attended with much pain and trouble, we know of no preparation more happily adapted to all afflictions consequent upon this cause, and for Pramps in the stomach, cholera morbus, and all ailments arising from over indulgence in the fruits, vegetables, ice creams, etc., etc., it is a certain and almost instantaneous remedy, and no family should be without it. Directions for use on the bottle. Sold by druggists and dealers generally. se27 1t

☞ We are gratified to announce to our readers a Chemical Pill, the which see advertisement in our columns, from that justly celebrated physician and chemist, Dr. J. C. Ayer. His Cherry Pectoral, everywhere known as the best remedy ever placed to the public for Coughs, etc., has prepared them to expect that any thing from the laboratory would be worthy of attention. As no one medicine is more universally taken than a Physical Pill, the public will be glad to know of one from such a trustworthy source. We happen to know and can assure them that this article has intrinsic merits, fully equal to any compound that has ever issued from his Cincinnatus, and consequently is well worth a trial whenever such a medicine becomes necessary.—Racine Com. FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE INDIAN AT QUEBEC.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The Liverpool and Montreal screw steamship Indian, from Liverpool on the 10th, has arrived at Quebec. Her advices are four days later than those by the Asia.

The Canada arrived out at Liverpool on the 7th inst., the Africa on the 8th, and the Anglo Saxon on the 9th.

Commercial Intelligence.

Our Liverpool correspondent quotes the Cotton market as having closed firm without any change in quotations.

The sales of the three days preceding the departure of the steamer amounted to 25,000 bales, of which 4,000 were taken on speculation, and 2,500 for export.

The market was steady, and though holders offered freely, they showed no disposition to press sales.

Our advices from Manchester are favorable. Broadstuffs have declined, and the market closed very dull.

All quantities of flour have declined from 1s. to 2s., and there is very little speculative inquiry. Baltimore and Philadelphia, 29s. to 31s. Ohio, 31s. to 33s.

Wheat, generally, has declined from 1d. to 4d. Old Red is quoted at 8s. 6d. New Red, 9s. to 9s. 3d. Old White, 8s. 9d. to 9s. 9d. New White, 10s. to 10s. 3d. Corn closed dull at a further decline of 1d. Yellow and Mixed, 31s. to 31s. 6d. White, 32s. to 33s.

Provisions are generally unchanged, and the market closed quiet. Bacon is steady.

The Money market is unchanged. Consols for money are quoted at 94.

The weather has been favorable for crops, and the harvest prospects are very fair.

The Indian brings no political news of importance.

Domestic Markets.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Flour is firm. Wheat firm. White quoted at $1 54. Mixed Corn 65. Mess Pork $20 50. Whisky 37c.

CINCINNATI, September 23.—Flour $5 75 to $5 90. Whisky 29c. Mess Pork $18 75.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 23.—The river continues to fall.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 19.—Gov. Geary delivered his inaugural address at Lecompton, on the 11th inst. He deprecates the continuance of strife, caused by the interference of the citizens of other States; promises justice to all, irrespective of party, and expects obedience to the laws of the Legislature until their repeal.

He has issued a proclamation disbanding the Volunteer Militia and commanding all armed bands to disperse or quit the territory.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 20.—Our Kansas advices are to the 15th. Fifty Pro-slavery men under Robinson had a fight on the 13th, at Grasshopper Falls with a body of Free-soilers. They captured the horses and provisions of the abolitionists. On the next day Robinson's command was attacked by 200 Free-soilers under Harvey, and two hours hard fighting ensued, in which 12 Abolitionists and 3 Pro-slavery men were killed, after which Harvey proposed an armistice of thirty days, which proposition was accepted by Robinson.

It is reported that a force of 2,500 Missourians are before Franklin with a determination to reduce the town.

The advance guard had had a skirmish with the Free-soilers, and a battle was expected soon.

The Free-soilers under Harvey had been captured by a body of dragoons.

Domestic Markets.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Flour is dull. State is quoted at $5 20 to $6 25. Ohio, $6 20 to $6 40. Wheat declining. Corn—Yellow, 67 to 70c. Mess Pork buoyant at $20 to $20 50. Whisky is firm at 37c.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Flour has declined. Wheat is drooping and prices are irregular. Corn lower. Mixed is quoted at 65c. Spirits of Turpentine unchanged. Rosin quiet. Rice quiet. Freights are improving.

Steamboat Sunk.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 22.—The steamer Western sunk yesterday about twenty miles below this place, at Allen's Wood-Yard. The water is up to the pilot house. The passengers, crew and books were all saved. Part of the snag run up and broke the steam pipe.

SOUTH-WEST PASS, Sept. 22.—Bark Sarah Bridge, hence for Havre, has returned in distress, leaking. She was cleared by Jenkins, Williams & Co., on the 13th inst.

Talk on Change.—Cotton.

The chief topic Tuesday was the weather. The fine, bracing atmosphere was the subject of remark—the general opinion being that the late storm had not extended far in the interior, and that we shall not have any accounts of damage or losses to record. Possibly it is rather too early to think about frost, even in the most northerly part of the cotton-growing region. There is great activity on our streets; our builders and others of the mechanical arts appear to be very busily engaged; the repairing and furbishing of stores and dwellings keeps a lively demand for labor, which, with the large receipts of merchandise, indicate that one and all will be prepared for the opening or resumption of trade at an early day.

The great feature of the times is the cotton crop; what it will be; how will the prices be in Europe at such a time; with conjectures as numerous as the leaves on one of the venerable live oaks in Attakapas.

The Arabia's mails came through yesterday, with letters from Liverpool of the 4th inst. The following is an extract of our correspondence:

"The fact is, Mr. Bull begins to feel a little feverish about the scant supply of cotton, and while he considers all accounts from the slave States mere bosh, he considers it his duty to his spinners to give them a warning which he disguises under the head of Buchanan and Fremont. He talks of raising cotton in Africa, where it rains six months out of twelve. Mr. Bull in fact has tried all sorts of experiments to release himself from his dependence on the United States for cotton, but the old chap has never yet found the place, and he now feels that he has to pay a high price for the next crop, more particularly if the crop should prove anything under 3,000,000 bales; even with that quantity he will have to pay higher prices; with 2,700,000 very high prices; and 2,500,00 God only knows what the prices would be."

From all the information before us we gather that the stock of cotton in Liverpool is not so large by 100,000 to 125,000 bales as the circulars make it appear. This discrepancy arises from cotton which is purchased on this side for spinner's account, being taken direct from the ship's side by carriers direct to the factories, and being reported on arrival and added to the stock on hand, but not deducted from the stock on going into consumption—spinners forbidding their carriers from reporting cotton so taken.

The arrival of boats yesterday added only 1,148 bales cotton to the stock. The receipts for the corresponding day last year were 4,710 bales. The limited shipments for Liverpool the present month are attracting notice. Since the 1st inst. the clearances for that port have been only 1,486 bales; accordingly there will be low stocks in England as early as the 1st November.

THE ATLANTIC'S MAILS.—The United States mail steamship Atlantic, with Liverpool dates to September 3d, arrived at New York on the afternoon of the 15th inst. Her advices have been anticipated by the Arabia, whose news was telegraphed from Halifax, but from our foreign files we are enabled to glean some interesting details. The London Daily News states—what we have on a former occasion announced—that the Central American question has been satisfactorily settled by the treaty concluded between Great Britain and Honduras. The Times, also, in an article on Walker's prospects in Nicaragua, alludes to the same subject. It was currently reported at the time the Atlantic left, that Hon. C. P. Villiers, brother of Lord Clarendon, had been appointed Minister to the United States; but of this we have no other assurance than newspaper suppositions. The Czar had made his solemn entry into Moscow previous to the coronation ceremonies, and all the intelligence from Russia is centered on this one subject. According to the London Post, the difficulty in relation to the occupation of the Island of Serpents will be shortly adjusted, though Russia is censured for her attempt to violate her treaty obligation. It is semi-officially announced in the same journal that the Allied troops will continue for a time to occupy Greece.

Business and Salt.

We notice the arrival of another cargo of salt, that is a large cargo, say 10,000 sacks. We trust the good ship, with the cargo, escaped the quarantine.

Our latest advices from Liverpool gives the following intelligence regarding salt:

Owing to the excessive demand for salt for the Italian and East Indies, this article has experienced a rapid and sudden advance, and cannot now be bought under 7s. 6d. to 8s. per ton (being a steady increase from 5s. 6d. per ton) and at the meeting of salt proprietors to be held at Norwich to-day, it is expected that higher views will be held. There is no old salt to be had, and shippers to the United States labor under the additional disadvantage of having to contend with the increased price of their sacks, for which they have now to pay 9½d. each instead of 8d. as formerly.

Can any good reason be brought forward why the duty on salt should not be abolished, and this necessary article admitted free. What is the paltry duty of twenty per cent on this necessary article, to the overburdened Treasury of our Government? We do not believe in taxing the necessaries of life. Salt was never considered other than a necessary article. It is not like sugar, which can be dispensed with, though it would cause very hard times for some of us to take our juleps without the saccharine. Salt ought to be admitted on the same conditions as coffee. The domestic salt works cannot manufacture one eighth of the required quantity, and the duty is no protection whatever, because it is not required.

The following were the imports of the article for the past three years: Year ending 31st August, 1854, 543,501 sacks and 111,333 bushels Turks Island, from Liverpool. Year ending 31st August, 1855, 603,298 sacks and 382,298 bushels Turks Island from Liverpool. Year ending 31st August, 1856, 1,033,281 sacks and 735,282 bushels Turks Island from Liverpool.

This shows a rapid increase. Turks Island includes all salt from up the Straits, St. Ubes and other ports, and the article generally has brought higher prices and paid a greater profit than for some years. Though sales at times have been made at less than cost, yet we have not heard that it has been more advantageous for ship loaded with salt to come to on a mud bank at the Balize and throw a cargo or part of a cargo overboard, as being a saving to the owners, and throwing the loss on the underwriters. Underwriters, however, have paid many hard cases in the course of trade and time. If we can get the duty abolished on salt at the next session of Congress, it will be one great good accomplished. Perhaps our delegates in Congress think it is a small business. As we are not of that opinion, we trust, for the good of the great commerce of New Orleans, the several members will take the matter up next December.

The Baltimore Riots.

We published some days since, under our telegraphic head, a short account of a riot which took place in Baltimore on the evening of the 12th inst. We have since received full particulars of the affair, and are sorry to state that it was much more serious than we had anticipated. The Evening Patriot, of the 13th, contains details of the fight, from which we learn that it was one of the most bloody and disgraceful riots that has occurred in that city for years. The Patriot says:

The riots took place on Light and Warren streets, between the Rip Raps Club on one side and a party who had congregated at the Seventeenth Ward House, kept by James Clark, on the other. It appears that the Waupanang Club had been escorted home by the Rip Raps, and had passed Clark's house, which is the Democratic head-quarters for that ward, when they were fired upon from the house, and from which has subsequently transpired, we should imagine that great preparation had been made there for some murderous demonstration. From what we can learn, it appears that when the Clubs passed Clark's in the morning a man was observed at one of the windows with a handkerchief in his hands and in the act of firing into the procession, when police officer Brown approached him and said, "If you fire that gun I cannot be responsible for the safety of the house, for it will be torn down." This remark had the desired effect, and no attack was made at the time, more probably from the fact that all the Clubs were together than from the remark of officer Brown. Between three and four o'clock, as the Rip Raps were passing Clark's house, they were attacked by parties in the house with pistols, guns, rifles, bricks, stones, etc. The sudden and unexpected attack of course caused a general fight, which lasted upwards of an hour, during which time some twenty odd persons were wounded and one killed outright.

The American of the same date says that the house of Clark had since been broken open by order of the authorities and searched for arms. A large collection of pistols, muskets, swords, and a swivel gun were found there. Clark, with a number of his friends, had been arrested.

The same paper notices two other riots that occurred on the same night, in which firearms were used. One between two parties of rowdies on West Lombard street, in which a child six years old was shot in the head while standing on its father's doorstep—and another between a gang called the Plug Uglies and a portion of the New Market fire company. No one was seriously hurt in this difficulty.

ARRIVAL OF MR. PEABODY AT NEW YORK.—The New York Sun, of the 17th inst., has the following account of the arrival and reception of this distinguished gentleman in that city: Mr. George Peabody, a native of Danvers, Mass., but for many years past established as a banker in London, where his hospitalities to his countrymen visiting there have been the theme of grateful praise, arrived at this city on Monday, in the steamship Atlantic, on a short visit to his native land. The merchants of New York, Boston, Danvers, Baltimore and other places, have appointed committees to afford him a suitable reception. In this city, Mr. Watts Sherman is at the head of the committee, by whom he was escorted on his arrival, to the St. Nicholas, where they had provided splendid apartments for him. He will proceed to Newport, after a day or two, to visit a friend, and then return to New York where a public dinner will probably be got up to his honor. Mr. P., among other civilities, was complimented on the evening of his arrival at the St. Nicholas, by a serenade from a splendid band.

The New York Times thus describes Mr. Peabody: He is a large man—fully six feet high, and quite stout. His whole appearance is that of a fine old English gentleman. His eye bespeaks shrewdness, and at the same time a hearty good feeling.

There were 93 deaths in the city of Baltimore during the week ending on the 13th inst. This shows a decrease of 36, as compared with the deaths during the week previous.

The deaths in New York city, during the week ending on the 13th inst., numbered 476, showing a decrease of 23 as compared with the report of the previous week.

NEW MATERIAL FOR PAPER.—The Cleveland Plaindealer says: The Planet brought down from Lake Superior a thousand pounds of moss for Dr. Terby, of Detroit, who has been making experiments upon it in the manufacture of paper. The Doctor says that moss makes a beautiful white paper, without any preparation of the raw material for the common paper mills. In all respects it is equal to linen rags, and can be found in unlimited quantities on Isle Royale and several other localities in the vicinity at a very small comparative cost.

Too good news to be true, we fear. But, we will wait, watch and hope. It would be a great thing for the publishing interests of the country, if some cheap and good substitute for rags could be discovered. The supply does not equal the demand, and, as a natural consequence, the price of paper has risen correspondingly.

OFFICERS OF THE GRAND LODGE OF THE I. O. O. F. OF THE UNITED STATES.—The following gentlemen were chosen officers for the ensuing term by the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the United States at its recent session in Baltimore: Geo. W. Race, of Louisiana, Grand Sire; Timothy G. Sentre, of New Hampshire, Deputy Grand Sire; James M. Ridgely, of Maryland, Grand Secretary; and Joshua Vansant, of Baltimore, Grand Treasurer.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CINCINNATI.—The Washington Union says that the Secretary of the Treasury has given the contract for the construction of the Marine Hospital, at Cincinnati, to J. W. Hall of the latter city. The contract for furnishing the plumber's work was given to C. F. Colwell, also of Cincinnati. The Union says that there still remains a portion of the work for which bids will be solicited.

RECRUITS FOR WALKER.—The steamship Tennessee sailed from New York on the 12th inst., for Nicaragua, having on board six hundred passengers, who are said to be volunteers for Gen. Walker's army.

Louisiana Intelligence.

FOUND AN LAST ISLAND.—The Franklin Journal, of Thursday last, has the following:

A gentleman has handed us some articles of jewelry recently found upon Last Island. A lady's breastpin of gold, large in size, and of considerable value. One other breastpin of smaller size, and inferior quality, with a blue set. Also, one car-ring of not much value. They may be seen by calling at this office.

ESCAPE OF PRISONERS.—We learn from the Concordia Intelligencer of the 19th, that there was a general jail delivery at Harrisburg, Catahoula parish, a few days since.

The way it was accomplished, says the Intelligencer, was this:

Some one of the gang of negro stealers who have had such a dangerous combination in Catahoula parish, had given Nelson, lately captured and brought from Arkansas, a pistol, which he drew upon the jailor when he brought them breakfast.

The cocked pistol drawn upon the disarmed jailor, compelled him to keep silence until the prisoners had turned the key upon him and a prisoner who refused to escape. They then, four in number, took to flight. The alarm being instantly given, pursuit was made, and Nelson, who soon broke down in his flight, was recaptured.

Three others, Smith, Hudson and Wiggins are still at large.

We also extract the following item from the Intelligencer:

SOME CORN.—We have received from Tobias Gibson, Esq., of Concordia parish, a long ear of corn, rather short, but making up in breadth. It has twelve hundred and sixty kernels. Judge Bullock, of Natchez, declares that he can beat that brag. We shall see.

THE RIVER.—The Mississippi, at Vidalia, is at low water mark. The "inland sea" shows more of its bottom than its top, and some long-legged gentlemen speak of attempting to wade it.

CHARITABLE DESPOTISM.—The Mansfield Columbian has the following on this subject:

In this parish very large crops of corn and cotton are made on the river lands. On the uplands some of our planters will make from eight to ten bales to the hand, but the crops generally fall considerably short of this. The corn crop is far below average. Many persons throughout the parish will soon finish the gathering of their cotton; others will be compelled to hire additional hands to enable them to save their crops in seasonable time.

Mr. Sebastian informs us that the crops on St. Patrice in this parish have suffered seriously from the ravages of the boll worm, and that all the cotton crops in his neighborhood will be cut short at least one-half. They have not made their appearance in any other portion of the parish. He also states, that the damage has been done within the last week or two.

RED RIVER.—The Alexandria Democrat, of the 16th, says:

Since our last publication old Red has risen about three feet and is still rising. This has most auspicious event for our planters and merchants. The most singular part of the matter is the cause of this queer freak of our eccentric river. As high up as we have been able to hear from there has been no rain to cause this rise. From whence does the water come? It must be a tremendous fall of rain in the mountains, we suppose, but we will leave the weather-wise, or rather the water-wise to settle that matter.

THE WEATHER, RIVER, ETC., AT NATCHITOCHES.—The Chronicle, of the 13th, has the following:

We had a very refreshing shower of rain to-day, (Friday,) which, together with the news that the river is rising rapidly above, has caused considerable animation among our citizens, particularly the merchants, who are anxiously awaiting a rise in the river to bring up their fall supplies. Some, however, are receiving fall and winter goods, notwithstanding the low stage of water.

The Shreveport Gazette, of the 13th inst., has the annexed items:

FIRE AT SHERMAN.—We were informed on Monday, by H. C. Griswold, that about two weeks since, the warehouse of C. Jackson & Co., at Sherman, Texas, was wholly consumed by fire, with all its contents. Loss estimated at $25,000. It was supposed to have been the work of an incendiary, as it occurred about two o'clock in the morning, and was fired from the outside.

IMPORTANT ARRIVALS.—The dull monotony of our town was agreeably interrupted on Tuesday morning by the whistle of the steamer Financier, which came tugging up, twenty days out from Alexandria. On Tuesday evening, the Delta arrived, thirty-five days from Alexandria.

The same paper has a letter dated Rowland, Texas, September 3, from which we extract as follows:

Old Red has taken a strange freak. Without any rains here to affect it, it has gone up at least fifteen feet plumb water, and perfectly red; must be from heavy rains at least two hundred miles above this place. Some of our planters have suffered from drouth, still the crop will be an average one. The country is remarkably healthy.

A CASE OF BRUTALITY IN BALTIMORE.—The Clipper, of the 15th, has the following:

On Saturday night last, as Mr. Hull, one of the proprietors of this paper was on his way home, about 8½ o'clock, when crossing Eutaw street, at the foot of the Lexington Market, he was stealthily approached from behind by some villian and knocked down by a blow on the back part of the head. As soon as he recovered himself sufficiently to rise, he saw the villain running towards the New Market engine house; to a gang of desperadoes who lounge about there he, no doubt, belonging. When it is considered that Mr. H. is in ill health—laboring under the effects of a stroke of paralysis for over two years—the mean and cowardly nature of the assault will be at once seen. The fellow is even unworthy of being recognized by his villainous associates. The scoundrelism of this attack upon a feeble and disabled man exceeds anything that we have been called upon to record for a long time.

Whether this attack was made on account of politics, (which we very much suspect,) or whether on account of exposing in The Clipper the outrageous doings which have been carried on under the guise of the New Market Fire Company, is immaterial. We shall not spare any violations of the peace coming from that quarter, but shall continue to show them up in all their deformity, in the hope that a day of terrible retribution will soon be at hand.

SARATOGA.—The Philadelphia North American says:

The watering season at Saratoga Springs, this year, has proved quite profitable to the hotel keepers. At the leading establishments there were in all 20,171 visitors, and including the smaller concerns, the whole number would probably reach 30,000.

THE PRINTER.—The printer, in his folio, heralded the world. Now comes tidings of weddings, nunneries, entertainments, jubilees, wars, fires, inundations, thefts, murders, massacres, meteors, comets, spectrums, prodigies, shipwrecks, miracles, sea-fights, lawsuits, pleas, proclamations, embassies, trophies, triumphs, revels, sports, plays; then again, as in a new shifted scene, treasons, cheating, tricks, mysteries, enormous villanies of all kinds, funerals, burials, new discoveries, expeditions, now comical, then tragical matters. To-day we hear of new offices created, to-morrow of great men deposed, and then of fresh honors conferred; one is set loose, another imprisoned; he thrives, his neighbor taketh bankrupt; now plenty, then again dearth and famine; one runs, another rides, wrangles, laughs, weeps, and so forth. Thus we do hear such like, both public and private news. [Ibid Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.

WHAT ADVERTISING CAN DO.—Mr. Bonner, the proprietor of the New York Ledger, a weekly literary paper, issued in New York city, has run the edition of the paper up to one hundred and seventy thousand copies! a larger number than any other New York weekly newspaper. The quantity of paper used weekly for the New York Ledger is three hundred and forty reams, of five hundred sheets per ream. The forms of matter are duplicated for each number, by electrotype, and a large number of presses are kept constantly at work, night and day, to turn off its enormous supply. It is said that the proprietor has expended $42,000 within the last year in advertising his paper, and when we see how liberally he uses the columns of the largest circulated dailies, the above amount does not appear to be over-estimated. The result shows what a man may do towards promoting his business by using the power of the press judiciously as well as liberally.

ACCIDENT ON THE JACKSON RAILROAD.—The Holmesville Independent of Thursday last says:

We learn from a number of our citizens returning from Magnolia, that on Tuesday evening last, the locomotive attached to the freight train, on the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad, run over a bull, when about four miles below Magnolia, on the upward trip, throwing both engine and tender off the track in opposite directions, and making a complete wreck of the former, besides injuring the track to a considerable extent. No personal injury, however, was s

The Point of Death.

BY MARY CLEMMER AMES.

Now softly I loved thee, O, Varana Vane,
How madly I loved thee, God only can know;
Thy late hath covered my past with pain,
Thy hate hath shadowed my life with woe.

A fair golden haired bride with curls bedight—
I stood and worshipped thee from afar,
As art in the hush of the drowsy night
I have worshipped Heaven's most distant star.

I have stood and worshipped thee! Was it right?
Was it right to love thee, the pure, the young?
While the cursed vows of thy marriage plight
Like the dirges of Hell through my bosom rung?

No, "it was sin," so the world hath said;
A terrible sin," groaned the Father, who sold
To the iron heart, and the dotard head,
His beautiful child—sold her for gold!

I tenderly loved thee, O, Varana Vane,
Yet loved thee not more than thou loved me;
Thine eye followed mine with a look of pain,
Thy soul followed mine, it was plain to see.

It was hard to love him, at cold Duty's call:
And what to thee were the arabesque dome,
Or the frescoed room, or the sculptured hall,
'Twas thy poor young heart that wanted a home.

I know it was hopeless—knew as in part:
Knew that thy being I never could win;
Yet I held thee once to my panting heart,
And held thee my love, it was in sin!
Was it a sin? All the angels smiled;
The white stars smiled down the line above;
But the world, the world, would have crushed thee, child.

Had it known of thy passing to bear of my love.
Not knowing, it blamed; it said thou wert cold;
Said such a sun should never have wed;
Nor cared that the fresh young life was cold,
To the iron heart and the dotard head.

It is well with thee now, O, Varana Vane!
It is well with thee, deep and sweet is thy rest,
The wearnly heart once aching with pain,
Lies quiet at last, in thy heavenly breast.

O, beautiful art thou my Varana Vane!
In thy death robes of virginal loveliness;
Thy bloody awakens no torture of pain,
As when wreathed in the pearls of thy bridal dress.

Now I hear a voice that I understand—
A low, sweet voice—when my heart is still—
I feel the light touch of a tremulous hand,
Till my pulses leap with their olden thrill;

I see in the gleam of a seraphim face,
The young, fair face that pan never grow old;
See a maiden's form of willowy grace,
See the shifting sheen of her hair's wan gold—
O, Varana Vane, in deathless embrace
I enfold thee! Our love can never grow cold.

Thanks for Rain.

"Bless God for rain," the old man said,
And wiped away a pearly tear;
"That we may have our daily bread
"He drops his showers upon us here.

"Our Father, thou who dwell'st in heaven,
"We thank thee for the pearly shower;
"The thirsty present then hast given
"To man and beast, and bird and flower."

The dusty earth with tips apart
Drank up the precious drops the clouds distill'd.
The smiling grass to fresh and green,
The brooklet swells its song again;
Rainbirds an angel's wing is seen
A token of love that brings us rain.

Another Fallen Star.

Another followed her,
And a book was in his hand,
Filled with the deeds of daring thought
That are known in many a land;
But the child of genius quailed to hear
Death's pitiless demand—

"Here that book cannot enter with thee
For the bright flash of genius is nothing to me."

Next came a maiden fair,
With that eye so deeply bright,
That cities within you strange sweet care,
Should you meet on a summer night;
But death, are the gentle maid passed through,
Snatched away its light—

"Beauty is power in the world," he saith,
"But what can it do in the Pass of Death!"

A youth in hearty mien
Followed in thoughtful mood
Whose heart was filled with love to God
And all the kindly brotherhood;
But still the world not quench the heart
That lived for nothing good—

"I own," cried he, "the power of love,
I must let it pass to the realms above!"

The Last Stitch—A Story for Boys.

BY PHILLIP BARRETT.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.—Longfellow.

About a hundred years ago, there lived in the city of Oxford, England, a boy whose name was George. He was very poor, so much so that he was compelled to clean the boot of the students at the University to obtain money with which to buy the necessaries of life. His countenance was one of no ordinary appearance. His eye was keen and piercing; his forehead noble and lofty; and every feature of his face was perfectly developed. By his easy and polite manners, his obliging disposition, and his warm and generous nature, he soon won the confidence and esteem of many of those upon whom he waited. The poverty of clothing served better to show the richness of a mind which only needed cultivation to make it one of the brightest in the whole country. The students of the University seeing such noble qualities in their lowly and humble boot-black, determined to educate him, and many of them devoted no little share of their time to that purpose. They found him ready, willing and studious. He lost not a moment of his precious time; but applied himself diligently, perseveringly, to his studies, and soon became an equal, if not a superior to some of his instructors.

His advancement was very rapid; so great was it that numbers were unable to recognize in the great gifted and talented young man, the once poor and needy boot-black. About this time there was a great change in the religion of England. There arose a sect, which from the peculiar habits of its members, their strict observance of the Sabbath, their faithful reading of God's word, and their frequent and stated engagements in prayer, was called Methodists. With this party George immediately connected himself, and soon became one of the ablest and most consistent members. The youths who once sought his company, now treated him with sneering contempt.

Those who once considered him a young man of extraordinary abilities, then considered him a reckless fanatic, and avoided his society as they would have a worthless drunkard. All this did not move him. He was as firm as a rock. Nothing could change him. Like Moses, he preferred a life of Christian consistency to the enjoyment of sin for a season. His unchanging conduct won for him many warm and ardent admirers, and numbers who formerly branded him as a fanatic became his best friends. I have not the time, children, to say much more concerning the character of this interesting young man. It will be sufficient to add, that he soon became one of the most pious and talented preachers in England, and such numbers flocked to hear him that the largest house in London could not contain them.

He preached in the open fields to thousands upon thousands; and the great amount of good which he did, eternity shall tell. Dear boys, do not mind the sneers of your companions. Do your duty, let the consequences be what they may. Be industrious, energetic. Don't mind difficulties. They only make your arm stronger, and your heart braver. If this poor boy could arise from the lowly position of a boot-black to that of one of the most pious and eloquent preachers England ever produced, cannot you go and do likewise? You have an idea what you can do till you try. Energy combined with earnest prayer will accomplish the most difficult task.

Boys, would you like to know the name of the boy who blacked the boots of the students at Oxford University? It is GEO. WHITFIELD.

Bob Crandall's Swimming.

Bob Crandell visited England last summer. While stopping in the metropolis, he happened to drop into a coffee-house, where a lot of cockneys were speaking about the swimming powers of different individuals. One gentlemen said his friend William could swim five miles in forty minutes. Another allowed that Tibbetts could do more than this—Tibbetts in some fifty-three minutes and seven-eighths. Just here Bob asked if he might "offer a remark."

"Yes, certainly," replied they.

On this being decided, Bob opened:

"Yoor friend Tibbetts is some swimmer, gentlemen, but his performance would be considered nothing in America. On the Mississippi men swim with such rapidity that they go ahead and pilot steamboats."

"Nonsense!"

"No nonsense at all. To show that I'm not joking in this matter, I'm willing to make a bet with any person who will take me up."

"What is it?"

"That I can outswim any man in England, and give him an hour's start."

"For what sum, sir?"

"Anything; from fifty pounds to a California gold mine."

"Well take that bet, sir, and stake a hundred pounds that you can't beat Mr. Mullins, and give him that start."

"Very good; I will take the bet, gents, and here's twenty sovereigns to bind the bargain."

"When will the swim come off?"

"Now—this instant."

"That's preposterous, the day is too far spent."

"Day? Why, my dear sir, I intend to swim a whole week. In the United States it is considered nothing to swim that length of time."

"Possible?"

"Yes, sir. Harry Slocum, of New Orleans, once swam from Charleston to Cuba. But this is wasting time. Let us proceed to business."

"Where do you wish to start from?"

"Land's End."

"Why there?"

"I intend to swim around the Island, and want lots of sea-room."

The idea of swimming around Great Britain was something that Cockneydom never heard of.

"Such a pull would kill a 'one,' said Mullins; but Bob was used to such things. Mullins persisted, however, in his refusal to undertake anything so absurd, in consequence of which Mullins' friends had to come out with a forfeit in the shape of a basket of champagne. During the remainder of Bob's stay in England he was looked upon as "the Merican prodigy—the man who talked of swimming from Lunnun to Nova Scotia."

Crampton Re-Knighted.—The Anglo Saxon, a paper published in Boston, states that Mr. Crampton, the late British Minister at Washington, is to be knighted, by the express desire of the Queen. As nobody but her Majesty has the power to confer a knighthood, it is very likely that, if done at all, it will be by her wish; and as Mr. Crampton so thoroughly belogged her by his dispatches from Washington, she probably thinks it would be a very appropriate compliment to be-knight him.

Titles or Firms.—One of the best titles for a mercantile firm that we have ever seen is "Call & Settle," which is painted in golden letters on a sign in one of our Eastern cities. Customers are reminded every time they pass of their outstanding accounts. "Neal & Pray" is the name of another firm. But the following beats all. "Twn attorneys," says an old newspaper, "in partnership in a town in the United States, had the name of the firm, which was 'Catchum & Cheatum,' inscribed in the usual manner upon their office door; but as the singularity and ominous juxtaposition of the words led to many a coarse joke from pasters by, the men of law attempted to destroy, in part, the effect of the old association, by the insertion of the initials of their Christian names, which happened to be Isaiah and Uriah; but this made the affair ten times worse, for the inscription ran:

Transatlantic Telegraph—Capt. Berryman and the Arctic.

Lying at anchor off Queenstown for the last few days may have been observed a small, unsightly, ill-painted, rusty-bottomed screw-steamer, without one point of attraction about her, except the stars and stripes fluttering in the breeze. Yet that boat and some of the officers she contains have been the world's wonder for a season, and have just now concluded a task which is the forerunner of an event more wonderful still.

The Arctic was the vessel sent to rescue Dr. Kane, who had previously been sent to rescue Franklin. She was successful, and brought home Dr. Kane and his crew, who had been obliged to abandon his ship and search. She was then a light-ship on the American coast. She is now the bearer of Lieut. Strain, of Darien notoriety, and Capt. Berryman, who has before and now again crossed from Newfoundland to take soundings of the whole Atlantic, from St. John to Valencia, with the view to ascertain the probable success with which a telegraphic cable may be laid between these points. The result is most satisfactory.

For some 50 or 60 miles from St. John, and again on this side, is a bank, varying from 25 to 120 fathoms. Between these there is a plateau nearly level, the bottom soft, composed of shells so fine that only the microscope can discover them, each shell perfect in its minute beauty, proving the absence of currents at the bottom, and, with due deference to Stephenson and others, the want of that vast pressure which was to be so dreaded, and exhibiting at every point not only a capacity, but the most perfect capacity, for the very use for which it is required. The whole apparatus for arriving at these facts is most perfect. Steam power, separate from that of the ship, works the axle from which the sounding-line is "paid out." Soundings have been taken to the depth of 27,000 fathoms. By a neat contrivance each sounding shows not only the depth but the nature of the bottom which is brought up in five quills, and the temperature of the water, the latter being given by the expansion or contraction of metallic spiral ribbons placed round a center pin, fixed at the top, and attached at bottom to a needle and indicator, the latter remaining fixed after the other has ceased to act showing the exact varintion between the surface and the bottom. Careful drawings have been made by Mr. Van Den Berg, (to whom has been assigned the special post of draughtsman,) of the soundings, showing a profile of the bottom of the sea with the greatest accuracy.

There can be no doubt that telegraphic communications between Ireland and St. John, a distance of 640 geographical miles, may be regarded as a certainty. It is in the hands of a small American company, but though small, if its members possess but a little of the energy of their representative, Mr. Cyrus W. Field, who is also here making every inquiry, it will be enough to overcome every difficulty. Capt. Berrymen laughs at laying the cable. He asks but a ship large enough and he will undertake to do it at 10 miles an hour right across. The company have already obtained the sole grant for erecting telegraphs throughout the whole of Newfoundland, and have already some 1,700 miles at work, or will have in a few days, which is in connection with the American lines.

The difficulties and trials of temper in taking these soundings have been tremendous. Repeatedly after "paying out" tens of thousands of fathoms of line, and getting all up within some sixty or eighty, it was snapped and all had to be done again. Six and eight hours have been occupied in getting one sounding only, and these have been made nearly every half degree the whole way across. From the captain to the cabin boy, each has given his willing aid. No trouble was thought too much—no time too long; each appeared to feel the honor of his nation at stake and proud in every way to advance the object in view. They have done their work well. Nature has granted all we could ask; art will soon do its part, while nature, science and art, worked out by man's hand, will produce one grand whole to benefit mankind.

A Very Tough Story.

The following story is told by the renowned wag, John Phœnix, of the California Pioneer. The reader will see that it records the verdict of a "coroner's inquest," and in other particulars bears a strong resemblance to some of the tough stories which politicians have circulated against their political opponents in Eastern States:

Mr. Tushmaker was never regularly bred as a physician or surgeon, but he possessed, naturally, a strong mechanical genius, and a fine appetite; and, finding his teeth a great service in gratifying the latter propensity, he concluded that he could do more good in the world, and create more real happiness therein, by putting the teeth of the inhabitants in good order than any other way, so he became a dentist.

He was the man who first invented the method of placing small cog wheels in the back teeth, for the more perfect mastication of food; and he claimed to be the original discoverer of the method of filling cavities with a kind of putty, which, becoming hard directly, causes the tooth to ache so grievously, that it has to be pulled, thereby giving the dentist two successive fees for the same job.

Tushmaker was one day seated in his office, in the city of Boston, Mass., when a stout old fellow named Byles presented himself to have a back tooth drawn. The dentist seated his patient in the chair of torture and opening his mouth, discovered therein an enormous tooth in the right hand side about as large, as he afterwards expressed it, as a small Polyglot Bible. "I shall have trouble with this tooth thought Tushmaker, but he clapped on his heaviest forceps and pulled. It did'nt come. The he tried the turnscrew, exerting his utmost strength, but the tooth would'nt stir.

Go away from here, said Tushmaker to Byles, and return in a week and I will draw that tooth out, or know the reason why.

Byles got up, clapped his handkerchief to his jaw, and departed.

The dentist went to work, and in three days he invented an instrument which he was confident would pull anything. It was a combination of the lever, pulley, wheel and axle inclined plane, wedge and screw. The castings were made and the machine put up in the office over an iron chair, rendered perfectly stationary by iron rods going down into the foundations of the granite building.

In a week old Byles returned. He was clapped into the iron chair, the forceps connected with the machine firmly attached to the tooth, and Tushmaker stationing himself in the rear, took hold of a lever four feet long.

He turned it slightly—old Byles gave a groan, and lifted up his left leg. Another turn—another groan, and higher went old Byles' right leg again.

"What do you raise your leg for?" asked the doctor.

"I can't help it," said the patient.

"Well," said Tushmaker, "the tooth is bound to come now."

He turned the lever clear round with a sudden jerk, and snapped old Byles' head clean and clear from his shoulders, leaving a space of four inches between the several parts!

They had a post mortem examination—the roots of the tooth were found extending down the right side through the right leg, and turned up in two prongs directly in the sole of the right foot.

"No wonder," said Tush, "that he raised his leg."

The jury thought so, too, but they found the roots much decayed, and five surgeons swearing that mortification would have ensued in a few months, Tushmaker was cleared on a verdict of "justifiable homicide."

He was a little shy of that instrument afterward; but one day, an old lady, very feeble and flaccid, came in to have a tooth pulled, and thinking it would come out very easy, Tushmaker concluded, just by way of variety, to try the machine.

He did so, and at the very first turn drew the old lady's skeleton completely and entirely from her body, leaving her a mass of quivering jelly in the chair.

Tushmaker took her home in a pillow case. She lived several years after that, and they called her the 'India Rubber Woman.' She had suffered terribly with the rheumatism, but after this occurrence, never had a pain in her bones. The dentist kept them in a glass case.

After this the machine was sold to the contractor of the Boston Custom House, and it was found that a child three years of age could, by a single turn of the screw, raise a stone weighing twenty-five tons.

Smaller ones were made on the same principle, and sold to keepers of hotels and restaurants. They were advantageously used for boning turkeys.

There is no moral at all to this story, and it is possible that the circumstances may have become slightly exaggerated: Of course, there can be no doubt of the truth of the main incidents.

Novel Benevolence.—At a beautiful villa, near Paris, was lately given a charming fete. Pretty women by scores were present, and the loveliest among the party was Madame T., always eminently in the fashion.

At the commencement of the ball, a young gallant, the flower of the sporting clubs, hastened to be the first to ask her to dance.

"With pleasure, sir," replied she, "if is twenty francs."

"Madame!" replied the puzzled cavalier.

"I said twenty francs!"

"I beg your pardon, madame," replied he smiling, "there is a misunderstanding. I had the honor to ask your hand for a waltz."

"Ah! you are right," replied the lady quickly, "there was a misunderstanding. I thought you asked me for a quadrille, but since it is a waltz it will be forty francs."

More puzzled than ever, the gentleman waited in explanation, which she gave him with a gracious smile.

"Do you not understand sir," that I am dancing for the benefit of the inundated? It is one louis for a quadrille, two for a waltz, and no reduction in the price."

At this rate, Madame T. had no lack of partners, and bravely and charitably danced till the close of the ball. Who but a French woman would have dreamed of such a source of revenue?

Handsome.—Mr. Hal Farnum, of Beverley, N.J., has given a building, with convenient grounds, valued at $25,000, for a Normal School, and has agreed to pay the expenses of the school for the first year. This is a handsome and most creditable gift.

Resignation of an Army Officer.—Capt. Theodore O'Hara, of the Second Regiment U. S. Cavalry, has resigned. He originally entered the army from Kentucky as Assistant Quartermaster in 1846, but was disbanded after the close of the Mexican war in 1848, and received his late commission in March, 1855 when the regiment was formed. He is from Kentucky.

The cultivation of flowers is, of all the diversions of mankind, the one to be selected and approved as the one most innocent in itself, and most perfectly devoid of injury or annoyance to others.

Covington Female Seminary.

Located at Covington, Tipton county, twelve miles North of Sharon Depot, on the Memphis and Ohio Railroad.—

The fourth session of this Institution will commence on the first Monday in August, 1856.

The past session our school numbered 101 pupils. During the summer vacation we shall make arrangements for the ample and satisfactory accommodation of all who may favor us with their patronage. We can speak confidently that our school offers superior inducements to parents seeking a quiet healthful home for their daughters during their term of study.

The decided healthfulness of Covington is a fact attested by all who have known our village from its earliest settlement.—From the commencement of our school there has not a single death occurred among our pupils. Our location removes us from exposure to those epidemics which so frequently and so fearfully prevail in towns located farther South or on the river.

Our retired situation and limited population are well calculated to preside habits of extravagance, and furnish that freedom from excitement which is most essential to successful study.

The different denominations have stated services in town every Sabbath. Sabbath Schools are well sustained and are within the reach of all. We promise every effort on our part to inculcate habits of pure morality, and a profound respect for the Bible and Religion. While we would look to the parent and preacher the inculcation of sectarian dogmas, we deem it our prerogative and duty, day by day, to testify to the value of experimental religion.

Any information in regard to the plan of study, method of instruction or general regulations of the school can be gained by addressing the subscriber at Covington, or the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to whom a package of catalogues will be sent.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Wednesday, the 1st of October.

The Institution has entered on its sixth session under the auspices of the same Principal. A corps of duty, interest and pleasure reside in the fraternal connexion with the institution permanent and perpetual.

The apparatus, Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical, is large and well selected.

There is a numerous cabinet of minerals and fossils in connexion with the Seminary.

There is a library of more than one thousand volumes accessible to the pupils, which will shortly be increased several hundred volumes.

The number of musical instruments, pianos, harp, guitars, etc., is always sufficient to meet the wants of the department.

The institution is furnished with a stamp and excellent collection of maps, charts, diagrams, globes, etc.

The grounds of the Seminary have been enlarged and the entire premises tastefully enclosed.

UNIFORM.

The Trustees and Principal at a meeting lately held, adopted a uniform for the following reasons:

1st. To secure economy in dress. It is impracticable to secure it otherwise.

2d. Our young ladies are of diverse pecuniary conditions, as is but to be expected where such a number are thrown together, and this diversity is published to the world by the different styles of dress worn by the several pupils.

3d. On public occasions we have often, as well as the young ladies, been mortified to hear this diversity remarked.

4th. Without a uniform, there being no rule in the article of dress, the rapidity with which fashion changes will be a source of trouble of satisfying these endlessly diverse fancies in every article, a burdensome and annoying in the extreme. For the above and other good reasons, we have adopted a uniform, and commend it to our patrons and the public. It must be regarded as a law of the institution.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from our Fayre Ladye.

OXFORD, England, August 7, 1856.

Many were the pictures we drew in our minds, while riding in the railway, of this old and renowned city and its colleges. I supposed there were three or four colleges at most, and none of them particularly beautiful, but only worthy of being visited from their associations. But how disappointed I was. There are nineteen colleges, five halls and sixteen parish churches, besides the Radcliffe Library and other public buildings to adorn the city and to be visited, and all the the time we could possibly spare was four hours. The first feeling was one of despair—the next that "we would make an effort" and see how much four hours increasing exertion could do—and we were astonished at the result. The strain upon the mind was very severe, however, and I believe that I was never so fatigued, but rather thing tales even the little we saw, I would have gone through any labor. Our first duty was to engage a guide, and in this we were fortunate in getting an old man who had for many years lived here, and who would take us by the shortest route to the most famous and noticeable colleges—but I was almost sorry that he knew so much. Such an incessing stream of talk I never heard, and every word was knowledge. So between the effort to understand his strange intonations, and to remember, and to see everything and keep going on, I was never so bewildered, and college, dates books, trees and walks, ran an inverse round in my head, each blundering into the other in inextricable confusion. Now after three or four weeks calm reflection I begin to see my way a little clearer, but still if my words are confused, sometimes you will know it, because the idea itself is but vague and dim. I shall make some mistakes I dare say, but the general impression will be true, and that is all one can hope for in such rapid work.

Our first walk was to the entrance gateway tower of Pembroke College, where Dr. Johnson was educated, and where we only stopped long enough to admire a beautiful projecting window in the second story, just over the gateway, which belongs to the great lexicographer's private study. From a little way on we stopped at an arched Gothic gateway in a tower, forming the centre-piece of a fine range of buildings which compose one side of a square or will of rooms, enclosing a beautiful court-yard, beautifully green and solemnly quiet, (for it is vacation and not a soul is seen,) inviting you to loiter and lounge—but alas! our guide's tongue begins to dispel all idle dreams, and we are told that Cardinal Wolsey commenced the tower through which we entered, and that there hangs the "great bon," as the bell has been christened, in itself a wonder, as its weight is 17,000 pounds. But we think only of the poor Cardinal, who, in the hey-day of his power, obtained from Henry VIII the papers empowering him to found and build this noblest monument to his name that could have been desired, but, even in this grand deed he was thwarted. After his downfall the King took all the credit to himself, and after seizing all the revenues Wolsey had designed for its maintainance, and after mutilating the original plan and changing his most august mind two or three times, at last, in 1532, built part of the present edifice, and 1551 gave it its present foundation and name, Christ Church, partly academical and partly ecclesiastical. The tower Wolsey had begun Sir Christopher Wren completed, and the size of the quadrangle, as the enclosures and their enclosing buildings are called, is the same that Wolsey designed—it is 254 feet square—the largest in Oxford, and I expect in the world—certainly in all my knowledge. The buildings are very noble in appearance, being of a grey, ancient looking stone, with carving and grotesque shapes and time-worn facings to the windows and doors—the whole quite one's ideal of a place to study and dream in while the world outside was unheeded and forgotten—where one could grow grey-headed unconsciously digging out Greek roots and writing elegant Latin verses, while all the cry for help and effort from suffering humanity with its burden of hard-pressing realities and sorrows, would come to the ear only as a far off dream.

The desire to yield to this sweet temptation and abandon all the anxious thoughts and restless longings of our day—all its turmoil and hard-solved problems of duty and labor—and let one's self glide back into the past with its quiet dreams and legends and noble fancies—this temptation was greatest in walking through the park of Magdalene College, a park of one hundred acres planted in noble trees, with the rich velvety English grass lying below and fine deer lying about. It was so beautiful, and only to look at it for a moment and then go forever away with only its memory! As we strolled down a long straight avenue of noble trees, once Addison's favorite walk, and called after him, I began to understand a little how he could write such pure, elegant, yet perfectly simple English. Here, with the souls of the "noble dead" communing through their works with his, with all the sweet influences of our Great Teacher Nature—no distracting visions—no adverse influences—it would have been more of a wonder if he had, written otherwise. I almost felt as if could here write too!

But I have wandered very far away from Christ Church College, where I was just going to take you up into the dining hall. The entrance to this is very beautiful, worthy of a church instead of a mere dining-room. Over head is a very fine carved stone ceiling, fan-like tintings with drooping points, the whole supported by a single massive pillar. The room itself is 115 feet long, 40 wide and 50 high. It is not suitable for a church. The walls are covered by portraits of celebrated students, some in their plain gown, others in their full robes as "Knight of the Garter" or "Chancellor of the University," and very gorgeous these dresses were. That of Knight of the Garter I think I can describe: Short purple breeches with white silk stockings and buckled white satin shoes, a long gracefully folding blue velvet cloak lined with white satin, lace, ruffles and a frill shirt, and round the knee the garter buttoned, and on the left side the ribbon and star. This is all I can recall of it, but it will give you some idea of this strange and picturesque costume. The ceiling here was of carved oak and bears the date of 1529, and like everything here was a wonder for the patience and time that it must have taken to carve it. There is not a spot about these colleges where ornament could be put that there is not most minute and elaborate carving. The perseverance of those English ancestors of ours is astonishing, and almost overwhelming to my mind, accustomed as I am to our great quickness and slightness of erection.

The next point of interest was the Cathedral, connected with this college. It used to be a Saxon Church, and what Cardinal Wolsey spared of it was built in 720. Here rests the body of St. Frideswide, after whom the Saxon Church was named. His tomb was most elaborately carved, but until very lately it was all hidden under a thick, smooth coat of plaster, put on no one knows when; but now it gives a strange look of freshness and whiteness to the stone that has been there over 1180 years—and it looks, too, quite out of keeping with the dark, grey stone all around. This ceiling too is a great wonder from its rich and lavish carvings, the work of Wolsey, it seems incredible at the first glances that it is hard unfeeling stone, and that the patient chisel and slow tap of the hammer, guided by a careful hand, were the only agents in this complication of arch and point and leaf and face, and every conceivable shape which here meets you at every turn. Were the workers at this most tedious and monotonous labor uplifted by a consciousness of working for posterity, or were they true artists loving to produce the wonders that grew under their hands? It surely must have been more than the ordinary impulse to labor that has produced such results as these. We entered the quadrangle you remember through the Great Tour Gate, but in going out we passed through Canterbury Gate, which Canterbury College once stood of which, as Thomas Moore was a student, and Wickliffe, of Bible memory, a Warden. All the old buildings were removed in 1770.

The walk on the banks of the Isis, a narrow little stream, but made famous notwithstanding, is very beautiful. A grand arch of elms as old as the Christ Church College to which it belongs, and the spot from which the spectators view the racing in boats with which the students amuse themselves. It is said to be a very fine sight indeed, and I know it must be deeply interesting in term time to walk about these grounds and see the crowds of students in their square-topped flat caps and long silk gowns. Now we go next to New College, built in 1385, and chiefly visited for its most beautiful chapel with its ancient stained glass windows, and its more modern ones painted, after enstoomby Sir Joshua Reynolds. I cannot tell which I admired most, the softness and mildness of the old glass or the beautiful designing of the new. Some of the designings in this are most lovely. Here too is another scene of beautiful carving and a series of sketches in raised marble adjoining the side of the altar by Westmacoth. Some of the old windows are Flemish and said to be painted after designs by Reuben's scholars—they represent martyrs and saints. In the gardens, for every college has its own grounds, are some fine remains of the old city wall, upon part of which this college was built. I plucked a little leaf growing in a crevice of one of the bastions and walked away in a dream, wondering if good old King Alfred had ever visited this wall when he lived here and so on.

We passed next University College, an erection of Charles First's time, but the old original foundation of King Alfred. Now we are entering All Saints College, where are portraits of Bishop Heber, Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Young of the "Night Thoughts," and busts of Sir Christopher Wren and Blackstone—all in some way connected with the college. Bishop Heber has a beautiful mild face, with an eye like Mr. Hamilton's, and Jeremy Taylor gives you an idea of a man wrapt and engrossed in thought. We stop a moment at Oriel College to see the window of Dr. Newman, now of Puseyite fame, and then for the schools, as the halls which belong to all the colleges are called, and connected with which is the Bodleian Library, in itself a wonder. We go through it with a sinking at the heart and a longing for a life time of leisure to be spent here. There are half a million of books in all languages and of all ages, one very old and curious specimen of Arabic, and and another of Sanscrit were out being read, which otherwise we would have seen, and all this mass of knowledge is free of access to any student here. Then above this is a gallery of paintings and many models of renowned buildings, the Pantheon, the Arch of Constantine, and many others, one of the most curious being that of a subterranean palace in Guzerat, so built that in the heat of summer a cool spot can always be found. Below the Library is the Convocation House, chiefly beautiful from its roof, wonderful even here for its carvings. Near by is the Divinity School, once used in the time of the great plague in London as the sitting room of the House of Commons. Here it was that Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley were tried and condemned—and from here we went to see the memorial erected to their memory, in one of the principal streets. We were shown a little cross of stone in the centre of the paving of one of the streets, said to be placed where they were burnt, but it is not certain. We know enough in knowing that they gave a noble testimony to the faith.

Of Oxford I can only say it is a beautiful city, with an air of quiet and restabout well suited to its honors as being the City of Colleges. The number of students here at one time is about 1290 and Christ Church has nearly 988 of these. We left the old city so rich in the past and richer yet in the present and reluctant—sad that we have no such aids to knowledge—reluctant because we had seen but little of its many wonders.

K.

The love of Christ hath a height without a top, a depth without a bottom, a length without an end, and a breadth without a limit.—[Eph. iii, 18, 29.

Christ's sorrows, griefs and sufferings can be paralleled with nothing but his love.

God hath no sons that are unlike himself.

None are so easily acquainted, so close knit together, and so much endeared to one another, as real christians.

One true christian differs from another without breech of charity, as friends love one another, though in different garbs.

Heart-work is better than head-work; and it is better temper to be fervent in charity, than in disputes.

Better be a melancholy saint, than a mad sinner.

If good men are said, it is not because they are good, but because they are not latter.

Whom God chooses, the world refuses.

God's gold is the world's dross.—They, of whom the world is not worthy, are counted not worthy to live in the world.

He is neither afraid of dying nor living; he desires to go to heaven to see Christ, yet, is willing to stay upon earth to serve Christ.

If the children of God did but know what was best for them, they would perceive that God did that which is best for them.

A true christian lives like a saint, and begs like a sinner.

Christ is to be a believer's Judge, and if he was to choose his Judge, he could not choose a better friend.

As God glorifies Christ in heaven, so the Spirit glorifies him on earth, in the hearts of believers.

A believer's comfort in living is to live to Christ; and in dying it is that he shall go to Christ.

A child of God had rather ten thousand times suffer for Christ, than that Christ should suffer by him.

ITEMS OF CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA CAMP-MEETING.

Dear Brother McTyeire:—I have often had occasion to admire the manner in which our itinerancy adapts itself to circumstances, as it wends its aggressive way upon the powers of darkness. In its pioneer operations, in which it has achieved its greatest deeds of glory, by some means or other it will have access to the people. It hunts them up on creeks, rivers, valleys, hills and mountains. It does not wait for the rebel against God—the captive of Satan to send for the Ambassador of Peace and offer him a consideration to come; but in obedience to the Divine command it goes into all the world and preaches the gospel to every creature.

I have often been amused and edified at the brethren in this country saying to me, "I am going to have a camp-meeting at such a time and in such a neighborhood. I hope you will come to it and help us?" "I would say to them: What, have you a society of such strength in that neighborhood as will enable you to hold a camp-meeting?—Such societies are usually very rare in the country in California. The reply usually is about to this effect." Well, we have one, two or three members, or perhaps none at all, but there are some very clever people in that neighborhood. One gentleman of the neighborhood says that he will give me twenty-five dollars, another has promised me fifty, and another says he will give me a hundred. Others have promised me beeves and sheep. If I can get five or six hundred dollars, that will enable me to hold the meeting, and I have no doubt but I can get that sum." But what are you going to do with the money? "Purchase lumber to make the tents, the pulpit, tables, etc., to hire a cook or cooks, buy provisions and meet incidental expenses." Well, I will, the Lord permitting, go to your meeting. The time arrives—I am on my way.—

The first I attended was in the month of May, near a little mining town called Vallecita, in Calveras county. In fifteen or twenty miles of the place I meet in the towns and on the roads a large and striking advertisement, headed in large letters "camp-meeting," giving the place, time of commencement, some items of expectation, and then in bold, black letters, "boys, bring your blankets." This being a mining country the boys appreciate the propriety of the hint. I arrive in the town. A brother of the church kindly entertains me for the night. In the morning my excellent brother, R. W. Bigham, comes with his buggy and horse and takes me to the camp-ground. I find it located at the foot, or rather on a foot hill of a mountain, but slightly on the rise of the hill. A neat pulpit for such an occasion standing on the lower side of the ground, with a beautiful arbor in the front of it. Two tents on each side erected for the public accommodation. The one assigned to ladies and married gentlemen, and the other to single gentlemen. Ample provisions were made for the public accommodation in food and in the services of a hired cook. The public were informed that we all had equal rights at the table, and were invited when they saw a vacant seat at the table to occupy it. The congregation had it announced to them that there would be no police to watch them—that it would be taken for granted that every man was a gentleman until his conduct proved the contrary. And although the adjacent town was a very wicked one, and various miners surrounded them, occupied by numerous young men, some of whom were wicked enough to discredit sin itself, yet the meeting, day and night, (and it was, except the Sabbath, most numerously attended at night,) was even remarkably orderly. It is not material whether the camps at these meetings are covered with brush, cloth or plank, as there is no rain in this country in the latter part of the Spring, or at least but very seldom, and none through the summer and early part of the fall. Hence many of them are very imperfectly covered.

This meeting was a successful one. There were many souls converted to God and several backsliders were reclaimed, and a good impression made on the neighborhood. The indefatigable Dr. Cannon is in charge here.

I present you this meeting as a specimen of the California camp-meetings, and especially as they are gotten up and conducted by the members of the Pacific Conference of the M. E. Church South. Our brethren of the M. E. Church conduct them a little differently; nor is there uniformity except in a general way with our camp-meetings.

It is a remarkable item in the history of these meetings that early in August some very reputable gentlemen, the most, if not all of whom, were from Missouri, and one of them the son of the late Rev. Milton Jamison a while of Kentucky and afterwards of the Missouri Conference, and none of whom were members of the church, concluded that they would get up a camp-meeting, and forthwith purchased a considerable amount of lumber, erected their tents, made the seats and tables, built the pulpit, made ample provision for feeding and lodging the people, called upon the preachers for their services, and had one of the most important meetings that has been held in California. Their neighbors who in regard to religion were as themselves, tendered to them any amount of provisions they might need. The meeting wound up with an addition of forty two members, and nearly as many conversions. The most of these gentlemen avowed a purpose to seek the salvation of their souls, and some of them gave themselves to the church, and to God. They lifted a collection on the Sabbath of a hundred and seventy dollars for the support of the preachers on the circuit and fifty or sixty dollars to defray the expenses of others, and before the meeting closed raised a subscription of four thousand dollars to build a church in the neighborhood. This meeting was held in the Valley of Suisun, in A. M. Bailey's district, with Bro. Davis in charge of the circuit.

Another camp-meeting soon followed this in the Badega country. Both of these are near branches of the San Francisco Bay, and in the midst of an extensive wild oat country. This was on the circuit of which brother Sanders late of the Florida Conference has charge. It was a meeting of glorious power; some thirty odd souls were converted, and more than that number joined the church. The impression on the community is said to be deep and general and most wholesome.

This leaves us in good health. Mrs. K. is now in more vigorous health, than she has been since early last spring. The annual Conference of the M. E. Church of California closed here last night. Bishop Scott presiding. More of this hereafter.

As ever Yours,

H. H. KAVANAUGH.

All God's children have received God's spirit, whereby they are made humble, believing and holy; humble in regard of their sins, believing in regard of Christ, and holy in regard of their conscience and care to keep all God's commandments.

A good deal of the trouble of God's people ariseth from a mistake and misapprehension of God: They judge of God by their sense, not by his promise; by their own frame, and not by his constant nature.

If believers are condemned by the world, let them remember that they shall not be condemned with the world. Sin may live in a believer, but a believer cannot live in sin. It may lose its dominion, though not leave its habitation.

The imperfection of a believer's sanctification, makes him continually depend on Christ for his justification.

When a child of God thinks he can go alone, he is nearest falling.

A true christian may be weary in serving God, but God is never weary of serving him.

As saints have groanings mutterable, so they have joys unutterable.

A christian is what he is between God and his own soul.

The blood of Christ upon the heart is the greatest blessing; upon the head is the greatest curse.

We hated God without a cause, and he loved us without a cause.

Our love to God is the reflection of his love to us; 1 John iv, 19. We love him because he first loved us.

If God's earthly presence is so good, what is his heavenly presence?

The nearer we are to Christ, the nearer is God to us.

If the love of God set us on work, the God of love will pay us our wages.

They that deny themselves for Christ shall enjoy themselves in Christ.

Christ's strength is the christian's strength.

Christ made himself like to us, that he might make us like to himself.

They that will not fear God in prosperity will be afraid of him in adversity.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP KANGAROO.

The steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool on the 10th ult., arrived at Philadelphia on the morning of the 24th. She brought files of London and Liverpool papers as late as the day of her sailing.

England.

The London Times has a leader on the suspension of the Royal British Bank. It considers that the bank has broken in a most disgraceful manner.

A boat from the ill-fated emigrant ship Ocean Home has been picked up, containing Edward Harvey, the second mate, Frederick Snow and James Monaghan, seaman, and one passenger, name unknown.

An arrangement has been come to between the Bank of France and the Bank of England, by which the former will draw gold from Britain only as it receives, instead of at uncertain intervals.

France.

The smoothness of remarkable events which has characterized French politics for some time still prevails. The Emperor's sojourn at Biarritz, which was to end on the 10th of September, will be extended to the 1st of October. Commercial letters from Paris state that the badness of the past week was very quiet and without change. Parisian manufactures were dull of sale, but considerable activity is expected in all descriptions by the end of the month or first of October. In the corn trade the late enormous arrivals at Marseilles had caused owners to abate their extensions, and prices were declining.

Italy.

The report that France will permit its Minister at Naples to withdraw for a time, and that England will not appoint a successor to the late Sir Wm. Temple, has been confirmed.

The papers furnish confirmation of the report that the insurrection of Naples has been suppressed.

Spain.

Affairs in Spain appear to be more unsettled. Madrid advices say that O'Donnell's tenure of office was fast drawing to a close, and that it was expected Narvaez would once more become the ruling statesman of the country. With a view to maintain his position near the person of the Queen, we are informed that O'Donnell has brought forward a scheme, authorizing a decree to restore to Queen Christina all her property in Spain, upon which sequestration was laid after the revolution of 1854. In this project the regnante is declared revolutionary and unjustifiable, and all that was done against her at that time is designated as iniquitous. The project, we are told, was agreed to unanimously; the self-styled Progressistas in the Cabinet, including Senor Calludo, who encouraged and aided with his purse the revolution of 1854, finding nothing to say against it. The document has been sent to Queen Christina for approval, and as soon as an opportune moment arrives the decree will be promulgated.

The latest telegraphic advice from Spain contains nothing of peculiar interest. It states that the Cabinet is unanimous and possesses the entire confidence of the Queen. Gen. Alesgo has been named as Commandant-General of the Philippian Island. The Madrid journals contain the official justification of the decree by which the Cortes have been dissolved. The Ministers declare that this assembly has overstepped the limits of its powers, and that it has behaved regardless of the restrictions which were originally put upon its mandate by the decree of the convocation.

The price of corn is falling in Madrid.

Russia.

Two important facts are related with regard to Russia—the coronation of the Czar, and the evacuation of Kors. According to our latest advices from Moscow the former pageant was passed off to the entire satisfaction of all parties interested. The Emperor Alexander has been most enthusiastically received by all classes of his people. His entry into Moscow was more akin to the triumphal processions of ancient Rome than anything ever seen in these kingdoms. The stream of gold and silver—the immense display of sparkling and costly diamonds—the parade of splendid troops, equipment in the most costly style—all convinced the spectator that no matter what may be the character of his Government, the Autocrat of Russia has not an equal among the potentates of the earth—one who can display such pomp, power, magnificence and grandeur.

Kars has been evacuated by the Russians, who have retired to Adrianople. The ceremony of surrendering this renowned fortification took place on the 19th of August. Three of the English officers attached to the British commissary with the Turkish army in Asia were present at the surrender, not in their official capacity, but as spectators. Their stay was celebrated by festivals with streams of champagne and numberless toasts, among them that of Gen. Williams with a salute from the guns of the citadel.

Le Nord publishes the Russian reply respecting the Isle of Serpents. Russia declares that she cannot concede except to the joint powers.

Switzerland.

Further details of the insurrection in Switzerland are to hand. Two clergymen have been arrested on a charge of having been connected with the plot, and we learn that Colonel de Meuron and MM. Montmolin and de Gollinc, who escaped by water from Neufchatel, have been captured in the canton of Friburg. With regard to the punishment which these prisoners will receive, it is said that they will be sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and to pay the expenses of the damage they have occasioned.

Letters from Berlin mention that the defeat of the loyalists in Switzerland has caused the King of Prussia some uneasiness, but he does not regard that principality as entirely lost to his crown.

Austria and Turkey.

The intervention of Austria in the contests between Prince Danilo of Montenegro and the Turks, is talked of as impending. To the announcement of the display of the military force on the Montenegrin frontier, which has been resolved upon at Vienna, we have now to add the assertion of a German paper, that instructions for an immediate diplomatic interference with the Sultan, have been sent to the Austrian Ambassadors at Constantinople.

Greece.

The Greek government has recently appointed a Governor of Piraeus, but the French Admiral refused to recognize him. The Prussian and Bavarian Ministers protested against it, but the British Minister supported the decision of the French Admiral.

From the Sandwich Islands.

Our dates from Honolulu are to the 31st of July. A new steam propeller has been built for the government and launched. Joseph Jackson, Esq., has been appointed Post-Master of Honolulu. Abraham Fernandez has been appointed Enumerator for the District of Honolulu.

ANOTHER SEX CAUGHT.—The Lexington (Va.) Star, of the 11th inst., states that for some time one Daniel Price has been hanging about that place, telling negroes fortunes and giving them incendiary advice. On Tuesday night week, several young men of the place treated his face to a coat of varnish and lamp black, and packing up his possessions, ordered him to leave town, which he did. The Star adds that he was a resident of Richmond last winter.

CROPS IN SOUTHWEST GEORGIA, MIDDLE AND WEST FLORIDA.—The Thomasville (Ga.) Enterprise, of the 23d ult., says:

All through this region, and the scope of country bordering on the Gulf of Mexico, the late storm has destroyed at least one-third of the crop.

ILLNESS OF A CELEBRATED POET AND WIT.—The New York Evening Mirror, of the 23d ult., says:

We regret to hear the continued and increasing illness of John G. Saxe. The stroke of paralysis which afflicted him during the last winter, seems to have terminated in a complete prostration.

THE STEAMSHIP BLACK WARRIOR.—We find the following item in relation to this well-known steamer in the New York Commercial Advertiser of the 23d ult:

The steamship Black Warrior, 1660 tons, was this morning taken on the balance dock for repairs; she will be recaulked and newly painted.

The Washington (Ark.) Democrat, of the 16th inst., says:

The river continues to rise, and at that time lacked but eight or ten feet of being even with the banks at Fulton. The Clarksville stage-driver reported considerable luck water in the Cossetot and Little River, and Red River above is overflowing the low places.

MURDER IN FLORIDA.—At St. Marks, Fla., on the night of the 14th inst., says the Wakullar Times of the 17th inst., Edward Burke, an Englishman, steward on board of the schooner Julia M. Hallock, was killed by George Williams, a seaman on board the brig E. Remington. Burke was said to be intoxicated, and challenged out and all of the seamen of the Remington to come on to the wharf and fight. Williams, seconded by John McCairn, another of the brig's crew, went on to the wharf, where Williams knocked Burke down, then taking him by the hair, he thumped his head against the planking until Burke was dead.

Williams and McCairn were taken to Tallahassee jail on Tuesday when they are to await their trial.

Later from California.

By the Empire City, which arrived here on Saturday last with the California mails, we have received full files of San Francisco papers to the 5th inst.

We clip the following summary of the preceding fortnight's intelligence from the True Californian, of the 5th:

The news of the past fortnight is not of great variety or importance.

The Vigilance Committee has quietly disbanded: the members of the different companies, however, as a general thing, retained their arms, ready in case of need to re-assemble in their pristine efficiency and strength. On the 27th of August the Executive Committee issued a lengthy address to the members of the General Committee through the newspapers.

On the 21st of August the rooms of the Committee, on Sacramento street, were thrown open to the admission of the public, and for three days were visited by an incredible number of ladies and gentlemen.

At the Democratic primary election, on the 22d of August, in this city, nearly all the candidates who succeeded were known opponents of the Vigilance Committee; this is accounted for by the fact that the people generally have made up their minds to throw parties overboard this election, and vote for the Reform Ticket. Few cared, therefore, to vote or take part in the Democratic primary movement.

Highway robberies still continue numerous in the interior of our State.

On the 23d August, the District Attorney of this county informed the Court of Sessions that there were no prisoners then confined in the county jail awaiting sentence.

On Monday, 25th, six men were put to labor upon the public streets, in chains, as a punishment for crime. This is the first chain gang ever known in this city since the organization of the municipality under the State Constitution. The measure is having a most beneficial effect.

The Supreme Court of the State met again on Monday, 25th of August, Chief Justice Murray and Associate Justice Terry upon the bench. A number of cases were decided.

The Republican State Convention was held in Sacramento on the 27th and 28th of August. Nominations were made for a full State ticket.

A grand sail boat regatta took place in our harbor on Sunday, the 1st September. Twenty-six boats were entered. The run was from Vallejo street wharf down to Fort Point and back. The Star of the South won the first prize—fifty dollars, and a new suit of sails.

A fire occurred on the morning of September 1st, at Martinez, destroying eleven buildings valued at $25,000.

The Grand Jury for the U. S. Circuit Court have indicted John L. Darkee and Charles E. Rand, the men who took the State arms from off the sloop in the bay by order of the Vigilance Committee, on the charge of piracy. Both these men are now in prison—a motion to admit to bail having been refused. This matter has created no little excitement.

The American party held their State Nominating Convention on the 2d, 3d and 4th September, at Sacramento. There were present a very large number of delegates. The following ticket was nominated: For Congressmen, J. Whitman, of Solano; A. H. Dimble, of Nevada. For Clerk of Supreme Court, A. Skinker, of Sacramento. For Superintendent of Public Instruction, Henry H. Janes, of San Francisco. For Presidential Electors, Baile Peyton, of San Francisco; J. L. Pitzer, of Trinity; R. N. Wood, of Amador; and O. C. Hall, of Sierra. For Alternates, C. D. Temple, of Colusi; J. Winston, of Plumas; J. M. Williams, of Santa Cruz; and Manuel Castro, of San Louis Obispo.

We extract the following from the summary of the Alta Californian of the 5th:

Mining, the great leading interest of our State, is, as a general thing, in a prosperous condition. This is especially the case upon the rivers; which, owing to the unusual drought, are lower than ever before. This, while it cuts short the supply of those dependent upon ditches, facilitates operations in the beds of the streams, which are being conducted on a more extensive scale than during any preceding year. The yield from this source will be immense before the close of the season; especially should the rains hold off late. The working of quartz, although not always attended with success, is, as a whole, satisfactory, and the prospect encouraging. In many parts of the country but little can be done for want of water. Works supplying this want are in great demand, and offer the best opportunities for investment. In fact, we know of no other kind of improvement that holds forth such inducements to capitalists; it being safe, permanent and profitable. We hope the moneyed men of the East, and elsewhere, will turn their attention to this new and extensive field of investment.

Highway robberies, of the most daring character, are matters of daily occurrence in the interior of the State. We scarcely open an exchange from that quarter, but it contains one or more accounts of some fresh outrage of this kind, often accompanied with the shedding of blood, and sometimes with the loss of life. The increase of this particular crime is owing in part, no doubt, to the great number of rascals driven out of this city by the Vigilance Committee, and in part to the stringency of the times; leaving no other resource to the gambling and thieving gentry than to engage in honest work, or to go upon the road. The former alternative being out of the question, they adopt the latter, by force of necessity.

As the Camptonville stage was on its way to Marysville last week, with a large amount of treasure belonging to one of the Express Companies, and a full load of passengers, it was stopped by a gang of highwaymen, who, drawing their pistols, ordered the passengers not to make any resistance at the peril of their lives. One of the Express messengers, however, at once commenced firing on the rascals, which led to a general engagement, during which some twenty shots were discharged. Two of the passengers were wounded—one, a woman, dangerously. Some of the assailants also were wounded, but how many or how severely, could not be ascertained, as they fled, making their escape on horseback. They were pursued, but as yet they have not been overtaken.

Later from Central America.

By the arrival of the steamship Empire City we have dates from Nicaragua as late as the 30th ult., and from Panama and Aspinwall to the 19th inst.

Nicaragua Intelligence.

We extract the following summary of Nicaragua Intelligence from our files of the Nicaraguense:

President Walker gave his first levee on the 9th ult. The assembly was quite large and included members of nearly all the old Spanish families residing in the city, together with several American ladies. The representatives of the fair sex of the two races met for the first time at this levee, and seemed mutually pleased with each other. In describing this affair, the Nicaraguense, of the 16th ult., says: At about half-past 8 o'clock the military band began to play, and that any of the music might not be lost a quadrille party was shortly on the floor. The dancing continued until about 11 o'clock, and was participated in by the natives as well as the others, when the party retired to partake of an excellent lunch. The people retired at midnight. The President did not dance much, to the regret of many present, but confined himself to agreeable conversation with all who sought the honor of his company.

On the 13th of August the Cubans in the Nicaragua service commemorated, by a supper, the gallant victory gained by Gen. Lopez over the Spanish troops, at Las Pozas, Cuba, in which he had defeated seven hundred Spaniards, under Gen. Enna, with but two hundred and fifty Cubans. Gen. Walker was present at the dinner, and there were a great many patriotic toasts drank, the most significant among which was the following, given by Lieut. Col. Laine: "The hope of Cuba—Gen. Walker."

The Nicaraguense, of the above mentioned date, publishes a long inventory of cacao haciendas, stock ranches and dwelling houses in the cities of Rivas and Granada, which have been confiscated by the government. Among others we notice the haciendas of Patricio Rivas and sons.

Capt. Bradley, of the Isthmus Rangers, during the early part of August, seized nineteen wagons loaded with cacao, together with twenty-one mules, which belonged to the Costa Ricans. This property was, as a matter of course, confiscated by the Government.

The first American marriage that has taken place at Nicaragua came off at Granada on the 21st ult. The parties were Col. Alexander Jones and Mrs. Mary H. Musgrove, and the ceremony was performed by Col. J. H. Wheeler, U. S. Minister.

About 150 recruits for the army arrived at Granada on the 20th ult.; the majority of them were from San Francisco.

HACIENDAS FOR SALE.—The Nicaraguense of the 23d ult., says:

In the course of three months the estates which have been forfeited to the Government in the various parts of the country, will be sold to the highest bidder for cash or military script. The greater part of them are in good condition, and those most out of repair will require but a small outlay to put them in order. Many of the haciendas have been kept in repair of late by the Government, on account of the valuable crops of cacao which they are constantly producing. A large number of the cacao estates are capable of producing at the present time a revenue of from one to five thousand dollars per month, and this, with not much greater expense than what would pay the interest on such per annum. The haciendas range in value from one thousand to one hundred thousand dollars, but will not in all probability, bring anything like what they are worth. Some of them may be irrigated by never-failing streams of water, which, by art and nature have been made to run through almost their entire extent. There are buildings already erected upon them, in which the laborers can live, and on several are edifices fit for the residence of princes.

People who have never lived in a country like this cannot form any idea of the beauty of a well-cultivated farm here, nor can they form any conception of their productiveness. Here there is a perpetual summer, and a never ceasing reproduction of crops. The country yields abundantly all kinds of fruits and grains, and labor is much cheaper here than in any other part of the world where wages are paid for a day's hire. A man expending a few thousand dollars in the purchase of a farm in Nicaragua may sit down the remainder of his life, as, from the natural productiveness of the soil the yield is most abundant, even where no more labor is applied than what is necessary to scatter the seeds over the surface of the ground.

TRADE.—Speaking of trade, that paper of the same date says that mercantile matters seem to be reviving in the most satisfactory manner, and those who are willing to receive accepted orders on the Government treasury, soon dispose of all their goods.

We say those who are willing to accept government paper, for it must be considered that it is not every merchant who can afford to wait two or three weeks for his money. However, there is no want of confidence in any department of trade; and the merchants generally speak of doing a tolerably fine business. Clothing, boots and good household goods are mostly in demand at present, with good prices. Groceries and provisions are scarce in the market, in fact, we may say there are none for sale. The Government is a ready purchaser for all such supplies, and any importations which may come into the State will meet with prompt and profitable returns. Liquors, with the exception of aguardiente, meet with a poor sale at present. The establishment of a regular line of steamers, and the starting of a line of schooners to coast about the lake and transport produce from the islands, will have a still greater effect to increase the business of this port.

Don Pedro Eugenio Selva, a very accomplished gentleman, has been appointed attache to the Nicaraguan Minister in the United States.

A new paper has been started at Massaya, under the management of Lieut. St. Levy, formerly of this city.

THE HON. PIERRE SOULE.—The Nicaraguense of the 30th ult. has the following paragraph relating to that gentleman:

We learn that the Hon. Pierre Soule returns to the United States by the next steamer. We would regret this much were it not that we infer from his purchase of the Mercedes Incienda that he will shortly make Nicaragua his place of permanent residence.

SCHLESINGER AGAIN.—This notorious traitor and coward has written a proclamation which he has caused to be circulated among the soldiers of Walker's army. This document is published in full in the Nicaraguensa of the 30th. In it he advises his late comrades to follow his example and desert Walker's cause, and accuses Walker of treachery and murder, etc., etc. It is just such a document as might be expected from Schlesinger, and has had no effect.

President Walker has established a judicial tribunal called the Court of First Instance. The following gentlemen have been appointed its officers, says the Nicaraguense, of the 30th:

Judge, Hon. Thomas Bayes; Clerk, O. G. Venable; Deputy Clerk, A. H. Wheeler; Marshal, W. S. Stone; Deputy Marshal, C. W. Lamb. Members of the Bar—Capt. M. A. Fraser; Col. J. A. Jacques; Lieut. J. T. Coleman; Col. E. J. Sanders; John Tabor, Henry C. Cook, Mr. H. Kane, and Mr. Titus.

THE LATE TRANSIT COMPANY.—President Walker issued the following decree on the 26th ultimo:

Whereas, it has been well and duly ascertained by the commissioners appointed under the Decree of 19th of February last past, that the late Accessory Transit Company is indebted to the Republic of Nicaragua in a sum exceeding three hundred thousand dollars; and

Whereas, by a fair and just valuation of the movable property of the late Transit Company, consisting for the most part of steamers on the lake and river, said property does not exceed in value the sum of two hundred thousand dollars: and

Whereas, the late Accessory Transit Company has, for the last six months, either abandoned its property or attempted to place it in the power of the enemies of the State; therefore, in virtue of the authority in me vested, it is decreed:

Article 1. All the steamers and other moveable property within the territories of the State are hereby declared to be the property of the Republic of Nicaragua; and the Receiver appointed by the commissioners is ordered to take and retain possession of the same in the name of the Republic.

Art. 2. The Receiver shall return to the Minister of Relations a true and correct account and inventory of all property administered by him and taken into possession for the State.

Another decree, dated the day following, announces that the above-mentioned property had been sold to Messrs. Charles Morgan and Cornelius K. Garrison for the sum of $100,000 in cash, and orders the officer who has it in charge to deliver the possession of the same to the agent of said Morgan & Garrison, together with the free travel of the macadamized road between San Juan del Sur and Virgin Bay.

THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.—The Panama Star and Herald, of the 18th inst., has the following summary of the preceding fortnight's news on the Isthmus:

The past fortnight has been one of greater excitement in Panama than we have had for several years. The State Legislature met on the 1st inst., not so much for the purpose of regulating the affairs of the State as for settling personal quarrels among the members, and, from the commencement of the session up to the present time, scarcely any real business has been done.

On the 9th a law was passed by the opposition party to prevent the election of a new Governor at the time provided by the Constitution, with the object of getting their candidate, whom they had nominated as Vice-Governor, to fill the office. This was protested against by the Ministerial party, and opposed by the present Governor on the ground of its being unconstitutional, and a petition was drawn up and signed by numerous citizens to be presented to the Assembly on the 14th inst., together with the Governor's objections to the bill, praying that it might be cancelled.

In order, however, to avoid the presentation of those documents, the opposition members would not attend the House on that day, which so enraged the friends of the Ministry, that they talked of carrying their object by force if necessary.

This led to the belief that we would be favored with a general fight on the 15th, and consequently a great deal of excitement and consternation prevailed among our citizens. Every one who did not leave the city was armed, stores were closed, houses barricaded and in fact there was a general stampede. The United States vessels of war in the harbor were ready at a moment's notice to punish any attempt that might be made to attack their countrymen residing here, and the whole affair ended in smoke.

The President of the Assembly, Mariano Arosemena, who is the ringleader of the opposition party, fearing the results, fled the city, seeking refuge on board the St. Mary's, and his followers were kept in out-of-the

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1856.

Personal.—The Editor has got to his work, after a two weeks pretty hard spell of bilious remittent fever. This is his apology for neglecting his personal correspondence: Especially of those friends who have invited him to camp and protracted meetings.

Health of City.—Dr. Baldwin, the polite Secretary of the Board of Health, has furnished the detailed report of last week, which we publish elsewhere. Quarantine has been raised. Everything and body wears a healthy air. The morning of October 1 was rosy and crisp. Mercury at 46. Some early risers profess to have seen frost.

NEW ORLEANS SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

To our pleasant astonishment we saw, on Tuesday, the building nearly finished off. It is a tall building, 50 by 76 feet, admirably adapted to its purpose, and an architectural ornament to the city. The lecture rooms will accommodate 250 students or more. A Dispensary, a new and much needed thing, is arranged for, where the poor and those not ready to lie up in the Hospital, can have medicines prescribed and given them. One or two students will serve their turn each week as druggists. The dissecting room gives one the horrors at the contrast between its airiness and gas light—and its purposes!

The building, when stuccoed, will be of the appearance of brown stone. Right across the street is the Charity Hospital, where disease in all its forms may be seen. We know of no place in the States offering such advantages to students of medicine as New Orleans.—Students begin to find it out, and we trust another College will have to be built for their accommodation. The science, more than any other is local, and ought to be got where it is to be practiced.

Dr. Fenner, the Dean of the able faculty, showed us through the apartments, and pointed out their designs—not omitting liberal arrangements for a Museum. The lectures will open by 17th November, though as the city is very healthy and there are some preliminary instructions, students would do well to be on hand by the middle of October.

Death of Rev. J. Hughes.—Rev. R. Trippett writes, September 16th: "I have just heard of the death of Rev. Jeptha Hughes, a supernumerary preacher of the Louisiana Conference. He died on Bastrop Circuit, last week."

Funeral of Rev. J. Twitchell.—On Sunday afternoon last, Rev. N. G. North preached an appropriate funeral discourse. It was by request of the Presbyterian Church on Felton street, Fourth District, where Mr. T. had long officiated. The house could not contain the crowd that came to hear. It was affecting to hear of the difficulties and afflictions of that church, organized in 1843. All of its ruling and teaching Elders are dead. Yet the church lives, and we hope will have heart and faith to go on, and that God may prosper them greatly.

Our "K" Letters.—In behalf of our readers we thank Bishop Kavanaugh for his favors, so racily descriptive of California life and manners. A church can hardly fail, pushed on by such working preachers as he introduces us to this week.

And while Bishop K. brings us face to face with the new of the new world, "Our fayre lady K." does the same with the old of the old world.

Florence Wesleyan University.—See the Advertisement. The facts therein given speak for themselves. It is far beyond the line of an experiment. Our "Florentine" correspondent has been idle sometime. We hope she will renew. We understand the absence of the dormitory system works well.—Citizens of every class open their houses for boarding students—even the wealthiest who do not need it as an economy, do it for the sake of the cause.

Liberality.—Our Presbyterian friends who have been struggling to sustain Oakland College near Rodney, Miss., have got a lift—timely and strong. They deserved it well. We see a paragraph in the Mississippi papers that David Hunt of Jefferson county has made lately a donation of $50,000. Would there were more such men in every church.

Believe firmly, hope joyfully, love fervently, pray earnestly, walk humbly, work diligently, and wait quietly, and all this will be graciously considered.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

Human Physiology, Statistical and Dynamical, or the conditions and course of the Life of Man, by John W. Draper, M. D., LL. D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York. Harper & Bros., N. Y.

The ample field of the phenomena of organized life has of late years been cultivated with extraordinary diligence and success by the Naturalists of every country; and an immense store of facts has been amassed by the combined labors of different classes of philosophers during many ages. The magnitude of the task of producing a treatise on Physiology within readable limits is increased by the success of those previous efforts. The abundant material which the writer has had to manage can be seen by running the pages rapidly through the fingers. The modern improvements of optical science have revealed the secrets of the structure of the most diminutive objects of creation. And while the microscope has pushed the investigations of science to the farthest edges of matter, the photograph has recorded its observations with the impartial accuracy of light.—It is in this photographic record of the discoveries of the microscope, consisting of three hundred plates, that this work, we imagine, surpasses all of the the kind that have preceded it.

The elements of the inorganic world are few, and the combinations they present in most cases are easily unraveled; but living nature is characterized everywhere by boundless variety, complexity, and a perpetual mutation. We can hope to comprehend the nature of the subtle and pervading principle, by the agency of which all these wonderful phenomena of life are produced only from the successful cultivation of the science of physiology. It is in the treatment of this branch of his subject that we think Mr. Draper has placed himself beside Roget, Paley and other eminent writers who have traced through the manifest evidences of design these phenomena to their final cause, the Creator. By the lucid discussion one can almost see the fine points of matter where the soul and the body come together; where the impressions are made upon the material substance of man by his own extraneous intellect. But we must let the work speak for itself:

Throughout this work I have constantly assumed the existence of an intellectual principle, spirit, or soul, whose links of connection with the external world are the sensory ganglia and the cerebral hemispheres. We may now profitably inquire whether any argument in behalf of the existence of such agent may be gathered from the anatomical and physiological facts just presented or whether we must assume it as a postulate relying for proof on evidences of a totally different character to those which are presented by the science now engaging our attention. It is to be greatly regretted that evidence drawn from structural arrangement has hitherto, by very high authority, either been totally cast aside or held in very light esteem. It is still more deeply to be regretted that those who should have known better have conceded the argument that from no consideration based upon anatomical or structural arrangement could proof be obtained of the existence of an immaterial principle. Even by such, the study of physiology has been designated as leading to materialism, and, with an injustice which can not be too emphatically reprobated, the scandal has often been quoted, that where there are three physicians there are two atheists.

But what if it should turn out that, from the study of the cerebral mechanism, distinct proof can be obtained on this point—proof of just as cogent a nature in support of the doctrine of the existence of the soul as that which we have of the existence of the external world, and of precisely the same character.

Given the nature of light, to determine what must necessarily be the construction of the organ of vision; or, Given the construction of the eye, to determine what is the nature of light; and the same might be said of the organ of hearing. This inverse method of treating natural agents is still in its infancy, because of the extreme imperfection of our knowledge; but doubtless what has been said will recall to the mind of the reader the parallel example which is furnished by astronomy, and which, within a few years past, has yielded such a splendid result. The mass of a planet being known, the perturbations which it can cause in another are capable of direct computation, but it was reserved for Leverrier to discuss the inverse problem, and from the perturbations to find the place of the planet. The discovery of Neptune was the result.

Now the problem we are dealing with is of this inverse kind. It may be stated, Given the structure of the cerebrum, to determine the nature of the agent that sets it in action. And herein the fact which chiefly guides us is the absolute analogy in construction between the elementary arrangement of the cerebrum and any nervous arc. In it we plainly recognise the centripetal and centrifugal fibres, and their convergence to the sensory ganglia, the corpus striatum and optic thalamus; we notice the vesicular material at their external periphery as presented in the convolutions of the human brain; and if in other nervous arcs the structure is merely automatic, and can display no phenomena of itself, but requires the influence of an external agent—if the optical apparatus be inert and without value save under the influences of light—if the auditory apparatus yields no result save under the impression of sound—since there is between these structures and the elementary structure of the cerebrum a perfect analogy, we are entitled to come to the same conclusion in this instance as in those, and, asserting the absolute inertness of the cerebral structure in itself, to impute the phenomena it displays to an agent as perfectly external to the body and as independent of it as are light and sound, and that agent is the soul.

We are more than ever convinced that the truth of Revelation has nothing to fear from science. It is in the reign of ignorance and imperfect science that doubt maintains her strongest hold. She seems most threatening in the Dendera and Esneh wastes of discovery, where the dim zodiac affords to French savans and their followers an occasion for objecting against the Divine revelation, by investing with a preposterous antiquity a temple of the reign of Claudius! The successful conquests of science are the march of faith.

Memoirs of Celebrated Characters: By Lamartine: Harper & Bros, 1856.

This is the third volume and with the picturesque variety of Lamartine sets forth Tell, Autar, Madame De Servigne, Milton and Bossuet! Each a representative character. Bossuet is his model Priest—"could have been nothing but a priest—born a high-priest—not a man but an oracle." Is not the reader satisfied? We are.

Signs of the Times: Letters to Arnst on the dangers to religious liberty in the present state of the world; by Bunsen: translated from the German by Susanna Winkworth: Harper & Bros, 1856.

In these familiar letters to a friend Bunsen sums up the case, rather gloomily, between freedom of conscience and persecution—gives the retrograde forces and the progressive. His observations are on a wide field—Christian Europe, and he gives dates, incidents and characteristic facts—"signs of the times." He says, "It is now the atmosphere if not the era of 1617." In Germany, Italy, France, and even England, he sees bad signs. The spirit of coercion and restraint now growing "must lead to religious wars which will overthrow or shake to their foundations many thrones lending themselves to it." He is grieved as a politician, a philosopher, and a christian, at the attitude Lutheranism is taking towards sects and schismatics—denying its own principles, and yielding to that intolerance which is latent in every organization whose human selfishness is not counteracted by true religion. The party headed by Professor Stahl and the transactions of the Kirchentag of 1853 against Baptists and Methodists, he severely reprobates.

The Old Regime and the Revolution: By De Tocqueville; Translated by John Bonner: Harper & Bros, 1856.

The causes and objects of the Revolution—its religious element—what was really achieved—How irreligion got to be a ruling passion of Frenchmen and its influence upon the revolution. These points indicate the scope of the philosophical Essayist who thinks the present Franco has more of the ideas and spirit and habits of the old ante-revolutionary France, than is generally supposed.

Modern Greece: By H. M. Baird: Harper & Bros, 1856.

The past Greece, with its renown and traditions, obscures the present. Yet there is a Greece now—with the old language slightly modified—having their university and trade—religious rites—and strongly marked social habits; living on the old domain—in the old houses and towns.

For the fathers' sake they must be honored. Mr. Baird passed sometime there as a student—took his time in walking over the ruins. Gives us the living, breathing generation with a back ground of broken columns and mouldering temples. There are sixty wood cut illustrations. We have been much interested in the work. It is in plain narrative style, unambitious (something rare on such a soil and subject) and as full of news as a book on Central America.

The Mystery of Evil and Good: By J. Young, L. L. D. (Edin.) Philadelphia: Lippincott & Co. 1856.

Another wrestle with the old question—how came evil into God's world and how is it to be reconciled with his attributes? Mr. Young takes an Arminian view of the will and holds it consistently, and gives us more satisfaction than his predecessors. The Edwards' view he brands as absurd and in its consequences blasphemous.

The conditions called for an intelligent, moral, responsible being. All created intelligence is necessarily fallible. Moral evil, not from any limitation of Divine power or goodness, but in its own nature and from the essential constitution of a responsible being, was irrerentible. The intelligent being may be blotted out—but continuing to be what he is, his will cannot be necessitated—the prevention of its abuse is therefore impossible. We do the author the justice of quoting a few sentences—pp. 205-6:

"Is there a limit to the power of the Almighty? Can His own creature successfully withstand him?—That inscrutable mystery, a human will, the power of choosing for himself, with which the human being is endowed by his Maker, is this able to resist the Most High? Hath He, in this, created a faculty which even He cannot compel?

It must be suggested that if even this were the case, it would involve no limitation of the Divine power. Omnipotence, potence, of whatever kind, finite or infinite, has no relation to the action of the will. We might as well doubt the force of an argument because it could not raise a weight from the ground, as think to detract from physical strength because it can have no effect on a moral principle. In his Almightiness God could in a moment quench the light of reason and of conscience, extinguish the will, annihilate the being. But his power over the will, as an active principle, cannot be physical, but must be moral; that is to say, it can be exerted only through the conscience, the understanding and the affections. The very utmost power which can be exerted through these channels must belong to him, but the very utmost power of this kind, we have already found, cannot necessitate a choice."

Perhaps some will still ask, "If moral evil be simply the abuse of moral power, might not the exercise of this power by man, have been placed within such conditions and under such protections as to have rendered its abuse impossible?" To which our author would answer:

"No thinking person imagines that it is any way derogatory to the Most High that he cannot effect impossibilities—cannot make a square a triangle or a triangle a square. These things do not belong to the sphere of power. * * The necessitation of the will from without is an impossibility, a contradiction in the very nature of the thing; it is destroyed, it no longer exists, if it be necessitated. No limitation therefore of the power of God is involved in the fact that even He cannot necessitate the will; for He Himself has so constituted it that it does not admit of being necessitated. * * Moral power continuing (that is intelligent, moral, voluntary beings existing,). He could not from the very necessity of its nature, have prevented its abuse."

Notwithstanding, it is held and abundantly shown that God sets himself against moral evil, and is directing the physical evils which are its consequences to its restraint and correction, besides a vast moral machinery at once the admiration of men and angels, and the occasion of displaying his glorious attributes.

Who may Marry?---Query.

Mr. Editor:—Is an unordained Local Preacher in the Methodist E. Church, authorized by the Church to perform the marriage ceremony? If not authorized, does the Church on the other hand forbid it, and does such Local Preacher become liable to censure for performing the said ceremony? Please give such information, upon the subject as you may be able, and thus enlighten many ENQUIRERS.

The Editor is not the authorized expounder of law. But an answer may be given to the above, as Bishop Capers used to say, without going behind a door or into a corner. Whether Local or Traveling, if a preacher be unordained, the Church gives him no authority to solemnize the rites of matrimony. It appertaineth to the office of a Deacon—ordained and not merely elect—to none under that.—Other practice would be confusion, ecclesiastically and civilly.

We should suppose any preacher, Local or Traveling, liable to severe censure, who should, without authority from his church, intrude himself into such offices. If he be a Magistrate as well as Preacher, that alters the case. In this State, marriage licenses are directed to "any authorized minister of the gospel, etc." A person presuming to perform the marriage ceremony as a minister, but without authority in that character, would lay himself liable to the civil authorities as well as to Church Discipline.

PANOPTICS AND ACOUSTICS.

BEST SHAPED ROOMS FOR SPEAKING AND HEARING.

This is a matter so important in its bearing on strained lungs and strained ears, the wonder is that more attention has not been given it. The construction of churches calls for the aid of science. At the meeting of scientific men at Albany, New York, Prof. Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, read a paper on the science of sound, as applied to the construction of buildings for public purposes. It is a learned paper, investigating the whole theory of the reflection of sounds, and the proper shapes of rooms to be used for public speaking. He has applied the result of his investigations to the construction of a new lecture room in the Smithsonian Institution, a description of which is given in his lecture, and which may serve to illustrate the leading ideas to which he has arrived.

The room is in the second story, one hundred feet in length; and by occupying part of the towers a width has been secured of seventy five feet. The ceiling is twenty-five feet high, smooth and unbroken, with the exception of an oval opening above to admit light on the platform. It thus powerfully reflects the sound of the speaker's voice to the hearers, and being so low, this reflection blends with the original sound and simply re-enforces it:

The general form of the room is fan shaped, the speaker being near the handle of the fan, on one side of the room. The walls behind and near him are smooth lath and plaster, giving a powerful, but short resonance, which simply strengthens his voice. Not being parallel they produce no reverberation, but send the sound out from the speaker to increase the volume of his voice until it reaches the farthest part of the gallery. The multitude of surfaces directly in front of the speaker—gallery, pillars, stair screens, and the seats, or the audience—utterly prevent reverberation there. The seats are curved, so that each spectator faces the platform; and the floor is also curved, so that the back seats rise above the front—not quite so much as he wished, and as is required by the panoptic curve of Prof. Bache, but as much as the size of the room would allow. The gallery is in the form of a horse shoe.

The architecture of this room is due to Capt. Alexander, of the corps of Topographical Engineers, who varied his plans until the required conditions of theory were as nearly as possible fulfilled.

Happy Crickets.—The North Carolina Christian Advocate in noticing and commending generally Dr. Cross's "Head lands of Faith," puts in the following but:

"In noticing books, we intend to keep good faith with the public; and we therefore advert to certain defects in this volume which might be easily removed in future editions. While the argument in every chapter is clear, strong, elegant and convincing, the fine passages, the exhortations after the sermons, if you please, are quite overdone. A specimen of what we mean is found on page 18. It is toward the close of an admirable chapter on "The Supreme Existence," by which the author means The Existence of God. He says, "The bird sings to Him among the branches, and the cricket answers 'Hallelujah' from the hearth." It strikes us that if the cricket did get so high as that, he would disturb the repose of the family, and provoke the purchase of certain specifics which are said to be death to cockroaches and other domestic insects.

REVIVALS.

Waterproof, La., September 16, 1856.

Assisted by Brother Riley and local brethren of Boeuff Prairie Circuit, we commenced a meeting at Winsborough, Saturday, 13th inst. The citizens generally assisted in making preparations, by fitting up in real camp-meeting style (except tents) in a beautiful holly grove in the edge of the village. The pulpit was neat and well constructed. The seats comfortable and commodious.—The altar large and well arranged, and in the absence of straw and moss, pine bushes or tops supplied us with a neat substitute.

The size and attention of the congregation on Saturday indicated that a deep interest was felt for the success of the meeting.

At the intermission we found that in the supplies furnished us well as preparations made, the citizens shared the excessive without regard to their religious preferences or business pursuits. The venders of ardent spirits closed their houses, and were with us on the consecrated ground, and people of town and country mingled together as one family. It was not strange that God should own and bless his word under such circumstances, and indeed I may say the truth, it was one of the best meetings we have had on the District this year. Other and indispensable duties compelled me to leave Monday, after the morning services.—Up to that time thirty-seven persons had joined the church, and many had professed faith in Christ. The meeting was continued by Brother Riley, assisted by local brethren and Brother Straten of the Presbyterian Church.—May God grant them abundant success.

Yours in Christ,

N. A. CRAVENS.

Brandon, Miss., September 23, 1856.

I am gratified to report to the friends of religion and Methodism especially, that in almost every part of Mississippi the most gracious revival influences are abroad. I have been for three weeks past with H. J. Harris, P. E. of Sharon District, attending his quarterly meetings. At every appointment we were blessed with a gracious work.—These meetings I suppose he will report, but one or two facts connected with his quarterly meeting for Starkville Circuit, he may not report, and as they are a little out of the common order of things I state them here. The meeting was held at a little wildwood village, Silvani in Oaktobbeha counties, just on the border here between the Memphis and Mississippi conferences. The Methodist having no house of worship here, our Baptist brethren gave us theirs.

The meeting was continued for ten days, and when forced by engagements at other points to close, the interest was unabated. Our Baptist friends joined heartily with us, and many were converted. Several members of the Baptist Church came to the mourner's bench as seekers of religion, and were happily converted, declaring that they had never before experienced religion, though for years in the church. I may mention one case in particular. The daughter of the Baptist minister, long a member of that church, was most powerfully awakened, and after seeking earnestly, with "strong cries and tears and groans," was gloriously converted. For once the Methodists had to yield the palm to the members of another branch of the church for loud shouting. The experiences were marvelously strange to many, to see such perfect reunion between the members of the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches, and stranger still than all that old members of another church should come to the altar enquiring the way of salvation. We have been often ridiculed for receiving unconverted persons into our church, but it seems that others have to plead guilty to the same impropriety. Of the converts at this place twenty-seven joined our church, as many others perhaps will join the Baptists, and a few the Presbyterian Church.

I am now laboring in a wonderful revival meeting in Branden. A meeting held for a week four miles from this place, at which there were fifty-seven converts, was adjourned to the church here, and has been progressing about twelve days. Almost every family in the village has been reached by the revival influence—all classes seem deeply concerned, and scores are seeking with penitential tears and earnest prayers the pearl of great price. Nearly fifty have joined our church, and about the same number have been converted. The meeting will be continued for another week and you shall hear of the final results.

Yours truly, H. T. LEWIS.

Monroe and Ouachita Circuit, La. Con. Sept. 16

I am pleased to inform you that we have just closed a very interesting quarterly meeting at Chapel Hill. The Lord was present to convict sinners and convert mourners. About twenty-five were justified, and many of the followers of Jesus were much revived and encouraged to press onward to the land of rest.

We had twenty-three accessions to the M. E. Church, South, and among them two old men upwards of seventy years of age.

We commenced on Saturday, September 6th, and continued from day to day until Sunday evening, the 14th.—Brother Sanders was with us the two first days doing good service—(very sorry he had to leave so soon.)

Brother Hodge and myself continued the meeting until its close. Many were in attendance from a distance, and I never saw congregations so solemn and attentive—convictions so deep and frequent—conversions so clear and powerful. The congregations meet early each day with baskets of provisions to last till night. The services were opened with a prayer meeting, then a short sermon was preached, after which the auxions were invited to the altar—then conversation, prayer and praise continued until one o'clock. Then we had an hour for refreshment and general religious conversation. Like exercises were continued at evening and also at night.

It was in deed and truth a glorious time. The meeting was marked throughout with an unusual manifestation of Divine power, and a solemn and holy influence is moving upon the minds of the people. Brothers Dr. Young, Williams and others labored with much acceptability.

We trust the way of the Lord is being prepared, and a wider and more effectual door opened for the word of eternal life. While we pray thy kingdom come, let heaven rejoice and earth be glad. To God be all the glory.

We are laboring and looking for greater manifestations of God's converting grace. Pray for us that God may send us a gracious revival this year, for it is much needed in Monroe and Trenton. REYNOLDS TRIPPETT.

Webster, Miss., September 16, 1856.

We have just closed a protracted meeting at Webster, Lonisville Circuit, at which God's presence was gloriously seen and felt among the people. Our meeting continued nine days—fifty-seven were added to the church, forty-two whites and fifteen blacks, and a goodly number were happily converted. The membership were much revived, and some who had grown cold were renewed in their first love. Brother Morehead, a local preacher, was with us all the time and preached with power. Dr. Glenn, the last day of the meeting preached a big sermon. Brothers Ames, Glenn and Mason all preached with power, and God blessed us. The good people of Webster were kind and supported the meeting well.

MINISTERIAL SECULARIZATION.

The resignation of Rev. J. Evans of his place as one of the Book Agents carries with it a practical protest of the ministerial conscience against secularization, that, we trust, will be awakening and valuable in its results. He talks like a book, in the following which we extract from his letter of explanation to the Southern Christian Advocate. Hear him, ye that are up to your eyes in serving tables and ye that wish to be. While laymen could do the work as well or better, and leave you free to go and preach the gospel:—

No, my brother, let none misjudge in this matter. The ease and honors of my position have been presented as considerations to remain. But the voice of God sounded in my ears from day to day, "go preach my gospel." I believe in a divine call to the ministry. And that God has separated me from secular business to this work. You speak correctly when you say that "he could not bring his conscience to feel that he should so far secularize himself, as to give all his time to book publishing and selling."—This is the point with me. The work of the Book Agency is almost entirely a financial business from morning till night, and from Monday till Saturday.—The Book Editor should be a minister. He presides over the Theology and Literature of the Church. Moreover his reading falls in the line of his ministerial studies, and furnishes him with matter for the pulpit; so with the Editor of a religious newspaper. But the Agents have to consider the financial bearing of the whole question. Will the book sell? What sort of paper, binding and type shall it be put in to make it take? How stands the stock of material, the stock of books on hand? Is there anything with which to pay that Bank note, that draft, that account? Do the men in the various departments attend to their business correctly, etc., etc. These, and a thousand other matters occupy his mind all the time. And while at it from day to day, the voice of God has peeled upon me like sevenfold thunder, "what doest thou here Elijah?" Cannot a Layman, never called to preach, do this work better than you can? I cannot forbear to add that I think our policy wrong on this subject.

Perseverence.—Hold up, hold on, hold out, hold fast that which you have received; still watch, still pray, still believe; fight and run, that you may obtain; 'tis but a little while, and he that comes will come, and will not tarry; 'tis but a little while, and your warfare is accomplished, and your iniquities shall be everlastingly separated from you"; your sin and sorrows, tears and fears, fled and gone, gone forever; and you meet with an unspeakable reward.

Revision of the Rituals of the M. E. Church.—The superintendents have appointed, in accordance with the action of the last General Conference, the following committee to revise the rituals of the Church: John M'Clintock, Chas. Elliot, Francis Hodgson, David Patten, F. G. Hibbard.

It matters not who are our accusers if Christ be our advocate.

THE BANKING SYSTEM OF LOUISIANA.

The Louisiana State Bank.

Perhaps there is not a better devised system of banking in the world than that engrafted on the statutes of Louisiana; so well defined, so well conceived in its original conception, so many checks, so many restraints, so many curbs, on immoderate and over-banking were never embraced in any banking law within our recollection. No individual did more towards incorporating the banking law of 1842, than the late Albert Hoa, representing the parish of Orleans in the legislature of Louisiana.

When the act reviving the charters of the banks of this State was under debate before the Legislature many of our oldest bankers and financiers expressed great doubts that it would be of any utility or that any in our city could perform the functions of banking under its provisions. Time and experience have proved, what then, (in 1842,) was deemed theoretical and illusive, to be one of the most admirable and beneficial statutes that was ever enacted by any assembly for commercial, financial or social purposes.

The most happy results have followed the movements of the banks working under this law. The most prominent features of its requirements are that every bank must keep on hand, at all times, in specie alone, an amount equal to one-third of its circulation, deposites and other cash liabilities; the other two-thirds to be represented in satisfactory paper or for change, payable in full within ninety days. A loan of currency to consist of three persons was also organized by the statute, which is still in force, though greatly modified.

Under the provisions of the act only four banks of sixteen then trying to do business in our city could comply and carry on business, and others paid in conducting the financial operations of the great emporium. These four banks were the Louisiana State Bank, the Bank of Louisiana, the New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, (or rather the Canal Bank,) and the City Bank.

We propose giving a short sketch of the Louisiana State Bank—the oldest institution in this State, and we believe in the United States, excepting one or two institutions in Philadelphia, and two or three in New York. The charters of those in New York have, however, all expired, and been re-formed or reincorporated under the general banking laws of the State.

The Louisiana State Bank of New Orleans was incorporated by an act of the Legislature, in May, 1818, over thirty-eight years ago, to endure till the year 1870, with a capital of two millions of dollars. Books of subscription were opened on the 15th May, 1818—the terms of subscription being one-fifth in cash or in notes, payable to the Directors at such time as they required—two-fifths in one year after the bank commenced business; the other two-fifths at such time as directed by the Board of Managers. This would be considered a very easy mode of organizing a bank in these times. At the time alluded to, however, banking and stock-jobbing had not become a science.

The terms of the charter required that the bank should establish, specially, five branches in different sections of the country, and also authorized it to increase the number of branches. This clause in the charter grants and sustains the branch now on Carondelet street, and, moreover, the bank has a right to establish another branch in the Third District, the Fourth District, or any where the Directors think proper. However, there is no probability the privilege granted will be used, particularly as country branches of all our banks have proved an incubus. Subsequently the Legislature authorized the bank to close the branches required in the original charter.

The Louisiana State Bank then commenced business in the fall of the year 1818, in the two-story building known as No. — Conti street, between Chartres and Levee streets, under the Presidency of Dusuau De la Croix, and the cashiership of Mr. Reid, the present incumbent of the office, who has faithfully and honorably fulfilled the duties of this time, say nearly thirty-eight years. There but few instances of such unremitting devotion to interests and welfare of an institution so successfully administered; so satisfactory and stringent directed towards the public for so long a period; so much fidelity and faithfulness to stockholders, the general interest of a public institution, as in the present instance by Mr. Reid. During the period of thirty-eight years, we believe he has not sent only one summer, and for sixty-four years has been a permanent resident of our city, and although we now presume him to be about four score years of age, he every week makes out with his own hand a statement of the bank for the Board of Currency required by the law reviving the charters of the banks of the State.

After the retirement of the first President, Mr. Lacroix, which was subsequent to the year 1820, the presidency of the bank was filled by Mr. Bernard Duchamp, (of the house of Duchamp & Kenner, who continued till the fall of 1832, when he fell a victim to the cholera on its first appearance in this section. He was succeeded by Mr. B. S. Cahn, who held the office till 1844, when he was succeeded by Mr. J. B. Vignie, who retained the office till an entire change was made in the direction of the bank, which resulted in placing the late Samuel J. Peters at its head. At this time, say seven years ago, its capital was deficit $221,000.

The energy, zeal, talents and skill of Mr. Peters instilled into it new life, extending its operations, encouraging the timid of its friends and well wishers, adding to its credit, enlarging its sphere of operations, and soon the community and the stockholders had the pleasure of witnessing it take a stand among the soundest, most reliable institutions of the country.

During the last seven years it has made its customers good, paid eleven dividends of five per cent each, and one of four per cent; and has now to the credit of profit and loss account $561,000.—

Since its organization in 1818 it has paid the stockholders sixty-four dividends, amounting in all to eight millions, three hundred and seventy-three thousand eight hundred and sixteen dollars. It must, however, be taken into consideration that the full amount of capital was not paid up for three or four years after it went into active operation.

Of the original branches in the State, which were five, viz: one at St. Francisville, one at St. Mary's ville, one at Donaldsonville, one at Alexandria, one at Baton Rouge, all have been closed except the one at Baton Rouge. This branch has been retained as much for the benefit and convenience of the State as for any other purpose, it being the depository and custodian of the State's money: and it has at times been of very great advantage to the State treasury and the financial interests of the public.

At various periods there have been many reports from the Legislature regarding the branch of the bank in this city. As there is not a shadow of doubt regarding its legality, it is presumed it can give its usefulness to the commercial community without any attempted interference from the action of the Legislature. No person conversant with the thriving trade of our city will deny its great utility, or the great ability in which it is conducted for the general prosperity of our city.

By the terms of the charter the bank is authorized to increase the capital stock four hundred thousand dollars per annum, provided the increase should not enhance its capital stock beyond four millions of dollars. Whether the time has not arrived when permission to increase may not be used to the general welfare and prosperity of our State, is a matter for grave consideration. In our opinion the result of this year's product of sugar will require the attention of the financial interests to some plan of ameliorating that important branch of agriculture, and call into requisition the best intellectual minds the talent and learning of the most influential citizens of our State. New Line of Atlantic Steamers.—The Sonoma, the pioneer of a new line of Atlantic steamers to ply between St. Johns, Halifax, Portland and Liverpool, sailed from Portland, Me., on Tuesday. She is a fine screw steamer, with excellent accommodations, and will carry first class passengers at the charge of $60. The increasing trade between Europe and her American provinces, which will be stimulated by the various internal improvements in progress in the latter, will doubtless give a liberal support to the line, while the low rate of passage and freight will attract considerable patronage from the United States.

☞ The statistical tables of mortality shows a reduction in the country of the proportion of deaths from pulmonary diseases. Dr. Ayer attributes this result to the effect of his Cherry Pectoral. He also asserts that the cures from his Cathartic Pills give reason to believe they will, as they come into more general use, materially reduce the mortality from those particular diseases for which they are designed. From what we know of his preparations, we think he has grounds for his claims, and if he has, it is an attainment of which an Emperor might be proud. Rarely is it permitted any one man to know that his skill is bestowing health and life to the masses of his fellow-men.

Such a reflection is worth working for, even though he had only the reflection for his reward.—[Springfield Courier.

☞ Read This—For all Bowel Diseases. Cholera, Diarrhea, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Constipation and General Debility, we know of nothing better than Dr. HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. One wine glass taken three times each day, before meals, will be a sure cure for all the above diseases, will remove all heaviness from the stomach, keep you free from costiveness, assist digestion, give a good appetite, and impart a healthy tone to the whole system. Every family should keep these Bitters on hand during the summer season as a family medicine. For sale by all principal druggists and dealers generally. 4t 10.

☞ For the benefit of the invalid portion of our community, we extract the following from the Almanac of Dr. C. M. Jackson, proprietor of HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, hoping it may induce a trial of them:

J. C. NILES says:

SHEFFIELD, Ill., March 18, 1855.

I expect to sell great quantities of your Bitters this year. Many of my customers speak very highly of its good qualities, having proved itself most an excellent Fever and Ague preventative, correct purifier of the blood, and the very best thing on record to aid digestion and create a good natural appetite. In short, I am sure it is one of the very best medicines known for family use, being safe and pleasant for any one to take.

C. L. B. CROCKWELL, says:

ASHPOLA, Iowa, May 1, 1851.

The Bitters give unbounded satisfaction to all that have used them, and I myself can always recommend them to all that are afflicted. They have cured many cases of Dyspepsia, some of them where hundreds of dollars have been spent for remedies which afforded no relief, and were considered incurable until they used the Bitters.—Prairieville Herald.

☞ We are pleased to announce to our readers a preparation, one whole sea advertisement in our columns, from that justly celebrated physician and Chemist, Dr. J. C. Ayer. His Cherry Pectoral, everywhere known as the best remedy ever offered to the public for Coughs, etc., has prepared them to expect that any thing from his laboratory would be worthy of attention. As no one medicine is strong universally taken than a Physical Pill; the public will be glad to know of one from such a trustworthy source. We happen to know and can assure them that this article has intrinsic merits, fully equal to any compound that has ever issued from his Cathartic, and consequently is well worth a trial whenever such a medicine becomes necessary.—Baptist Com. Adv.

DEATHS.

Died—At her residence in Marengo county, Alabama, on the 6th July, Mrs. ALTONA S. THOMPSON, wife of Wm. C. Thompson, deceased, and daughter of Mr. James T. Terrell, of the above place.

Her attack being violent the scene of her sickness and death was soon past. Her dying chamber was "quite on the verge of heaven," for there it was that angel bands linger around the bed of the loved one waiting to escort the pilgrim spirit to her home. We gazed upon her as she entered the cold waters of Jordan and there was no fear, for her home had been set in order. She said to those around, "Oh sing to me of heaven," and when kindred and friends, with her much loved pastor, Rev. J. T. Heard, failed from emotion to carry the tune, she joined and led in singing that favorite hymn, "I would not live always, I ask not to stay." Happy in God, and sensible almost to the last moment, our beloved Altona has passed away, having survived her dear companion and children a little over two years. Well may we mourn her loss, for she was among the foremost in every good work. Though not quite twenty-five years of age, and amply possessing the means to enjoy life in all its luxury and ease, she regarded it a reasonable service to present herself a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. She loved the church and labored for its prosperity—she forgot it not in her death, as the legacy of $12,000 to the Alabama Conference will testify. How mysterious the providence of God. In the past three years our church in Dayton has lost three of its strongest pillars—the choicest flowers are plucked from our midst.

Sister Thompson was a close student of the Sacred Scriptures—a punctual and ready attendant upon the Bible Class. As a Sabbath-School Teacher she was prompt, and so much beloved by the children that some were reluctant to return to the school after she had been taken from them. She was regular in attending upon the various means of grace, class and prayer meetings and the sanctuary. For near three years previous to her death she was the subject of much bodily and mental suffering, but she bore it all with remarkable patience. The writer of this tribute to her memory knew her in the various relations of life—through her school days, her married life and widowhood, and in each sphere of action she was lovely, but nowhere did she appear more interesting than with humble penitents at the altar, where she labored earnestly to point them to Christ. Her own soul would catch the fire of God's love as she agonized in prayer for them, and often would she praise the most high in holiest strains. But she has gone from our midst, and though her aged father is called to mourn the loss of his loved Altona, he fondly anticipates a happy reunion after death. May God sustain him and all her kindred and friends in their sad bereavement, and bring us to unite with him forever in the skies.

D. B. T.

Dayton, August 15, 1856.

Died—In DeKalb county, Alabama, September 9th, at his father's residence, JOHN M. SANDERS, eldest son of Ephriam and Anna Sanders.

The deceased was born in Jones county, Georgia, January 10, 1828, being at the time of his death 28 years 8 months and 10 days old. In the year 1846 he connected himself with the Reform Methodist Church, of which he ever after lived a consistent member.—Brother Sanders is gone, a lovely husband and affectionate brother, a dutiful son, and in short one of our best citizens. Just before he died he said to his friends who stood by "Let's all die together." He called to his mother saying, "Ma, tell them all not to weep for me, for I shall be happy after I die; if I live I shall have many trials on earth." After which he prayed with a feeble tongue, afterward he called to his poor old father, saying: "To-day pa, is the day of judgment, oh what a glorious day, it is a day of pentecost." Then he repeated this hymn:

"Jerusalem my happy home,
Oh how I long for thee."

Poor John was our brother in Christ, a dear brother too, but he has gone to glory. He delivered many exhortations just before he died, and in one of them he exclaimed, "Oh if I had strength I could make the gospel ring from the highest mountain to the lowest valley, and to all nations."

A bud from the tree of affection is shaken."

Tribute of Respect to Wilbur M. F. Divine.

At a regular meeting of Magnolia Circle No. 29, held in the Temperance Hall on the 9th of August, the following preamable and resolutions were unanimously adopted and ordered to be published:

Wilber Minter Fisk Divine, late a member of this circle, one greatly endered to us by his many noble virtues, high social qualities and generous impulses, has been suddenly called from our midst, leaving a void in our hearts and in our circle and one which cannot be filled by another as by him. His life was not marked by a single deviation from the pure principles of our order. In a spirit of "Kindness, Love and Peace," he went faithfully forward in the performance of every duty. Temperance was the polar star of his life—integrity guided his purposes and controlled his actions, and to be truly good was his highest aim. A strange visitor, before whom our sentinels fell back, has entered unheralded into our midst and from our social band has hurried a much loved brother to his final home.

Resolved, That while we lament the loss of our ever-faithful brother, our hearts are comforted by the full assurance that he had a good hope through grace, of immortal and eternal life.

Resolved, That we tender to his aged parents and other relatives, the warmest sympathies of our hearts.

Resolved, That we observe the usual custom of a badge of mourning for thirty days.

RAILROAD CONVENTION.—A Cincinnati dispatch of the 18th inst. says that the Railroad Convention resolved last night that the fare from New York to common points in the West should in no case exceed two cents and a half per mile through. An advance of about six per cent. was agreed on, to continue from November 1st to April 1st, and a slight advance in freights from the 1st of October until the adoption of the winter rates. The Convention then adjourned to meet in Cleveland on the first Wednesday of October.

FROM YAZOO RIVER.—The steamer Linda, Capt. Main, arrived yesterday morning from Lerlore, with 685 bales cotton. This is the first arrival from that tributary for many months. Capt. Main informs us that there were four feet water from Lerlore out. Very little cotton as yet has been received at the various shipping points on the Yazoo.

FROST IN PIKE COUNTY, MISS.—We learn from the Holmesville Independent, of the 25th inst., that frost made its appearance in that neighborhood on the 24th.

THE BANKING SYSTEM OF LOUISIANA.

The New Orleans Canal and Banking Company.

NUMBER I.

The good effects of the act of our Legislature revising the charter of the banks, are strongly elucidated in the promptness, punctuality and soundness which the banks working under its provisions have maintained in the paper circulation of our State, with the extended and general benefits and advantages they have conferred on the agricultural and commercial pursuits connected with the commerce and prosperity of our city.

The day is past to undertake to prove that banks are unnecessary, and are not essential to trade and the general interchange of the commerce of the world. It may be contended that they are great evils. If so; they are necessary ones. That they are like all things which owe their invention and organization to human ingenuity, liable to abuses, and some of them of the greatest kind, cannot be denied. The millennium may be said to have arrived when anything can be found which is not subject to complaint.

The grand feature of the Banking statute of Louisiana is the organization of a Board of Currency, the members of which must possess the following qualifications:

1st. To be a citizen of the United States, and of the State of Louisiana, and to have resided four consecutive years therein.

2d. Not to be a director or commercial partner of any bank director or officer of a bank.

3d. Not to be a money broker.

The duty of this Board of Currency is to take care and guard that the paper money issued by the banks be not depreciated. For this purpose they are vested with the following authority:

To supervise the charter and by-laws of all banks; to thoroughly examine the affairs of any bank whenever they may deem it expedient to do so; to require of the president and cashier the following statement: Capital realized: amount of dead weight under the respective heads of real estate, loans on stock, long loans, and all assets beyond ninety days; movements of the banks, which are loans or paper payable at maturity and intended to meet the two-thirds of cash liabilities not represented by specie; circulation, deposits and other cash liabilities.

This statement from each bank has to be regularly filed in the office of the Board of Currency every week, and on the last Saturday of each month a general statement has to be completed, signed by the President of the Board of Currency, and published on the first Monday in each month. The Board have also many other powers delegated, which we shall notice hereafter; so that there cannot be any violation of the bank act without it exhibits itself immediately. This places the banking system of Louisiana on as safe a foundation and security to the public as can well be devised.

Of sixteen banks which were in existence on the passage of the bank act, five only were in a condition to sustain themselves and comply with the requisitions of the law, and which survived the inquisitorial mandates of that power, the Board of Currency.

These five banks were the Bank of Louisiana, the Louisiana State Bank, the New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, the City Bank, and the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank. The Union Bank made an attempt to work under its provisions, in fact made a good rally, but inable prejudice had been so strong against the banking system after the year 1837, that the managers deemed it advisable to place it in liquidation, which they did subsequently to the passage of the act. The movement turned out well for the State and stockholders.

The banks which were placed in liquidation, or rather were forced to close, as much by the increasing demonstrations of the public as by the requirements of the law, were the Citizens' Bank; the Consolidated Association of the Planters of Louisiana, (another institution founded on the bond and mortgage system, which system owes its origin and introduction into Louisiana to the late Jean B. Monsseir) the Commercial Bank, alias the Water-works; the Exchange and Banking Company, alias the old St. Charles Hotel; the Improvement Bank, alias the St. Louis Hotel and Steamboat Association; the Gas Light Bank, alias the Gas Light Company; the Atchafalaya Bank, alias the Atchafalaya Railroad; the Merchants' Bank, the tender and subsidy of the United States Bank of Philadelphia; the Carrollton Bank, alias the Carrollton Railroad Company; and the Bank of Orleans. The charter of this last bank ought to have been saved.

In enumerating these banks we are reminded of a splendid constellation of financiers for a ten party.

Among the banks which received more than an ordinary share of denunciation and wrath, was the Canal Bank; at that time and often since has it had the maledictions of those who did not agree with its mandates, or perhaps who were sore that they parted with the stock that they held in the institution at very low prices.

To understand the question of the Canal Bank it is necessary to go back some years anterior to the passage of the famous bank act of 1842.

It is not unknown to the commercial history of New Orleans, during the territorial government of the territory of Louisiana, that a charter was granted and a body politic created under the title of the Orleans Navigation Company—the rights of which were, full and unlimited authority over the natural water course known as the Bayou St. John, with a capital of $200,000 to endure forever. This company thus duly incorporated, commenced its operations by excavating and making the basin and canal which has its location on the line of Toulouse and Basin streets, and the Canal Carondelet, so called from a Governor of the province before the cession to the United States. This canal was completed about the year 1813.

Tonnage duty or fees for using the Bayou from the mouth to the Bridge, one dollar per ton for each measured ton, and from the Bridge to the Basin via the Carondelet Canal, the further sum of one dollar per ton; and the charter only required the Company to maintain a depth of water not over three feet. The United commerce of the city paid these exactions for several years, which about the year 1820 the rate for the entire route was reduced to one dollar and twenty-five cents per ton. Subsequently it was reduced to seventy-five cents, at which rate it was maintained for years.

Towards the year 1828, this tax had become an extortion from the difficulty vessels had in entering and getting through the bayou and the canal. Among the old navigators of that day who was largely engaged in the trade with Florida, was our old and respected citizen Capt. James Forsyth.

The exactions of the Company continued to increase as it were by the increase of the trade with Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and our Lake parishes. Remonstrances and petitions were presented to the Company, but no redress whatever was obtained; insult was added to injury, and the public defied. The charter of the Company was perpetual. In the year 1830, the late Maurice W. Hoffman conceived and brought forward a project for a railroad to the Lake, which resulted in the incorporation of the present Pontchartrain Railway. But the Orleans Navigation Company, secure in its charter, was not to be frightened by a railroad, particularly as this was only the third railroad projected in the United States.

About this time (1831) the late Samuel Livermore, an influential citizen, a stockholder and director in the Bank of Louisiana, and the late Benjamin Story, had a difference which resulted in Mr. Livermore's withdrawal from the bank, and the taking of measures, for the incorporation of another institution, as much to check the influence of the Bank of Louisiana as any other cause. It was conceived, however, that a charter for improving the intercourse with the Lake parishes, to obviate the exactions of the old Orleans Navigation Company, extend the trade and commerce of the city, promote and increase the general prosperity and welfare of our inhabitants, reduce the onerous charges and do away with the impositions of the company, could be readily obtained with the additional powers of banking privileges; provided, that the charter of such an incorporation be inhibited it from exacting more than thirty-seven and a half cents per ton for the use of any canal or water course that might be undertaken and constructed.

Under these preliminary conditions the Legislature, in the year 1831, granted an act establishing a company with a capital of four millions of dollars for the purpose of constructing a canal from some part of the city or suburbs of New Orleans, above Poydras street, to the Lake Pontchartrain. This introduced to the commercial and financial world the institution which heads this article. The commissioners appointed by the Governor and Senate to open books, receive subscriptions and effect the incipient organization, were—Beverly Chew, Archibald H. Taylor, Samuel Livermore, B. F. Barthe, James Foder, Jr., Manuel White and Charles Bendel—all good and sterling men, and all have passed to their long home except the last two named gentlemen.

The first cashier was Mr. Beverly Chew, who had been collector of the customs for thirteen years, having received the appointment to that office from Mr. Monroe, and removed without any cause other than rotation in office in 1829. Mr. Archibald H. Taylor was selected as the first president.

The space required for completing this history compels us to defer the subject for to-day. [Crescent.

Business and Cotton.

The cool, bracing weather of Tuesday has imparted a high degree of liveliness in all circles. The receipts of cotton yesterday up to 6 o'clock were mostly from Memphis—being, by the H. M. Wright, 1,015 bales; Ingomar, 2,725; Chonteau, 155—total, 4,795 bales. The receipts in the corresponding day last year, that is, on the 30th or last day of September, were 7,021 bales.

The telegraphic advices by the Baltic have had no influence on the market. There are several discretionary orders for cotton for France, to be governed by the state or apparent prospects of the crop, its probable extent, and the quality of the early receipts.

We received from one of the most intelligent sources, the following communication:

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23, 1856.—The steamers now due from Liverpool are looked for with much interest as it is expected that the sunshine John Bull will begin to realize the probable effect of the changed position of the grain for cotton crops. Their stock is now rather restricted, but as a consumption will continue upon present large basis until prices advance to a parity with your opening figures, perhaps. A very large reduction will be realized ere any new supplies can reach from this side; the more so that your market prices are now effected to offer and bidder meet for early coming. The demand for Liverpool would be good if your currency were 1, in ¼ of cent. lower; but some movement of most magnitude on the other side, ere parties here can place themselves and commence enough to shift in the face of bad lines.

The New Yorkers are now busy thoughts of an advance in Liverpool at an early day, and should they be disappointed, I know not what is to move your crop on present basis of 7d. to sell at Liverpool.

The estimates of crop are generally about 3,200,000 bales—some larger and some smaller.

The spinners did not manage to have some on hand when gas obtain business animation. The very hard work to corner the John Bull manufacturers.

Trade is usual in Manchester, but 1-8d advance in cotton would check business very materially. Money will be lost on your currency.

From this we can judge that it is the purpose of spinners in England to refrain as long as possible from entering the market. The stock in Liverpool will reach low figures by the first of December, under the average weekly consumption of the year. The exports from this port for Liverpool, for the month ending yesterday, were 5,163 bales, and most of the vessels now taken up or loading for England will not reach there much in advance of the first of December. It will be a contest between the spinners and dealers on the other side, and the factors and planters on this. As our money market now stands, this side has the advantage. In December and January, when payments accumulate and heavy disbursements are required, the bears may, as often before, carry the day. Mais nous verrons.

The Canada, to leave Boston to-day, will carry out greatly reduced estimates, and we shall have the results about the middle of November. The following is an extract from a circular which was forwarded by the steamer from Boston on Wednesday last, dated New York, 23d inst.:

The accounts from the South are still unfavorable as to the prospects for the incoming crop. The complaints during the month of August, and the impression is becoming more universal that the planters are against 3,500,000 bales, even with an open season and a late frost.

Many Southern writers express very confidently their conviction that 3,000,000 bales will be a full average, on a common year.

Regarding other items of commerce in New York, we have the following:

The produce markets are rather less firmer, with a fulness of demand superinduced by the advices from Liverpool for the 6th of flower prices three to 5 cents higher. Cotton has met with a fair demand for home use.

Groceries quiet and active. An auction sale of 10,000 mats Java coffee brought 11½ and 3,850 bags of Rio brought 9¾ to 12c, an average of 29 92 @ 100 lbs. Hogshead sugars are active at 8 to 9 cents. [Crescent.

Talk on Change—Business.

After the passing off of the miniature storm of rain Monday morning, a lively and cheerful feeling was evinced in all circles. Of the great thoroughfares, particularly, there were proofs that the fall trade had actually commenced. The close of yesterday was like one of those beautiful autumnal days which belong only to the sunny South. The general interchange of views regarding business on the street, on change, and here and there, was rather confining on one of the material and controlling points, that is cotton. The bulls and bears in the cotton trade are wide apart in their views. The buyers for the English market seem to think that the spinners can hold off and work on a greatly reduced supply, rather than to submit to the present prices, or rather to pay from 12 to 12½ cents for middling cotton. We are all aware that Mr. John Bull is stubborn and obdurate. The advices by the Baltic, if the telegraph be correct, do not aid either bulls or bears, though we shall have to wait some few weeks to see what effects the opening of the New Orleans market will have in Europe. The advance in, and firmness of freights, is against the cotton interest.

The receipts since last Saturday up to 6 o'clock last evening were, by the Laurel Hill, from Bayou Sara, 811 bales; three upper river boats, 310 bales: Southern Belle, from Grand Gulf, 2,203 bales; Princess, from Vicksburg, 3,467; Capitol, from Morganza, 1,575; Linda, from Lerlore, 689; Virginia and Falls City, from Memphis, 1,232 bales. Total, 10,517 bales. For the corresponding days last year the receipts were 13,258 bales.

The late killing frost accounts have had great effect on tobacco. Sales have been made of Kentucky leaf at 15 cents per pound, which is the highest figure ever obtained in this market; far beyond the great speculating period of 1825, when it went up to 18 cents, and cotton three pounds for a dollar, or, perhaps, for middling 25 to 30 cents per pound. In Western produce there is a good business doing, and every description sells readily and at good prices; and, if freights to foreign ports do not rule too high, we shall have a heavy increase of Western trade, particularly when the railroads from the West to the East are blocked with ice and snow, of which, the telegraph indicates, there may be an early interruption from these obstacles. Thousands of barrels of flour have recently been received here from the West, to be forwarded to New York and Boston.

This is proof positive that our city has yet the control of the Western trade, and, with a slight rise in the waters of the Western rivers, our levee, our warehouses, our merchants, one and all, would be crowded with business. There is not a doubt on our minds but what the mercantile community of New Orleans can do business at lower rates, or rather, work cheaper than any of the Atlantic cities. This is manifest from comparisons of accounts of sales of produce made here and in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, the difference being from 20 to 25 per cent. in favor of New Orleans. Push on the column.

DIED.—Mr. Charles Rowcraft, late British Consul at Cincinnati, dismissed by Secretary Marcy, died on the voyage home to England. Mr. R. was an excellent officer and high-toned gentleman. We have always had our doubts as to whether President Pierce acted right in revoking his exequatur.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT TO NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The Concord Patriot says President Pierce intends visiting New Hampshire early in October, and that arrangements are being made at Concord for a public reception.

GLASS BALLOT-BOXES FOR SAN FRANCISCO.—We learn from the New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun of the 23d inst., that one hundred and fifty of the newly invented glass ballot-boxes, ordered by the city of San Francisco, were sent out by the George Law, to be ready in time for the November elections.

BANKING IN AUSTRALIA.—There are eight chartered banks in Australia, having an aggregate capital of $25,000,000. Their profits have been enormous, some of them having paid dividends as high as 30 per cent. last year, and most of them as high as 20 per cent.

FROST IN MONTGOMERY, ALA.—We learn from the Montgomery Advertiser that there was a frost in that town on the 23d inst.

Rev. Mr. Stuggins said: "I am a charitable man, and think every one entitled to his opinion—and never cherish malice against my foes, not even against Mr. Mulberry, who has indirectly called me a sinner; but still, if the Lord has a thunderbolt to spare, I think it would be well bestowed upon dear brother Mulberry's head."

The "Acklar," of Algiers, in comparing the meteorological facts published in the journals, states that during the month of August, which is considered as the warmest in Africa, the thermometer has not yet risen above 75 and 78 Fahrenheit, whereas in Paris it has reached 90 to 93 in the shade.

"A KNOWING HORSE.—"I engaged," says a traveler, "a chaise at Galway to conduct me some few miles into the country, and had not proceeded far, when it pulled up at the foot of a hill, and the driver coming to the door, opened it. 'What are you at, man; this isn't where I ordered you to stop,' said I. 'Whist, your honour, whist!' ejaculated Paddy, 'I am only desaving the baste. If I bank the door he'll think you're out, and he'll cut up the hill like a devil.'"

SURVEY OF THE CASPIAN SEA.—At the request of the Grand Duke Admiral, the Russian government will next year fit out an expedition for a hydrographical survey of the Caspian Sea. The work will be one of more than ordinary difficulty. In comparison with its extent—350,000 square versts—the Caspian Sea has an immense coast line, in consequence of which an actual survey of 50,000 versts will be necessary. An idea may be formed of the magnitude of the undertaking from the fact that for the last twenty years a force of between fifty and sixty officers and two hundred men, with forty to fifty boats, have been engaged in the Gulf of Finland and the Baltic Sea, and have to that time surveyed but 18,000 square versts. The importance of the commerce between Russia and Persia, which has recently, as it were, sprung into existence, renders an official survey absolutely necessary.

Later from Havana.

The United States Mail steamship Empire City arrived at this port on Saturday evening from New York via Havana. We copy the following report of her trip from the memoranda kindly furnished us by purser Denison.

The steamship Empire City left New York on the 17th inst., with a heavy freight for New Orleans and one hundred and forty-four passengers, of whom fifty-four were for Havana. Arrived at the latter port at daylight on the morning of the 24th, and was followed in by the Quaker City from Mobile. The Empire City found at anchor awaiting her arrival, the United States Mail steamship Orenada, with the California mails and fifty-four passengers for New Orleans. These left San Francisco on the 5th inst., on the steamship Golden Age, which steamer brought down to Panama one hundred passengers and two millions of treasure. The Golden Age arrived at Panama on the evening of the 18th, her passengers leaving next morning by the railroad. Arrived at Aspinwall at 2 o'clock, P. M., the same day.

The steamship Illinois, Capt. Rogga, was to have left Aspinwall on the 19th for New York, with the treasure and passengers for that city.

Among the passengers by the Empire City are Col. Morgenau and Secretary, from Nicaragua.

The Colonel made the voyage from Greytown to Aspinwall—280 miles—in an open boat, in order to take the first steamer, and succeeded, as he desired, in getting on board the Orenada. He brings important dispatches from the United States Minister at Nicaragua, and a mail from Grenada.

The passengers by the Golden Age report that owing to anticipated disturbances on the part of the native population, arising from the election for Governor on the 15th, the day of her arrival, they were detained on board till next morning, 19th, and then landed under the guns of the sloop-of-war St. Mary's and with the escort of her boats which were detailed for that duty, and were accompanied in the railroad station with a force of marines. The American residents had been previously warned and advised to

The Dying Boy to his Mother.

Mother, it is not hard to die,
Weep not around my bed,
For angel hands are hovering nigh,
To bless you when I'm dead;
Can you not see those snowy hands,
Outstretched to bear me home?
Can you not see those flowery lands,
Where I in joy shall roam?

There are bright temples lined with gold,
Pillars and domes emparadised;
Where Infant spirits ope the gates—
Types of that glorious world.
Within its vivid-hued halls
Are steps with diamonds laid;
And hope's fair mantle softly falls
Round each believing head.

They tell me that immortal wreaths
Shall rest upon my brow;
Mother, I see their angel forms,
And hear their voices now;
They'll fan me with their wings of faith—
With angel care they'll show
The holy paths of peace and truth,
And teach me where to go.

They say that crystal rivulets
Shall bathe my brow and feet,
That throngs of seraph ones shall bend,
A trembling child to greet;
That on the borders of those streams
Rich gems in plenty lie;
That all around a radiance beams—
O, for this bliss I sigh.

I see bright birds, of rainbow hue,
Trees with ambrosial fruits;
And I shall join Heaven's minstrels, too,
Yes, I with song and lute;
Then mother, dearest, smile again,
Look up and kiss the rod;
I go to rest all free from pain
In Paradise, with God.

The Lily of Heaven.

BY DR. T. H. CHIVERS.

Now in her snow-white shroud she lies—
(Her lily lids half veil her eyes)—
As if she fooled with wild surprise
Up at her soul in Paradise.

Her hands lie folded on her breast—
Cross'd like the cross that gave her rest;
She looks as if some heavenly guest
Had told her that her soul was blest.

She lies as if she seemed to hear
Sphere music breaking on her ear—
Breaking in accent silver clear—
In concert with her soul up there.

Her body was the Temple bright
In which her soul dwelt full of light,
Triumphing over Death's dark night—
High heaven laid open to the sight.

Raising with pure seraphic love—
Veil'd in the meekness of a dove—
Her soul, now all things pass to prove,
Looks down on me from Heaven above.

For her Religion grew more bright,
The darker grew the world's dark night—
Filling her soul with such pure light,
High Heaven seem'd open'd to her sight.

The calmness of divinest ease
Rests on her brow—upon her face—
Expressive of the soul's release
From this dark world to one of peace.

Her pale, cold, silent lips, compress,
Speak out to me most manifest,
A silent language, of the rest
That she now feels among the blest.

I wept warm tears upon her face,
As she lay there in Death's embrace;
Whereon no passion could we trace—
But calmness—meekness—heavenly grace.

With saintly, pale face thus she went
Out of this world's great discontent,
Up through the watery firmament,
Into the place of Pure Content.

The Gambler's Wife.

Dark is the night! how dark! No light! no fire!
Cold, on the hearth, the last faint sparks expire;
Shivering, she watches by the cradle side
For him who pledged her love—last year a bride!

"Hark! 'tis his footstep. No! 'Tis past! 'Tis gone!
Clock, clock. How wearily time crawls on;
Why should he leave me thus? He once was kind,
And I believed 'would last. How mad—how blind."

"Rest thee, my babe; rest on. 'Tis hunger's cry!
Sleep—for there is no food; the fount is dry;
Famine and cold their wearying work have done
My heart must break. And thou!"—The clock strikes one.

"Hush! 'tis the dice box. Yes, he's there—he's there!
For this—for this he leaves me to despair;
Leaves love; leaves truth; his wife; his child! for what?
The wanton's smile—the villain—and the pot.

"Yet I'm not quite lost. No, 'tis all in vain;
'Tis long to wait, but sure he'll come again;
And I could curse and bless him but for you,
My child; for child! O, fiend!"—The clock strikes two.

"Hark! how the sign board creaks; the blast howls by;
Moan; moan; a dirge swells thro' the cloudy sky!
Ha! 'tis his knock; he comes; he comes once more!"
'Tis but the lattice flaps. Thy hope is o'er.

"Can he desert me thus? He knows I stay
Night after night, in loneliness, to pray
For his return; and yet he sees no tear!
No, no—it cannot be—he will be here.

"Hustle more closely, dear one, to my heart;
Thou'rt cold—thou'rt freezing! But we will not part!
Husband, I die! Father! It is not he;
O, God, protect my child."—The clock strikes three.

They're gone; they're gone; the glimmering spark hath fled,
The wife and child are numbered with the dead!
On the cold earth, outstretched in solemn rest,
The babe lay frozen on its mother's breast!

The gambler came at last—but all was o'er—
Dread silence reigned around!—The clock struck four!

The Franklin Statue.

At the Franklin celebration of the 17th, at Boston, in honor of the erection of Greenough's bronze statue of the great patriot and philosopher, the following ode, by J. T. Fields, the publisher, was sung:

Give welcome to his sculptured form!
Art's splendid triumph here is won;
There let him stand, in light and storm,
Our sea-girt city's greatest son.

His lineage sprung from honest Toil,
Swart labor trained his youthful hand;
High with the brave who freed our soil—
Where first he breathed let Franklin stand.

His genius stamped the Press with power;
His glance the glowing future saw;
His science curbed the fiery shower;
His wisdom stood with Peace and Law.

The world his story long has shrined—
To fame his spotless deeds belong—
His homely Truth, his ample Mind,
His Saxon taste of human Wrong.

Room for the gray-haired patriot sage!
For here his genial life began;
There let him look from age to age,
And prompt new Thought ennobling Man.

Americans Rally.

BY SUBIE.

Bound the flag of freedom rally,
Hearts of fire and hands of might,
From each mountain, hold and valley,
Gather to the coming fight.

Sires and sons, 'tis not for glory,
Not for fame, your swords you wield,
Yours should be a brighter story,
Battling thus on freedom's field.

Hunters, from your dark green moutains,
Old Kentucky's fearless ones,
Swift as rush your native fountains,
Haste and free your future sons.

Hearts of fame and hands of iron,
To your country's rescue come,
Sternly strike the invading Lion,
For the altars of your home.

Strike! and ye are free forever,
Strike for your dear verdant sod;
Link your hearts to sunder never—
On! for Liberty and God.

But treasure chanced to find;
He pocketed the miser's pelf,
And left the rope behind.

His money gone, the miser hung

Thus each the other's wants supplied,
And that was surely fair.

MURDER AT LAKE PROVIDENCE.—We learn from the Lake Providence Herald that a most brutal murder was committed in that town on the 25th ult., on the person of Mr. Geo. W. Lester, by an overseer named John Ammonette. Lester was stabbed in two places near the breast, and only survived his wounds a few moments. Ammonette, after providing himself with a double-barrelled gun, took to flight, and had not been taken up to last accounts.

The same paper notices the fact that there was a heavy white frost experienced in the town and neighborhood, which it was hoped would kill all the cotton-worms, whose ravages had become general in that and adjoining parishes, especially those near the river. At Bunch's Bend, above this, says the Herald, we are told the destruction is terrible, not one-third of a crop being expected. At Milliken's Bend, in Madison parish, the destruction is also very great.

The Richmond Journal, of the 25th ult., says:

On Wednesday morning last the house-tops and fences gave unmistakable signs of a visit from Jack Frost. The weather had been extremely cold for the season for several days, making fires and winter clothing necessary to comfort. There was no harm done by the frost.

We have heard of a great deal of sickness during the last week or two. It is not of a serious character, however, being mostly chill and fever, but very sensibly interfering with the operations of our planters.

THE RISE IN RED RIVER.—The Shreveport Gazette, of the 20th inst., states that the river at that point has risen twelve feet up to that time, and was still rising.

The Gazette also publishes a rumor to the effect that there had been a desperate affray at Waco, Texas, on or about the 4th or 5th inst., at a political meeting, in which two speakers killed each other simultaneously, after which a general fight ensued and seven men were killed, and fifteen men and three ladies wounded.

The same paper publishes letters from different points on the river above, which go to prove that the rise has been general and will be lasting.

A correspondent writing from Laynesport, Ark., under date of the 6th inst., says that the river was higher there than it had been for two years, and that they had water enough for the largest sized boats.

Another, writing from Rocky Comfort, Ark., 11th inst., chronicles a rise of twelve feet at that point and the water still rising. The arrival of boats was impatiently awaited.

FIRE IN DESOTO PARISH.—The Mansfield Columbian, of the 20th inst., says;

We regret to learn that on Friday, the 12th inst., Mr. J. R. Allen, residing about seven miles from this place on the Natchitoches road, had his dwelling house and entire contents consumed by fire. Nothing was saved, not even a second suit of clothes. It is supposed the house was struck by lightning.

ARMY WORM.—The Columbian further says:

The army worm have made their appearance on several plantations in our parish, and are eating the leaves of the cotton very rapidly; but, owing to the long contracted drought, the cotton has matured very early, and instead of their doing much damage, it is believed by some that they will be a benefit to the cotton, particularly on the high lands.

CROPS ON RED RIVER.—The Natchitoches Chronicle, of the 20th inst., has the following on this subject:

The yield of cotton in this parish, and so far as we can learn, in North-western Louisiana, will fall short of the worst anticipations of our planters when the picking commenced. The protracted drought during the early growing season prevented the plant from attaining its usual size and vigor, and imparted to it a sickly character and yellow color, from which it has been unable fully to recover. The cotton, especially on old lands, was too feeble to retain many of its forms as fully to perfect its bolls.

We learn that the crops on the new lands on upper Red River, which were not so seriously damaged by drought, have been visited by the cutterpillar and completely stripped of leaves. The cutterpillar has visited some plantations in this parish, but as yet have done no serious injury. The weather, so far, has been unusually favorable for picking, and our planters are handling their cotton with great care.

WEATHER IN POINTE COUPEE.—The Echo, of the 27th, says:

During the whole of the present week we have been enjoying most delightful fall weather. On Saturday last we had a shower of rain, during which the wind veered to the North and has continued blowing from that quarter up to the time of writing, bringing into requisition various articles of winter clothing, and making fires quite comfortable. As the week advanced it continued growing colder, and on Wednesday morning quite a white frost was visible. This, for the month of September, is something quite unusual.

LATER FROM KANSAS.—The St. Louis Republican of the 22d inst. has the annexed items of Kansas news:

The steamer David Tatum arrived yesterday afternoon from St. Joseph. She left that port on Wednesday last. At Kansas, she took on board about 350 citizens of Missouri, who, in obedience to the proclamation of Gov. Geary, had given up their military organization and returned to Missouri. They were principally from the counties of Howard, Boone, Cooper and Franklin. Lawrence was in possession of United States troops, by whom 90 of Lane's men had been made prisoners. Lane fled from Lawrence with the remainder of his ragamuffins, and was in Nebraska.

Gov. Geary was at Lecompton with one thousand United States troops, and determined to maintain the peace and execute the laws. Under his orders ninety men had been taken prisoners at Lawrence. The report of Lane and his band having fled to Nebraska is confirmed. They are said to have stolen property sufficient for them to live on during the coming winter, if they can keep together so long. There was a report last evening that several lives were lost on each side, at Lawrence, but this is believed to be incorrect.

LAFOURCHE ITEMS.—We clip the following items from the Thibodaux Minerva, of Saturday last:

The body of the late Col. John C. Beatty, together with that of his youngest son, Arthur, who perished at Last Island during the memorable gale of the 10th of August, were brought up from the Island on Monday and deposited in their last resting place, the Episcopal Cemetery, in this place, on Tuesday 23d. They were followed to the grave by a large concourse of our fellow-citizens.

Jack Frost paid us a visit on Wednesday night, merely a slight remembrance of his existence. His advent has left the air cool and bracing, and made "woodenu" a commodity. Our citizens have absolutely become plethoric and rosy cheeked under the influence of the delicious coltness of the air by day, and the refreshing inspiration of the breezes when the sun is gone—aided, we presume, by generous diet, light potations, and consciences moderately easy.

NAVAL.—The Norfolk Herald, of the 23d inst., says:

Commodore French Forrest arrived here on Sunday morning in the steamer from Baltimore. He will hoist his flag on board the frigate St. Lawrence and go out in her as commander of the squadron on the Brazil station. The following is a correct list of the officers of the St. Lawrence:

Captain, J. B. Hull; 1st Lieut., P. U. Murphy; 2d Lieut., J. H. Parker; 3d Lieut., J. D. Beall; 4th Lieut., Wm. P. Buckner; Master, Wm. H. Cheever; Purser, Samuel Forrest; Fleet Surgeon, samuel Barrington; Pass'd Ass't Surgeon, George Deck; Ass't Surgeon, Francis L. Gall; Pass'd Midshipmen, Wm. H. Dana, A. C. Izard, Wm. A. Kirkland, A. J. McCartney; Midshipmen, R. L. Phythian, Rush R. Wallace, Geo. S. Shyrock, Wm. E. Evans; Coumodore's Secretary, Geo. L. Brent; Boatswain, Wm. Smith; Gunner, Asa Curtis; Carpenter, Wm. F. Leighton; Sailmaker, Geo. Thomas.

The U. S. steamer Engineer, Lieut. Commanding Lovell, arrived here on Saturday with a detachment of marines under command of Lieut. A. W. Stark, for the St. Lawrence.

A CURIOSITY.—The Baltimore Patriot says:

There was recently brought to this country from the Island of Java, on board the United States frigate Macedonia—and has since been brought to this city—a curiosity known at the Mouse Deer, the first we have ever seen, and probably the first that has ever been seen here. When full grown they are about the size of the ordinary rabbit of our forests, and shaped like the American deer. The limbs are very delicate, and the hoof, which is cloven, is almost transparent. In colors they are a reddish brown with white breast and stomach. From the nose and extending back to the ear, is a tan colored stripe on each side, and under the lower jaw a white stripe, forming a trident. They feed like cattle, and chew a cud like that species of the animal creation. They are easily domesticated. The eye is large and projecting, but the ears are short and oblong. They are said to be very swift, and their appearance would indicate it, as they are formed precisely like the red deer of this country.

LARGE LOAD.—The Mobile Tribune, of Sunday, says:

The two trains which arrived here on Friday night from Macon, Miss., brought in 1,472 bales of cotton. The special train had on 1,100 bales and the regular train brought the balance. Last night's train is supposed to have about 350 bales more. These receipts will indicate what the prospects will be in the future of the business on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

"Wiggins, what era in the world's history do you regard with the deepest horror?"

"The chol-era," gasped Wiggins, with a spasmodic shudder.

Affairs in Kansas.

THE WAR ENDED—All Parties Satisfied with the Peace.—The St. Louis Intelligencer, of the 25th ult., says:

We have dates from the border of the 19th, the particulars of the last days of the war in Kansas, and circumstances attending the final treaty of peace at Franklin.

The Missourians, true to their word, marched from Westport to attack Lawrence, on the 13th. The army was composed of one regiment of foot and two of mounted men—in all 2,000 men, attended by four pieces of artillery. Gen. Heiskell was in command. On the 13th and 14th, the army marched forty miles, reaching Franklin, three miles from Lawrence. When about four miles from Franklin, the advance guard was fired on by the picket guard of the Lawrence army, and one man killed. The main body was hurried up as rapidly as possible, for the purpose of attacking Lawrence that evening. By the time it reached Franklin, however, it was night, and the contemplated attack was postponed. The army encamped at Franklin, intending to make the assault next day, the 15th.

At midnight, however, an express arrived in camp with the information that Col. Cook, with a large force of U. S. troops, had taken up a position in front of Lawrence for the purpose of protecting it from the proposed attack. Col. Cook communicated notice of his resolution to defend the town, in a note to Gen. Heiskell, warning him of the consequences of an attempt on the place. It is said that Col. Cook had been sent by Gov. Geary, who was urgently solicited by the people of Lawrence to interpose for their protection. On the 15th Gov. Geary arrived at Franklin, and had a consultation with the officers of the invading army. He told them that he was prepared to enforce the laws, to arrest offenders, to crush insurrection and suppress disorders with the aid of the troops placed under his command, and that the interposition of the Missourians under Gen. Heiskell was no longer necessary. As an evidence of his ability to enforce the laws, he told them he had just arrested ninety or a hundred outlaws, who would be properly tried by the legal authorities. In view of these facts, the Governor urged the Missourians to disband and abandon their projected attempt on Lawrence.

Gen. Atchison, Gen. Reid and Col. Titus addressed the meeting and urged compliance with the Governor's proposal. The Governor then withdrew from the conference to afford to the Missourians an opportunity to act among themselves on his suggestion. A meeting was instantly organized by calling Gen. Atchison to the chair. Resolutions were passed declaring that, relying on the protection promised to peaceable settlers by the Governor, they (the invading army) would disband and return to their homes—requesting the Governor to organize and distribute over the Territory a force of militia to protect the settlers from marauders and robbers—and recommending that Col. Titus be made commander of the militia of the Territory. The Missourians then broke up camp and returned home, except those who intended to settle in the Territory.

The ninety or one hundred men arrested by Gov. Geary belonged to the company of Col. Harvey, who made the attack on Capt. Robertson, at Hickory Point. They were captured at Grasshopper Mills, opposite Lecompton, on their return from Hickory Point to Lawrence. It is said that in the attempt to arrest them, one United States soldier and fourteen of Harvey's men were killed.

Lane is not to be found in the Territory. He left Lawrence on the approach of Gov. Geary with the United States troops, and went towards Nebraska. All is quiet in the Territory now.

AN ECCENTRIC WRITER.—We translate the following from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, dated Brussels, August 29:

"In the streets of Brussels may be seen, from time to time, an old, poorly clad man, with snow-white hair, a fine, expressive face, and beautiful, intelligent eyes. His black dress coat is threadbare, and his cap so weather-stained that it would be impossible to tell the color of the cloth. His form is bent with gout, and yet he always walks very briskly, cane in hand. Sometimes he has a loaf of bread under his arm, a bottle of beer, or a little butter on a cabbage-leaf. Every time I pass him, I bow to him, though personally I do not know him. The man lives in a miserable garret in the Rue du Marais, where there is no fire in the winter; a poor bed, a few chairs, an old secretary, books and manuscripts, comprise his furniture. This man is Joachim Lelewel, now 70 years of age, the most celebrated Polish writer of modern times, who, during the Polish revolution, was Minister of Public Instruction, and since 1833 has lived at Brussels. He refuses all sympathy, from friends as well as admirers, but lives in self-imposed poverty, from the scanty income derived from his literary labors. A professorship of history, which the Belgian Government, and afterwards the University, had offered him, he refused to accept. An old lady of noble birth died recently, who esteemed the learned Polish refugee so highly that, though not knowing him personally, she left him a legacy of six hundred francs a year. I don't know whether he has accepted it."

DISCOVERY OF ANTIQUITIES IN FRANCE.—The same paper has the following:

The excavations executed near Narbonne, on the site intended for the railway station, have led to the discovery of some interesting antiquities, now deposited in the museum of that town. Among them are a white marble statue, of excellent workmanship, representing Silenus, vases of black terra-cotta and of glass, styles, medals, three inscriptions in Hebrew, and three in Latin of the sixth century. One of the latter is peculiarly remarkable, the first part being in Roman and the rest in Greek characters. It is the epitaph of a man named Domelius, aged 37, of the village of Toanza, and who died under the consulate of Hasilens-Mavortius: "Obiit Kalendas junias, indictione quinta, Mafortio viro clarissimo, consuls." This consul assumed his functions in 527, and is remarkable for having caused copies to be made of the works of Horace.

A SPANISH GENERAL IN TROUBLE.—A correspondent of the Independance Belge, writes from Madrid, August 27th:

"I have hitherto abstained from speaking of a very grave matter, of which I am enabled to give you details hitherto unpublished. If I had sent you this news before, the moderado journal, with their habitual insolence, would have cried 'calumny.' Now they cannot. Before the revolution of 1854, and under the moderate government, General Ortega, an intimate friend of Narvaez, was Captain-General of the Canary Islands. One of the richest proprietors of the colony died, leaving a wife, the sole heir to this immense fortune. General Ortega, in confederacy with two superior officers, set up some false heirs, with whom he shared a great part of the deceased's property. The moderado government would have winked at this iniquity, for it was itself guilty of the most shameful practices. Happily the revolution of July broke out, and Espartero's government lent a willing ear to the complaint of the rightful heiress. An inquiry was ordered, and the court-martial has only, within the last few days brought its investigation to a close. I am assured that the Auditor-at-War demands a sentence of twenty years' imprisonment, in irons, against Ortega. It is even said that the government is disposed to ask the French government for the extradition of Ortega and his accomplices. Marshal Couchea has taken immense trouble to hush up the affair, but all his efforts have been ineffectual. He went personally to the Auditor-at-War, and said to him: 'It is impossible that a Spanish general can be guilty of so serious a charge.' The Auditor only replied by showing him the papers and the Marshal was forced to admit that the accusation was well-founded. Marshal Serrano also took steps to procure an acquittal, but desisted when he saw the evidence."

The Weser Gazette and other German papers announces that the Poles who returned to Russia on the faith of the Emperor's amnesty, have been arrested.

RAVAGES OF THE CHOLERA IN MADEIRA.—Fears of Famine.—The Baltimore Sun of the 23d inst. says the cholera, which at last advices was subsiding, has created great distress at Madeira. A letter from there, dated August 21, says:

It seems to be gradually creeping round the island in a westerly direction. Funchal is decidedly the worst place. For some days, I cannot venture to say how many have died, but perhaps not less than 150 per day, near the beginning of this month. On Sunday, the 3d of August, about 150 lay unburied on the burying-ground, and nobody to do the work. The soldiers were obliged to compel the people to do it, whilst they burnt tar in great quantities to stifle the effluvia.

At Canico the disease has been dreadful—the people dying right and left, without any one to give the slightest assistance or advice.

This epidemic has chiefly been among the working classes and poorest people, but many of a better class have perished. Medicines and mustard for plasters have failed. For the latter turpentine plasters have been substituted.

Another letter says "the amount of suffering that must ensue from the sweeping pestilence is fearful to contemplate; apart from its present ravages, being at a season devoted to agricultural pursuits, want and famine must follow in its train. Many women left widows, and children left fatherless, are thrown upon their own resources, in an impoverished island, formerly so flourishing and beautiful. Medicines and doctors have been sent to the Island by the Portuguese and English governments.

Several gentlemen in New York, as we learn from the Journal of Commerce, are engaged in obtaining relief for the sufferers.

Santeuil, the French poet, used to tell the following story: "I was one day seated in a confessional chair; a lady came and kneeled by me, and gave me the history of her whole life. Fearing that I did not make any answer at the conclusion of her recital, she demanded absolution. 'Do you take me for a priest madam' said I. 'If you are not,' replied the lady, 'why did you listen to me?' I will go and inform against you at the police.' And I, madam, will go and inform your husband."

Report of Commissioner Corwine on the Panama Massacre.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times, of the 22d, furnishes that paper with the following information on the above named subject, in a dispatch dated Washington, September 21st:

Mr. Corwine, in his report, states that the riot was commenced by a colored native, who fired a pistol at an American passenger, who was intoxicated. The subsequent attack upon the railroad depot, and the firing upon the passengers, was in pursuance of a plan deliberately formed in advance, in which the authorities of Panama were actively concerned—the police being parties to the plot—and that the ill-mute with the passengers was merely seized upon as a pretext for commencing the assault.

He states also that the military authorities of Panama failed utterly in their duty—that they did nothing to suppress the riot—that they connived at the attack of the police and mob upon the station-house—and were themselves to a very great extent responsible for the massacre.

As the conclusion of the whole matter, Mr. Corwine reports that the Government of New Granada is utterly unable to maintain law and order, and incompetent to the protection of passengers and property crossing the Isthmus. He refers to a variety of incidents within the past few years to sustain this position.

He also recommends the immediate occupation of the Isthmus, from ocean to ocean by the United States, as absolutely necessary for the purposes of securing safety and tranquility to the transit, unless New Granada, after the proper representations shall have been made, and the necessary demand made upon her, in pursuance of treaty stipulations, can satisfy us as to her ability and inclination to afford the proper protection and make speedy and ample atonement for the wrongs inflicted upon our countrymen by the people and officials of the State of Panama.

These recommendations are backed by strong arguments, and are accompanied by elaborate statements of the amount of business done across the Isthmus, and of the extent to which American lives and property require protection.

The report engages the attention of the President and Cabinet. A strong disposition is evinced in some quarters to act immediately upon its recommendations. It is probable, however, that nothing decisive will be done until after the Presidential election. The effect of an immediate movement upon the result of the canvass is feared.

You may rely upon it, however, that Mr. Corwine would not have urged so lofty a policy as this unless certain of being backed up by the Government. He has been appointed Consul at Panama, and unless supported by the Administration, would be very likely to have his exequatur refused by the New Granadian Government for such a recommendation.

A splendid building has been erected, inferior to none in the United States in Architectural beauty. The University has been a year and a half established in this place, and closed with 181 students, presaging the speedy realization of its design. The health of the students has been remarkable, and no case of sickness having occurred. It will be seen that the Rev. A. R. Ewin, a gentleman of the highest reputation as a scholar and teacher, of Nashville, and formerly of Clarksville, has been added to the faculty. Professor DeSoto, a graduate of Centre College, Kentucky, and resident for many years in New Orleans, most highly recommended, has arrived, and will be ready to enter upon his duties as Professor of Modern Languages at the opening of the session.

Ample arrangements have been made for the board of students in private families. For further information see Catalogue at this office, or apply by letter to any member of the Faculty or Board of Trustees at Florence. c4

A WELL-PROVED REMEDY for WORMS.

WINER'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE has been tested in more than two hundred thousand cases of worms, in Canada and the United States. It immediately and infallibly relieves the patient from those life-destroying creatures, and thus prevents convulsions, hydrocephalus, inflammation of the eyes, paralysis, consumption, fainting fits and many other terrible visitations, one or other of which is sure in the end to be engendered, if the worms are neglected. It is the opinion of medical men that a majority of the fatal diseases of children are traceable to intestinal worms. Under such circumstances it is madness to overlook so safe and certain a means of curesas the Canadian Vermifuge.

Be particular and remember the name "Winer's Canadian Vermifuge." This is the only article that can be depended on. For sale in New Orleans wholesale and retail by

COVINGTON FEMALE SEMINARY.

LOCATED at Covington, Tipton county, twelve miles North of Stanton Depot, on the Memphis and Ohio Railroad.—The fourth session of this Institution will commence on the first Monday in August, 1856.

The past session our school numbered 104 pupils. During the summer vacation we shall make arrangements for the ample and satisfactory accommodation of all who may favor us with their patronage. We can speak confidently that our school offers superior inducements to parents seeking a quiet healthful home for their daughters during their term of study.

The decided healthfulness of Covington is a fact attested by all who have known our village from its earliest settlement.—From the commencement of our school there has not a single death occurred among our pupils. Our location removes us from exposure to those epidemics which so frequently and fearfully prevail in towns located further South or on the rivers.

Our retired situation and limited population are well calculated to restrain habits of dissipation, and to afford freedom from excitement which is most essential to successful study.

The different denominations have stated services in town every Sabbath. Sabbath Schools are well sustained and are within the reach of all. We promise every effort on our part to inculcate habits of pure morality, and a profound respect for the Biblical and Religious. While we would leave to the parent and preacher the inculcation of sectarian dogmas, we deem it our prerogative and duty, day by day, to testify to the value of experimental religion.

Any information in regard to the plan of study, method of instruction or general regulations of the school can be gained by addressing the subscriber at Covington, or President of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to whom a package of catalogues will be sent.

EXPENSES

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, $8 per month.
Tuition in English branches $10 and $15 per session of five months. The usual charges will be made for music on piano or guitar and the ornamental branches.

CATALOGUES.

The Trustees and Principal at a meeting lately held, adopted a uniform for the following reasons:

1st. To secure economy in dress. It is impracticable to secure it otherwise.

2d. Our young ladies are of diverse pecuniary conditions, as is but to be expected where such a number are thrown together; and this obviously is published to the world by the different styles and quality of dress on all public occasions.

3d. On public occasions we dress often, as well as the young ladies, been mortified to hear this objection remarked.

4th. Without a uniform, there being no rule in the article of dress, the region of whims and caprice is left boundless, and the trouble of satisfying these continually diverse fancies is every article, is burdensome and annoying in the extreme. For the above and other good reasons, we have adopted a uniform, and commend it to our patrons and the public. It must be regarded as a law of the institution.

THE ENGLISH VERSION.

The following letter of Dr. Cumming, in the London Times, is worthy a careful reading:

SIR:—Both here and in America, there has sprung up among some Divines and zealous Christians, a desire to have a new translation of the Holy Scriptures. In America, a new revision is being published, and I must say, judging from the only specimen I have seen, (that of the Book of Job,) my desire to see a new translation in this country is by no means increased. The subject at all events is very much discussed. Some parties, holding peculiar doctrinal views, are very anxious to see the project carried out. Much very plausible evidence of the necessity of it is adduced. It may not be useless or unreasonable, in such circumstances, to adduce a few facts not unlikely to make reflecting minds more satisfied with what we have, and less likely to urge acquiesce in the necessity of what I venture to call a very radical and questionable change.

It appears to me very improbable that so learned, impartial, and judicious a body of translators as the authors of the version of 1611, can be brought together in the 19th century. Their names are dear to every scholar.

Launcelot Andrews, Bishop of Winchester, intimately acquainted with seven languages; Overal, Dean of St. Paul's, whose scholarship alone raised him to eminence; Adrian Seravia, a first rate linquist; Richard Clarke, celebrated for his profound acquaintance with Hebrew, Greek and Latin; Bedwell, the very first Arabic and Oriental scholar of his day, to whom Lightfoot acknowledges the deepest obligation; Kidy, Regius Professor of Hebrew, at Cambridge, pronounced by a competent judge to be the "very chiefest of those who were the flower of the University, for Knowledge of Tongues;" Dr. Rainolds, described in Wood's Athenæ Oxon, as "prodigiously read in all kinds of learning, and most excellent in tongues;" Kilby, renowned for his Hebrew and Rabbinical learning; "Miles Smith, as he says Wood," was so conversant as an expert in Chaldaic, Syriac, and Arabic, that he made them almost as familiar as his native tongue." Brett, Rector of Quainton, was according to the same competent judge, "a famous man for learning as well as piety, and versed in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac and Ethiopic tongues"; Ward, a learned friend of Usher and Bois, reputed to be the first Greek scholar in Europe. These are a few specimens of the profoundly learned, judicious, and pious men who executed the translation of 1611. Let me now adduce several impartial testimonies to its excellence, its accuracy, and faithfulness.

Seldon says, "The English translation of the Bible is the best translation in the world."

Pocock, the highest authority in Oriental literature and languages, describes our version as "being so agreeable to the original that we might well choose among others to follow it, were it not our own."

Dean Swift says: "I am persuaded that the translators of the Bible were masters of an English style much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, which I take to be owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole."

Bishop Lowth says: "The vulgar translation of the Bible is the best standard of our language."

Bishop Horsely observes: "Their reference to the Hebrew idiom is supposed at once to have enriched and adorned our language."

Lord Monboddo,—"I hold the English Bible to be the best standard of the English language we have at this day."

Bishop Middleton,—"The style of our present version is incomparably superior to anything which might be expected from the finical and perverted taste of our own age. It is simple, it is harmonious, it is energetic; and, which is of no small importance, use has made it familiar, and time has rendered it sacred."

Dr. Whittaker,—"It may be compared with any translation in the world, without fear of inferiority. It has not shrunk from the most rigorous investigation, and in spite of numerous attempts to supersede it, it has hitherto remained unrivalled in the affections of the country."

Dr. Adam Clark,—"For accuracy and general fidelity, competent judges allow that this translation greatly exceeds all modern versions, either English or foreign."

Geddes, a learned and laborious Roman Catholic, candidly admits, "If accuracy, fidelity, and the strictest attention to the letter of the text, be supposed to constitute the qualities of an excellent version, this, of all versions, must in general be accounted the most excellent. Every sentence, every word, every letter, and point, seem to have been weighed with the nicest exactitude, and expressed, either in the text or margin, with the greatest precision."

Dr. Newman, whose earliest and purest creed was drawn from it, thus writes of it, as if the miserable contrast to it presented in the Douai and Rheims had awakened all his better feelings, sympathies and recollections: "Who will not say the uncommon beauty and marvellous English of the Protestant Bible is not one of the great strongholds of heresy (Protestantism) in this country. It lives in the ear like a music that can never be forgotten, like the sound of church bells which the convert hardly knows how he can forego. Its felicities seem to be almost things rather than mere words. It is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness. The memory of the dead passes into it.—The potent traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses. The power of all the grief and trials of a man is hidden beneath its words. It is the representative of his best moments, and all that there has been about him of soft, and gentle, and pure, and penitent, and good, speaks to him for ever out of his English Bible. It is his sacred thing, which doubt has never dimmed and controversy never soiled. In the length and breadth of the land there is not a Protestant with one spark of religiousness about him whose spiritual biography is not in his Saxon Bible."

Trench, who quotes and admires these words of Newman, himself a master of the English tongue, speaks of our version as "having the happy wisdom, the instinctive tact with which its authors have steered between any futile mischievous attempt to ignore the full rights of the Latin part of the language on the one side, and on the other any burdening of their version with such a multitude of learned Latin terms as should cause it to forfeit its homely character, and shut up great portions of it from the understanding of plain and unlearned men."

It is also worthy of remark that if all the defects in our version were remedied, the great truth embodied in the articles, creeds, and confessions of the Reformed Church would stand out in brighter and more prominent relief; but the danger of beginning to alter in the present state and temper of parties does seem so real, that, as long as there can be secured a learned and honest ministry, it is better to leave slight mistranslations to their living correction. With a severe logical mind, our early, deep, and inveterate associations with its very letter may go for very little.—But human nature is not all understanding, and its only nutriment is not hard logic. Few of us are aware how small a share pure reason has in the formation of some of our deepest and most decided convictions. The words of our English version have been wrought into the very substance of our speech, our thoughts, and household terms. They ring like sweet chimes in our hymns, our prayers, our best sermons. The best and purest literature of our country has its roots in that noble version; and never does orator speak with such force, or poet sing with such pathos, as when they find fit vehicles of their thoughts in its imagery, its text, and homely Saxon.

It is no slight apology for retaining our present version that it is the common anchorage at this moment of all the sections of the Protestant Church. Here they ride out many a heavy storm, and feel nearer and more akin to each other as they look at, and love and study their common heritage. The Catholic tongue of Protestant Christendom is here, and our various denominations, after talking in their respective dialects and peculiar provincialisms, return and are refreshed by speaking their common mother tongue. Here is the broad quiet field where all Christians may feel, after they are weary with jostling in the narrow paths of sectional differences, a freshness and dewy purity in the air, and a fragrance and a music all around that must serve to deaden and diminish.

Should you have space, and I have time, I may venture to add in another paper a few comparative proofs of the vast superiority of our common version to the trim, new-fangled version now issuing from the American press—the miserable so named "improved" version of the Unitarian body, and the heavy and distorted production of the learned men of Douai and Rheims. Meanwhile let the importance of the subject, the recent propositions of Mr. Heywood in Parliament, and the late agitation of it out of doors, plead my apology for this communication. I am, sir, your obedient servant. JOHN CUMMING.

GERMAN MISSIONS.

To the Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South:

Dear Brother:—It is a long time since we gave you our last report of the missionary work among the German people in New Orleans. Our silence has, however, not been occasioned by a spiritual drought. No, thank God, during these long and hot summer months we have had copious showers of mercy and grace to fructify this portion of God's moral vineyard. The missionaries and their families, as well as our people, have graciously been spared from sickness, with the exception of a few that have had the typhus fever.

Our work has been going on uninterruptedly, and God has smiled upon us and blessed our labors.

The work is gradually going forward in the First Mission. There has been no revival of a special kind, but the Missionary has been attending to his work faithfully. He preached the word in season and out of season. He has practically carried out the injunction of the Apostle Paul, "Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine."

Some of the material for building a spacious brick church for this mission has been purchased, and had there not been such a painful scarcity of funds, the building would have been put up this summer. We trust, however, that in the superintending providence of God, the means will be forthcoming to erect and finish this so much needed edifice.

In the Second Mission we have had a glorious time ever since our conference. There has been a continual revival up to the present time. We have received sixty into the Church on probation since Conference, fifty of these we have reason to believe were happily converted to God. The largest number of these converts were born and reared within the pales of the Roman Catholic Church; they have now firmly and forever renounced the soul-destroying errors of Romanism. One of them was a daughter of the old stock of Israel, but has now become a Christina Mary Magdalena, (the name given to her at her baptism,) a happy follower of Jesus Christ.

A number of these new converts have wonderful tales to tell of their former religious career in superstition and sin, especially of their priests, under whose dominion they were; who not only blinded their spiritual eyes with their damnable superstitions, but tried also to weaken their natural understanding and make them believe that the cohabiting of a holy Priest of the holy mother Church of Rome, was the greatest temporal blessing a pretty looking girl, or even a married young woman could receive. But the fathers and husbands were not quite so eager to covet such a blessing, their eyes began to open, and they emerged from the gross darkness of a priest-ridden Church into the marvelous light of the Son of God.

Our Beer-Garden Chapel has already yielded the interest of the few hundred dollars that were spent in building it. Would that all our friends could have been present on last Sunday at the Sacramental meeting that was held in it.—Our beloved Presiding Elder, Dr. Kenner, preached to a well filled house on the words: "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Math. 25:34. Although the greatest part could not understand all the preacher said, nevertheless all were blessed, for the spirit of God was in it.

The Lord's Supper was a feast to all. About one hundred partook of it. Among all this number there were perhaps not ten whose eyes were not suffused with tears of joy and gratitude. At the close of the meeting we opened the doors of the Church, and twenty-six came forward, old and young, and surrounded the altar to give us their hands and names, and we trust to God their hearts. Publicans and sinners are among the number.

So then dear friends of Christ and his missionary cause, whilst we assure you that, aided by your willing gifts, we were enabled to erect this Chapel in a very destitute part of the city, we can also publish to you that already the hymns of praise go up to God from it, and the shouts of new-born souls ring within its walls to the praise of our glorious King Emanuel.

A very interesting young woman was led to this Chapel to hear us preach, merely to amuse herself, but the word of God became too strong for her, and her amusement was turned into weeping. Last week she was hopefully converted to God, and thereby rescued from a house of ill-fame.

Thanks to God, whilst pleasure-seekers went out of the city to spend, as they no doubt anticipated, happy moments of choicest pleasure at those resorts of [illegible] vanity, we were made to experience pleasures far superior to those that the worldly-minded ever may experience in having been instrumental in leading and guiding precious immortal souls to the kingdom of heaven. Whilst hundreds of those pleasure-hunters are now numbered with the dead, and a large number have lost all they possessed, we still enjoy good health, are strong in body, and are rich in the reception of our daily bread. The aid and co-operation of our beloved Brother Jacob Uber, Local Preacher, has been very valuable to us. May God bless him and raise him up to take his stand as a regular soldier in the regiments.

The Third and Fourth Missions have been kept alive, the Missionary has tried hard to maintain his ground. From the recent success we have had, of coming into possession of two new Chapels in that department of our missionary work, we take courage, and hope that we shall finally succeed. In the Fourth District, a neatly built Chapel, standing on a lot of ground 64 feet front, and well lifted up, was deeded to our Church by the Trustees of the United Disciples of Christ Church. The property is valued at $3,000, and $700 must be paid on it yet as a debt resting upon it. There is a fine prospect in this part of the city (on Sixth street,) to gather a large congregation.

In Carrollton a very neat Chapel was built this summer with a steeple to it, which is now ready for dedication.—May God move upon the hearts of his people, and cause them to aid in the cancelling of the debt contracted in building it, which amounts to about $1200. We hope that this house will, by the blessing of God, be the means of drawing a larger number of hearers and of increasing the Society. May those that love Christ and the Missionary cause still remember us and aid us with their means and prayers.

New Orleans, Sept. 27, 1856.

Death of Two Ministers.

UNION CHURCH, Miss., September 26, 1856.

Another minister has fallen. Rev. Stephen Regan, long and well known as a pious and useful Methodist preacher died of Dropsy at his residence in Marion county, Mississippi, August 10, 1856, in the 60th year of his age, and 30th of his christian ministry.

Bro. Regan was born in North Carolina in 1796. When quite young came to Marion county and settled a farm, where amassed quite a competency for his family. When at the age of seventeen he was aroused to a concern about the salvation of his soul: he shortly afterwards found peace in believing in his Saviour and attached himself to the M. E. Church, which church he served with faithfulness and zeal until he came to this county, when he felt it impressed upon him to preach the gospel. He conferred not with flesh and blood, but immediately asked and obtained a license to preach from the Water Holes church, where he lived a pattern of christian piety, beloved and venerated as a man of God and a christian minister.

Bro. Regan was never connected with the regular itinerant ministry, yet he sometimes labored much within his reach. Though he possessed a good order of talents he was not altogether free from weakness, still it pleased God, to honor him above many of his fellows. When he spent the thirty years of his ministry and when he ceased to work, even with his armor bright. Though his health was often very bad, for many years he was ready to work, to meet and help the circuit preacher, and take him to his house, where he found a home, a resting place, and one ever ready to cheer and comfort him in his toil and labor of love.

He loved the church, he knew and loved her doctrine and discipline. It was his delight to study the word of God, to instruct and correct the errors of his neighbors and brothers. He was a man of prayer, "and ordered his family aright before the Lord." He never withheld from them his prayers and Godly counsel.

For many years before his death he was so severely afflicted with Asthma as not to be able to labor but little, yet he maintained his integrity. For several months before his death could not go out of his house, yet he would labor there around his dying bed, exhorting his family and friends to live right and fear God, for his work was now done, he could not stay with them longer to counsel them.

Bro. Regan was a man sound in judgement and doctrine, though some what peculiar in some of his notions, yet he feared God and loved his church. He had the practical views of heartfelt bible religion and loved to talk of its enjoyment "for the secret of the Lord was with him."

During his illness he spoke often and freely to the writer of this sketch of his sufferings, and we rejoiced together while speaking of meeting his father and children in heaven. He blessed the Lord that his long and severe suffering would soon be over.

His death though sudden was indeed triumphant. He exhorted his wife and children to be faithful and meet him in heaven for said he, "I soon will be there." His last hours were calm and full of peace. As he neared the turbid waves of boisterous Jordan, he asked his wife not to leave him for Jesus is here. He suddenly but sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

JOHN B. DAWEN.

BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, La., September 24.

Bro. McTyeire:—It was my lot to stand by the bedside of our Bro. Jeptha Hughes and see him breathe his last on the 11th day of this month, about quarter past eight o'clock, P. M. Bro. Hughes, as you know, was a preacher on this (Morehouse) circuit, with Bro. J. Pipes. Bro. Hughes was a man of no ordinary preaching abilities, he lived right and died right. He said a short time before he died, he had no fears of death. He talked but little for some days before he died, but seemed to be conscious of every thing. Even when he was evidently dying, he turned and looked at me and I asked him if he knew me, he motioned his mouth and nodded his head. I have no doubt but Bro. Hughes is now reaping the reward of his many years labors, as a Methodist preacher, and an humble follower of our Lord. He has left an affectionate wife and four children as well as a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. But our loss is his gain.

Yours truly,

E. K. W. ROSS.

Confession of Sin.

Confession of sin, and its relation to the forgiveness of sin, is a subject of great practical moment. There is in the Bible, now and then, a startling prominence given to Confession, as though it were all that is necessary to the soul's forgiveness. It is true that the Bible assigns great prominence and importance to the humble and thorough confession of one's sins, the individual bringing, as far as practicable, everything forth into the light. And it is not difficult to conceive and assign some reasons for this.

By this course, evidence is furnished that a process of faithful dealing is begun with the soul. The way of confession involves the essential idea of thoroughness, because it is a separating, analyzing process—a taking up of the parts, going through the books, item by item. Very much as the merchant does, if he would know how he stands. A rough lumping and guess will afford no satisfaction to a creditor of his.—But when he takes up the details, then he means to know, and those concerned shall know all about it.

By this accuracy of detail involved in the idea of confession, separating our sins, looking at the items and parts of our sinning, we gain the most vivid conception or realization of the amount of our sinning, the enormous bulk and magnitude which grows up from the sum total of our sinning. By entering into the minuteness in question, we are helped to understand how great sinners we are, just as going over the parts, or running separately to pass before the mind the parts, which go to make up some enormous material bulk, brings us the nearest to an adequate conception of that bulk. How imperfect our idea of the size of the earth, from reading the figures—25,000 miles around it. But when we begin and survey in detail, with the number and dimensions of each, the continents, islands, peninsulas, oceans, seas, lakes, rivers, which go to make up the earth's size, we have then, impressively mapped to our vision, the greatness of the world we inhabit. Just so it is, we approximate, in thought, toward the bulk, the vast aggregation of our sinning.

Another important service confession renders, is, that the particularity so essential to it, affects the heart. It is a law of our nature that specific views and statements move us, whilst generals are remote and cold. By confessing sin, the heart becomes more sensibly affected with the evil—the unmixed hatefulness of sin. It is the remark of one in the olden time, that, "while sin sits close in the heart its baseneess is hid; we cannot see it, till we cast it forth by confession; as a man cannot see the corruption that is in his stomach till he spits it out." In this way, by a course of thorough, faithful confession, one attains to utter, is ever constrained to utter the patriarch's self-abhorring formula—"Behold I am vile." In this way, he comes into a state to receive, and become a partaker of the promise couched in the Apostle John's pregnant words: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The same authority tells us in the immediate connection, that it is not the confession, but the blood of Jesus Christ his Son that cleanseth us from all sin. Another Apostle tells us, that this only cleanses, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." It is not worth the while to go into an argument to show, that according to the Scriptures, the blood, the atonement of Christ is the ground, the procuring cause of the pardon, the cleansing, not the confession. The confession is connected as a condition; a fit and reasonable, still only a condition. It is the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son which cleanses us from Sin. We cannot then more fitly close these remarks than by exalting, in connection with the confession, and infinitely above it, the Blood which cleanseth.—[Independent.

Later from Havana.

By the arrival Monday morning of the United States Mail Steamship Black Warrior, Capt. Hulloch, from New York via Havana, we have dates from the latter place to the 3d inst., from which we extract the following items:

A forged check on the Industrial Bank at Havana, for $10,400, was paid by that bank a short time since. It was presented by a mere youth, who succeeded in escaping with the money, although his residence had been ascertained and searched.

The passengers of the British mail steamer Tay, whose wreck we have previously noticed, arrived at Havana on the 27th, on the British steamer Amphion. They reported the Tay as being a total wreck, nothing being saved but a few sails and boats, the passengers' baggage even being lost.

The schooner Mary W., Capt. Thomas, from Rio, bound for New Orleans, was totally lost off Cape Corientes, on the night of the 29th August. The captain, his wife and the crew barely escaped with their lives, as the vessel sunk in deep water, two minutes after she struck. They landed in an uninhabited part of the Island of Cuba, and after suffering many hardships arrived safely in Havana. They speak in the highest terms of the kindness which they received at the hands of the people in the towns through which they passed.

Yellow fever had almost entirely disappeared from the Island, and business was rapidly improving.

Wian and Chauncey, the American seamen who had been sentenced to the chain gang, had been sent to the Isle of Pines.

The American Consul at Havana publishes in the Diario de la Marina that the rates at which tobacco will be in future received into Mexico.

Insurrection from Northern Mexico.

By the schooner Chrysolite, Capt. Ackerly, which arrived on Sunday, from Brazos Santiago, we have received copies of the Matamoros Libertad Extra, of the 16th and 17th ult. From these we learn that the troubles which for some months have been threatening Nuevo Leon with civil war, had at last reached the culminating point.

The troops of Nuevo Leon who adhered to Gen. Vidauri, have been defeated while attempting to invade the State of San Louis de Potosi. The battle took place at a town called Matahuala; it was a total rout.

Several other divisions of Vidauri's army have been defeated; one under command of Col. Martin Zayas, at Villagrave, and another consisting of 500 men, while attacking the town of Mier.

The Libertad Extra says:

The troops with which Don Vidauri wished to open the campaign, have been destroyed by toe defenders of the government. The ex-general in chief of the army of the North will surely not triumph in Tamaulipas, for the people of the State defend it with bravery, in defence of liberty and reform, which the Executive of the Republic wishes to establish in conformity with the plan of Ayutla. The people of Nuevo Leon and Coahuila will not continue to spill their blood to carry out the caprices of one whose only aim is absolute dominion on the frontier. This we hope, from their good sense, and the convictions that peace and order are the first necessity of the country.

The same paper also publishes the details of the capitulation of Vidauri's partisans after their defeat at Mier. Vidauri's troops were to retire with their arms, on condition of not serving against the Government on any future occasion; the prisoners were to be liberated, the dead buried, and the wounded attended by the government surgeons.

WEATHER IN CONCORDIA PARISH.—The Vidalia Intelligencer of the 2d inst., says:

Ever since Sunday week up to the present writing, the weather has been remarkably cold for a Southern September.

On Sunday, the 21st of September, there was a cold equinoctial rain-storm which ceased on Monday, but left cold dreary clouds behind; and cold wintry mornings has been the order of the weather clerk ever since.

There was frost last week, but there has been a more powerful one on Tuesday night of the present week.

The ground on Wednesday morning, as we have authentic information to state, was whitened with frost from Natchez as far west as Trinity.

IN OUACHITA.—The Ouachita Register, of the 27th ult., says:

On Wednesday morning last, the 24th inst., we had the pleasure of taking a chilly look at Jack Frost, whose advent here so early has caused some astonishment.

IN WEST BATON ROUGE.—The Sugar Planter, of the 4th inst., says:

Jack Frost, that hoary-headed individual, has come in good earnest. On Wednesday morning last, he spread himself intensely. The grass and house-tops looked as if a small snow storm had taken place.

FIRST ANNUAL FAIR AT GRENADA.—The Agricultural and Mechanical Association of this flourishing town announce their first annual fair, to be holden on "The Fair Grounds," at that place, and commence October 22d. The articles for premiums are comprised under the general head of "American Manufactures," "Agriculture," "Live Stock," and "Written Articles on Agriculture and Horticulture."

Nothing that grows in the South or is made by human hands here, but can come into competition for a premium at this fair.

FROST IN NATCHEZ.—The Courier, of the 2d inst, says:

There was no mistaking the white frost yesterday morning—it was apparent to any and every one that sallied forth before sunrise—It was on the hills and in the valleys, wherever the eye might be directed. Yesterday, the first day of October, we had a severe white frost! One that the tender plants must have felt, and one that will doubtless prove of great injury to them. We could not refrain from the reflection, that while the fever was prostrating our people last year on the first of October, what a blessing of hope such a demonstration would have been to her citizens.

SHIPWRECK.—The Philadelphia Ledger, of the 1st instant, publishes the following special dispatch:

Atlantic City, Sept. 30, 1856.—Bark Kirkland, of Baltimore, Robert Benthall, master, from Rio Janeiro, bound to New York, laden with coffee, came ashore last night, about four miles south of Absecom. Vessel a total loss; crew saved.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC AT NEW YORK.

The United States Mail Steamship Baltic, Comstock, commander, arrived at New York on the morning of the 29th ult. She left Liverpool on the 17th.

A demonstration of welcome to John Frost, the Chartist, was made in London on the 15th. A procession moved along the streets to Primrose Hill, where the meeting was constituted. Ernest Jones occupied the chair. The exercises commenced by the singing of a democratic ode to the air of "God save the Queen," after which various speakers addressed the assemblage. The proceedings were characterized by good order and moderation. About 10,000 persons were present.

The London Times, in a leading article, ridicules the Chartist demonstration, calls it a complete failure, and requests the attention of its respected friend King Bomba, to the fact that in the capital of Great Britain a set of foolish fanatics are at full liberty to parade the streets and prate at their will about the destruction of our religious and political superstitions.

A meeting of the National Sunday League was held in St. Martin's Hall, London, and a resolution adopted that the music in the Parks of the metropolis and in the towns of the Kingdom on Sundays, has been pro-

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says:

As yet no preparations are making for the Congress to be held at Paris this winter, and which is to consist of the second representatives who assisted at the Congress last spring; but there appears to be no doubt that such a meeting will be held, with a view to settle, with the least possible delay, questions arising out of the treaty of Paris.

In reference to the rumors that have been so long afloat concerning the Emperor's health, the Independance says:

The Emperor, as to whose health so many exaggerated and even ridiculous reports are in circulation, is very well. There is, in fact, nothing the matter with him but some indolmable, flying gout pains, for which he went to be cured at Plombieres, and which will prevent him from taking so much horse exercise as he has been accustomed to.—Dr. Barthe, from Paris, is now attending his Majesty.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily News writes:

I have just learned a piece of news which may perhaps be considered very important. The Prussian Ambassador, Count de Hatzfelt, accompanied by his lady, left Paris this morning for Biarritz, where it is said they are to stay a week. This looks very like an entente cordiale between the French Emperor and the King of Prussia on the subject of Neufchatel.

In the Paris correspondence of the London Post we find the following paragraph:

I believe I may inform you that the French and English Governments are under the impression that the conduct of the King of Naples will oblige them to withdraw the members of their respective missions, and break off all diplomatic relations. At the present moment I am assured Austria is using every effort to prevent such a proceeding, but the next few days must, I now think, bring this long pending question to a crisis.

The Cologne Gazette states that the new collective note which the Western Powers intend sending to the King of Naples, and which, it is said, has already been forwarded, dwells on the necessity of carrying out the following four points: 1. Suppression of the arbitrary authority of the police and of punishments arbitrarily inflicted by that body. 2. An amelioration in the political administration, and a modification in the exercise of justice in what relates to judicial proceedings previously to trial. 3. The creation of credit establishments, so as to give an impetus to commerce and manufactures. 4. Permission to all emigrants and exiles to return to their country, and their restoration to their civil rights and former position, provided they sign an act of submission.

The affair in Kabylia, Algeria, which took place on the 2d inst., is detailed in a report to the French Secretary of War. The crops of the French had been gathered, and were heaped up around the village of Dra-el-Mizan, when 6,000 Kabyles came down to burn it, one battalion of the 45th regiment, and a squadron of Chasseurs d'Afrique. The natives were put forward in advance and the regulars remained in concealment. The Kabyles came on furiously and drove back the native contingent, but suddenly found themselves charged with the bayonet by the battalion of infantry. Notwithstanding the superiority of discipline and arms on the side of the French the great disparity of numbers rendered the contest severe and its result, for a time, doubtful, until the Chasseurs d'Afrique charged finally with great effect, and the enemy fled. On the 5th the mountaineers came down again, but they had not reckoned on the considerable reinforcements the French had received in the interval, and they were driven back with loss. It is said that an expedition against the Kabyles will at once take place. Any operations that the French have contemplated against the Riff pirates are for the present postponed.

Count Berkenhoff, it is expected, will arrive in Madrid shortly for the purpose of announcing to the Queen of Spain the accession of the Czar to the throne, as a first step towards the establishment of diplomatic relations between the courts of St. Petersburg and Madrid.

It is stated that Gonzales Bravo is to be appointed Minister of Spain at Washington.

There is nothing new politically from Spain.

Accounts from the Canary Islands mention that the state of siege was proclaimed there on the 8th, on receipt of orders to that effect from the home Government.

The Spanish Government had received dispatches from the Captain-General of Cuba, dated 12th of August, announcing that the island continued to enjoy tranquility, and that its sanitary condition had improved.

Details of the Czar's coronation at Moscow are received, and correspondents all rm the pageant to have been on a most extraordinary scale of splendor. After the ceremony was performed, an important ukase was issued, by which an amnesty was accorded to the political offenders of 1820 and 1831, and in other respects a foundation has been laid for great practical reforms.

The Suisse journal announces that the Federal Council had replied to the note presented to it by the Prussian representative, M. de Sydow, in reference to Neufchatel, in which note the Prussian Government reserved its right of sovereignty over the canton. In reply, the Federal Council declares that it cannot admit the right claimed by Prussia, for the reason already expressed in the negative reply of the Federal Directory of the 1st and 6th of March, 1848, and the Council expresses regret that events, in every way deplorable, should have given a motive for the renewal of this protest.

According to the same journal, M. de Sydow had an interview with M. Stompfli, President of the Federal Council, from whom he demanded that the prisoners should be treated with kindness, and that the judicial inquiry and trial should not be too hastily conducted, as such a course might complicate still more the diplomatic relations of Prussia with the confederation, and might create fresh difficulties. M. Stompfli replied that Switzerland was the last country to which such observations ought to be addressed, since its legislation with respect to political offences and crimes was the least severe that existed. Justice, he added, should take its course, and the confederation was firmly determined to reject all diplomatic intervention.

Letters from China have come to hand. At Canton is reported (as was announced by telegraph per Canada,) the suspension of the long-established firm of Wetmore & Co. Their failure was quite unexpected. Liabilities are stated at $324,000, and assets at $318,000. The amount due to foreigners on the spot is calculated at $50,000, and to Chinese about $30,000.

Dr. Parker, U. S. Commissioner, was at last accounts at Foochow, but had been unable to get an interview with the Viceroy.

The U. S. steamer Jacinta broke down on her way to Simoda, Japan, with Consul Townsend Harris on board, and had put back to Whampoa for repairs.

The Indian mail brings intelligence from Foochow, July 24th, of an unfortunate affair which occurred there, and by which an American gentleman, Mr. Howard Cunningham, lost his life. A street row occurred between some of the Canton men belonging to an American firm, and the people of the place. Mr. Cunningham attempted to disperse the parties, and was stabbed.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.—The New York Times' Washington correspondent, in a dispatch dated Monday, 29th ult., gives the following interesting items of Washington news:

It is said the Administration will make a demand on New Granada for speedy and ample atonement for the wrongs inflicted on our countrymen by officers and people of the State of Panama—and meanwhile our naval forces will exercise more vigilance than heretofore for the protection of our citizens of the Isthmus.

Court-martial will be ordered to try certain officers of the brig Bainbridge, upon charges of immorality and conduct detrimental to the naval service, on the arrival of the Savannah from the Brazil station, which is daily expected at New York, there being on board of the latter vessel several material witnesses of Government.

New Dress.—In a few weeks we expect to present the New Orleans Christian Advocate to its patrons in a new dress—plain as a Quaker and as neat. The present type of the third and fourth pages and that in which extracts are set on the first and second pages will be enlarged. And other wholesome arrangements introduced. As to the sheet itself, there will be a better material of paper, but no enlargement, at least not until the beginning of a new volume.

New Books.—We are indebted to the publishers Garrett & Co., New York, through the politeness of Mr. Norman, Book Seller and Stationer 14 Camp street, for the following volumes just from the press:—

Magdalen Hepburn: by Mrs. Olyphant. This is a story of the Scottish Reformation, so rich in heroic material—by the author of "Zaidee"—which the readers of Blackwood will accept as a sufficient recommendation.

Life and Learn.—A convenient and well devised guide for all who wish to speak and write correctly; instructions in the practice of punctuation and how to write for the press, etc. We recommend this little red book.

Rev. J. M. Bonnell, says the Christian Advocate, passed through Nashville, last week, en route for Tuskaloosa, to take charge of the Female Seminary in that place. He informs us that on the eve of his leaving Frankfort, Ky., the Methodist church in that city was consumed by fire. Vigorous measures were instantly initiated to erect a new and better building.

A Wise Donation.—Mr. Farmer, M. P. a munificent British Methodist, had each member of the late Wesleyan Conference presented with a copy of "The Tongue of Fire," at his own cost. We should like to be able to give away a few thousands, in the same way, at the approaching Conferences of the M. E. Church in America.

Dr. Smith's Book.—The lectures of the President of Randolph Macon College, Virginia, on the Philosophy and Practice of Slavery have been booked neatly by our Book Agents and a copy is before us. We have prepared a somewhat extended notice for next week's paper. It is a book ad tempora. If we had a depository here it seems to us we could sell a large edition of it, within the next few months. It is bold and honest—sound, sensible and Southern.

Cost of Episcopacy.—The papers of the Protestant Episcopal Church are trying to stir up the members of that communion to endowing their Diocesan Episcopacy. New York and Pennsylvania have large funds, the others have little or none. The Bishop throws himself upon the Parishes along with the pastors. Alabama has 1100 communicants. The assessments on the Parishes made in 1854, for the support of the Bishop, were about $2,400, or more than $2 for each communicant! The salary of the Bishop, we observe, is $2,250 per annum.

British Wesleyan Finances.—The leading financial interests of the Wesleyan Methodists, as reported at the late Conference, are in excellent condition. The contributions for the year stand about as follows:

Foreign Missions	$000,000
Home Missions	00,000
Chapel Building and Loan Church	000,000
Theological Training of Students	11,000
Education of Ministers' Children	15,000
Day Schools for the Poor	22,000
Sabbath Schools	40,000
Trust Society	18,000

The devil tempts industrious people; but idle people tempt the devil.

MORAL ABILITY AND INABILITY.

THE GREAT QUESTION DODGED.

The Puritan Recorder broaches in an editorial series a theory on the "Incorruptible Seed," in which is put forth the latest phase of metaphysical Calvinism. It maintains the idea that the life which springs up in the soul at regeneation, has its seed in the word, or thought, of God, effectually conveyed, then for the first time, to the mind. This rationale the Editor thinks throws light on the vexed question of ability and inability. Regeneratiou is wrought by God's effoctually speaking his own thought into the mind. Every human mind has an ability to receive what God gives, when he brings in his gift with a strong hand, over all obstructions that the carnal mind interposes.

We give an extract from the Recorder September 25, touching the general application to this new view:

It shows us, in the next place, the inutility of some of the disputes about human liberty in regeneration. Some earnestly insist, that in regeneratioo, the mind has "a liberty of contrary choice," or a "self-determining power." Such questions, however, may be left to be settled by metaphysicians, and the truth in this case may all be saved to us without the labor of settling them at all. If God regenerates the soul by that thought becomes the spark to kindle the new and divine life, then we see not why the recipient of of the thought stands not as free in receiving it, as men do in receiving a new thought from any other source. The question of a liberty of the contrary choice has no place in our process of receiving the communicated thoughts of other minds, since really no choice is exercised in that intellectual act. All that God's power, exerted in the case of our receiving his thoughts, does, is to remove the obstructions existing in our minds—insensibility and death. The whole is embraced in his effectual conveyance of his own thoughts to the sinner. The liberty of our will seems to be neither infringed nor exercised in the case. The intellect acts, of course, in taking the idea, after all obstructions of heart and will are removed. When, under such circumstances, God speaks, the soul hears, and God's idea is taken before the will acts, and it becomes the cause of the will's subsequent action. God's idea, so presented to the mind, is as sure to be received by the understanding, as the image of an object presented to the eye is sure to imprint himself on the retina. To an open eye the light of heaven insures an effectual conveyance of the image, without an act of will. So when God opens the eye of the mind, by removing all the blindness of the heart, his own light insures the impress of his own idea upon it, without an interference of the will pro or con. He simply conveys his own idea to a mind now not unwilling to receive it.

So it comes to this; that the Calvinistic theories of power of choice and inability are thrown overboard altogether. They can't stand. They won't hold out. Their advocates, weary of their weakness and contradictions and difficulties, are resorting to a theory that leaves out the will and dodges the whole question.

THE EXPURGATED OVID.

We liked the plan of Professor Brooks' Ovid, as far as we had leisure to examine it, on its appearance a few years ago, and so spoke of it. A critical friend has gone over it carefully and we take pleasure in laying his opinion before those of our readers who take interest in such matters.—[Ed. Adv.

Books' Ovid.—Notwithstanding the highly attractive tate rior of this book, and the declaration in the preface that it is an expurgated edition of the Metamorphoses of that fascinating poet, I amsorry to be compelled to caution teachers who hove not read the work thomselves, against adopting it. Expurgated edition indeed! So far is this from being the case, that there is no small amount of morni filth in it, insomuch that it is altogether an unsuitable book to be introdnced into boys' schools, much less those for girls. I read it through with a pupil myself last year, and was mortified on finding so much corruption in what professed to be undefiled. There is much poetry and mythology in the notes, but hardly any critical matter; and seldom does the author attempt to explain for the pupil passages of real difficulty; so that, on the whole, I cannot but regard it as not ooly deficient, but otherwise as highly objectionable.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Greensboro, September 15, 1856.

I forward you my fourth report, from German Creek, Colored Mission, Alabama Conference. I have received twenty-four by certificate, seven on probation, baptized ten adults, and have had ten conversions. Though we are not able to report a large number of conversions, yet the Lord is in our midst. We have good attendance on the ministration of the word, and many seem deeply coheerned.

A. R. RAMEY.

Leaf River Mission, September 10, 1856.

Bro. McTyeire:—As I have the names of some subscribers for the Advocate to send you, I will now write a line or two on the prospects of our mission.

Since we wrote last, the membership is a little revived. We have had more singing and praying, and some shouting with the old members. On the 14th inst., at Zion, a new house now occupied in the stead of the one called Hollfields, we had a melting season. All of the congregation were very serious, and several wept much. One male and three females were admitted on probation; and one sister into full connection. In the afternoon at Sister Trists God was graciously near; when Wm. B. and Richard C. Trest offered themselves for probation, also one servant. Oh! it was a glad time with christians, while some sinners looked sorry and seemed to mourn.

Pray for us, and may the God of missions hear and answer speedily, in behalf of this mission, the prayers that are offered for it. Yours, etc.

J. H. MASSEY.

Our Judge, instead of condemning us, stept from the Beuch and died for us.

The Southern University—$200,000 Subscribed.

The noble work, is going forward.—Though of quick growth as Jonah's Gourd it promises to have the durability of Jupiter's Oak. This is a happy combination of qualities and desiderated by the present wants of the Church and country, and their duty to future times. The University was planted in a generous soil. We long to see, in the history of our educational enterprises, one full grown Minerva, at birth. Such the University at Greensboro, Ala., promises to be.

Dr. Wadsworth gives us, in private correspondence, such good news, we wish others to share it for encouragement and emulation:

Greensboro, Ala., Sept. 26.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire:—Our great educational enterprise here is progressing steadily. Our industrious agent has been much encouraged in his work, and we confidently expect to have a University in this rich and populous country, which shall be liberally endowed at its birth and shall go on through many ages in the great work of education. The funds now exceed $200,000, and are increasing every month. The workmen are now digging out the foundation, and they will begin to lay the brick walls on the 15th of October. The Trustees, who reside here, are giving much of their attention to the work assigned them. We have been delayed by the want of the carpenter work. We made a satisfactory contract for the brick work several months ago, but the carpenters in this region are so generally and profitably employed in the erection of private dwellings, as to make it very difficult to secure such workmen and make such a contract as we judge to be suitable. We are now waiting for more bids, after many advertisements in papers in different parts of this State, Georgia and Mississippi.

VINDICATION OF BLOUNT CIRCUIT.

We have received from A. M. Gibson, a long communication in reply to certain expressions of Rev. F. G. Ferguson in the Advocate of June 21st, under the caption of "Making Tracks." The expressions objected to were in connection with the mention of Rev. Levi Moore, who died on that Circuit last year. The writer thinks they do injustice to the people of the Circuit, and says they have been the cause of much complaint. Certainly we would not do the Circuit injustice, and exceedingly regret that any grievance should have been felt.

The length of the communication forbids our publishing it in full—nor do we consider it necessary to any of the parties so far as they have been implicated in our columns. We give the material point of the charge and the vindication:

But I come now to that part of Brother Ferguson's article which merits the most minute reply, hear him: "How he (Rev. L. Moore,) was paid or rather supported, and how the last red was exacted from his widowed wife and fatherless children for Doctor's bills and the decencies of burial, I will not tell." I am very sorry indeed that if the facts in the case [illegible] It would have saved the feelings of the people of this Circuit who have seen his article from insult, and me the necessity of writing in reply.

From the Steward's book and other sources of authentic information, I have learned that Brother Moore's claim against the Circuit for the year was—

For allownnce	$404 00
Traveling expenses	36 75
Table expenses allowed by Steward	200 00
Total	640 75
He received, table expenses	$200 00
" Traveling expenses	36 75
" Quarterage	119 70
" Rent of house, worth	40 00
" Mrs. Williams, schooling	25 00
	$722 45

Leaving a balance in the hands of his family of $81 70 over and above the full amount of his claim, and that too beside those perquisites, gifts and favors to him and his family, which those in the itinerancy so generally receive. That is the way in which "he was paid," or as Brother F. says "rother supported!" And that too in a year of very peculior scarcity of provisions and distress among the people generally.—Indeed so liberal had the people of the Circuit been to him, considering all these things, that Brother Moore freely on many occasions, expressed himself as being well pleased and well satisfied with the people, and desired if he had lived, to be sent back on this Circuit another year. His family too, no less than himself, often expressed their thonkfor appreciation of the kindness of the people of Blountsville. And when by force of circumstances they were compelled to leave their once happy home among us, they hade farewell with kindly expressions on their lips and tears in their eyes, to a people who were endeared to them by reciprocal kindness and mutual affectiou. I am at a loss to imagine from what source Brother F. could have drawn the materials to make the many offensive insinuations contained in his article on this subject. It would be unnatural to suppose that Sister Moore would forfeit the good opinion entertained of her by the people of this Circuit, by making unfounded statements to their prejudice.

But to resume: "how the last red was exacted," etc., "for Doctor's bills and the decencies of burial." I am at a loss to know just what Brother F. means by this. Was it the "last red" which the family had? In that sense it is not true, for Sister Moore carried off with her from this place about two hundred dollars in cash. Was it the last red cent which was due? Neither is that correct as far as "Doctor's bills" were concerned. As I am informed neither of the Physicians here who practiced in Brother Moore's family charged one red cent for such practice. Brother Lewis, who is also a preacher in the Methodist Church, was the family Physician of Brother Moore during his stay on this Circuit, whose rule of life has ever been to practice gratuitously in the families of Ministers of the gospel, as can be fully proven wherever he has lived. Soon after Brother Moore's arrivil at this place, it was agreed between them that inasmuch as Brother Lewis would not make a professional charge for practice in Brother Moore's family, he should at least accept pay for the medicines used in such practice. He had visited and prescribed for Brother Moore and his family in sickness, during the whole time of their sojoura in this place—and the value of his medicines used by them during the year was eight dollars and fifty cents. Of this Brother Lewis on settlement deducted five dollars, and the balance $3 50, was cancelled by books he had received from Brother Moore in his life-time. So that "the widowed wife," did not pay him a solitary "red." P. M. Musgrove, a Baptist preacher and Botanic Physician, was called in (in the absence of Brother Lewis,) during the last illness of Brother Moore. For his services I am informed he did not charge, but accepted five dollars from the widow as a voluntary payment on her part.

So far as the decencies of burial were concerned, the Brother who made the coffin informed me that after voluntarily purchasing the necessary trimming, he charged only five dollars for all his labors—which was a very moderate bill. He was a poor man and had a larger and far more helpless family of children to support than our deceased Brother left behind him. He was not therefore able to bestow his labor for nothing.

HAVE FAITH IN REVIVALS.

The best sign of the times is the Revival Spirit now graciously and generally prevailing. Christian congregation—Christian pastor let not your charge be an exception!

The Chicago Christian Advocate has some excellent thoughts on this theme and to the times:

The word revival implies its beginning place. It intimates the existence of some religion, and the means of its promotion. It intimates the existence of spiritual things, though they may be ready to die. It intimates that the revival must commence in the church, and may exist even without resulting in the conversion of souls. The word is scriptural. And yet there are those who look upon revivals as not a necessity—view them as a kind of abnormal condition. Such brethren do exceedingly err, and they will be seldom favored with revivals for their want of faith in them. We would, if it were possible say something that would increase the confidence of all in revivals, and that would induce Christians continually to work for them—to work out not merely their own salvation, but, as it were, the salvation of the church, and others. If we glance at the history of revivals, we will find them of Bible origin, and that they breathe in the prayers of the church; that they murmur among the strings of the prophet's lyres, and make up a large portion of the burden of Bible promises. What means such praying as this, "Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger towards us to cease. Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee? Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation." Again: "Return, we beseech thee O God of hosts; look down from heaven and behold and visit this vine and the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself." Again: hear the prophet Habakuk: "O Lord, revive thy work. In the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

Now, let us consult the prophets of the Bible concerning revivals. If we talk with these holy men, they will tell us stories of revival transformation, and rise before us in revival transport.

Much is said about the danger of undue excitement in revivals of religion. With some, it is feared as the sin of witchcraft. As Methodists, we have never been as fearful and unbelieving on this subject, as some of our neighbors. We have always believed that excitement is essential to revivals, and have not, from our experience, been induced to be so very apprehensive as to its consequences. The case might be very different, were we like many of our neighbors, embarrassed by our creed, in the case. Our Calvinistic friends, however, who would guard against excitement in revivals as if it were an epileptic fit, have not been always able to do so. With nature and their creed at variance, the former has often triumphed, and revivals, with sobs of distress, groans of anguish, and even shouts of joy, have richly favored their sanctuaries. Sometimes, the fearful and fastidious preacher has become alarmed at other times angry, but much oftener has he melted under the divine visitations, and flowed with the flood.

So far as it concerns the compactness, the emphasis, the outspokenness, and the social warmth and adhesiveness of Methodism, it is no more than regenerated human nature acting itself out naturally. We put on it no Procrustean trammel to conform it to a creed, nor does our sense of the befitting—our views of etiquette—close its lips to the loud "roaring" of penitential sorrow, or exultant shouting when pardon bring relief. We view religion as an exciting theme, as one of the most exciting in the universe, and to yield to men without let or censure, the privilege of becoming exceedingly excited on minor topics of the day, and to contend for the absence of excitement on the all-momentous topics of religion, seems to us in absurdity. But it may be asked, whether extremes or extravagances have not occurred under such a system? Well, in reply, we say, singular, as it may seem, extremes and extravagances have occurred among our neighbors, just about as often in proportion, to the powerful revivals they have had, as among ourselves. They are probably, then, unavoidable, even with the exercise of the most prudent foresight. We honestly confess to their frequent existence, and have never seen a convulsed body under religious excitement, without more or less pain or apprehension. It has often turned out, however, much better than our fears, while the good that has resulted from revivals, even where these extravagances have been prominent, has so far exceeded the evil, that we have looked up to the latter as spots on the sun. We would not, however, discourage the exercise of a prudent discipline here. There has, probably, been among us, the workings of a superstitious fear. We have fearful to curtail extravagances, lest we quench the Spirit.

The church has always progressed, as it were, by revival steps. Especially true is this of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Take away that part of her history which appertains to revivals, and you have about annihilated her history. Methodism moves forward by revivals with as stern a necessity, if not in as strict order, as doth the husbandman acquire his wealth by preparing for and then gathering his harvest in its season. Methodism without revivals! Methodist preachers who do not believe in revivals! Both are solecisms.

Were we to glance at the history of revivals since the great one under Luther, we would find that the pure faith of the gospel caught in France, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, the low countries, the mountains of Scotland, and north of Ireland, and in Britian, by the revival law. And such has continued to be the facts in those countries ever since. At an early day—in this country, under the ministrations of Whitefield, Coke and Asbury, and their coadjutors; also, Brainard, Edwards, Davies, and the Tennants, the church was saved from all the icy horrors of formalism by means of revivals. And but for the revivals that have characterized the first half of the present century, where had been the evangelism of America? Could Methodism spare the moral wealth, the spiritual spoils, which she has gathered in revivals the last half century? Take them from her and she would have nothing left. And when Methodism seeks not, by the most direct means, the promotion of revivals—when her attention shall be so directed to the externals of the church, the mere scaffolding, as to forget these weightier matters of the law, then is Ichabod written upon her walls. Her glory is departed, and given to another. Yes, we say, given to another. For Methodism in some form, and under some name, will continue to exist."

REVIVALS.

Pickens Circuit, Alabama Conference, Sept. 25.

Our time has come in which we should say something to the friends of Zion in relation to the dealings of God with us. Nearly all the year there has been a revival influence on the Pickens Circuit, and more especially since the middle of July. It was about this time we began our two days protracted meetings, and it pleased the Lord to bless them all more or less, with the outpourings of his Spirit. Sinners have been awakened, mourners comforted, backsliders reclaimed and the Church strengthened.

At one of these meetings we had about 20 conversions, at another about 30, and at another about 40, and at each a number of the most humble penitents I ever saw, nearly all of whom pledged themselves at the close of the meetings never to give over the struggle until pardon should be obtained through Christ. We have taken in one hundred and fifty on probation. Our collections have been very good. Pickens, you know, carried off the banner last year in missionary collections, and she will make the best paying circuit work for it this year. About $1500 has been paid for the Bible and Tract cause, and $20 paid and sent to the Treasurer for the purpose of defraying the expenses of those who are preparing for the ministry. We have also raised all of our Conference assessments. A little better than Brother Clements.

We expect to send up two or three of the right sort as candidates for the Itineracy.

My colleague's health (Brother Cox) is rather feeble, but I hope that he may live many years to come. Many have reason already to bless God that he has been sent to labor with and for them.

Yours in Christ,

A. V. LeVert.

Gainesville District, Alabama Conference.

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, P. E. writes 25th September: "So far, our missionary collections on this District are much better than they were last year. We are trying hard to raise the amount assessed to us. The cause of religion is looking up, in some places. The Holy Spirit has been poured out on Eutaw, Gainesville, Schooba, and some other points, and many converted."

Greenville Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Permit me to say, after mourning over the barren state of our Zion for some seven or eight months, that some two weeks ago the Lord graciously blessed us at a three days' meeting at Asbury Church, so that we protracted it six days. At the commencement the Church was blessed and sinners powerfully convicted and came to the altar like a weeping Mary and cried aloud for mercy. There were some twenty-five conversions and thirty accessions. During the entire services there was a marked power of God's Spirit manifested, so that there was not one that attended but what acknowledged it was the hand of the Lord. The meeting was closed for the want of laborers with fifteen or more at the altar. To God be all the praise, amen.

We also closed yesterday a four days' meeting of great interest. The Church was greatly blessed and we had some four or five conversions. We have held several good meetings at other places. Oh that this may be only the beginning of good times.

John W. Broxson.

Brit Hill, Miss., September 29, 1856.

We begun a meeting on last Saturday at Concord, on Hillsboro Circuit.—Though it rained almost all day on the Sabbath, we had a good congregation and through the influence of the grace of God, we were enabled to protract the meeting nine days. The [illegible] were increased more and more until the church were revived into dilligence and duty. Many backsliders were reclaimed, and twenty-seven joined our church. We started a subscription to build a large and better house in which to worship. There is little if any doubt but that the friends will succeed in having a good church. The neighborhood is increasing in population and making progress in the right direction. Bro. Day who has charge of the circuit and his excellent wife, Bro. F. Alford, Bro. James Harris and the lay members generally, worked in good earnest and success.

Your Brother,

Geo. W. Stewart.

Lowndesboro District, Alabama Conference.

Rev. A. S. Dickinson, P. E. writes October 2:—"The Lord is with us in mercy on the District. On nearly all the circuits there is a gracious revival. The District is doing finely in her collections—the missionary collections especially. I think we shall double the amount of our assessment."

Bienville Parish, La., September 27.

The Cumberland Presbyterians received six from the labors of that meeting at Arcadia, of which Rev. W. A. Smythe wrote an account, closed the 27th of August. One week after we commenced a meeting at Terryville, Claiborne Parish, which lasted seven days and six nights—result, 22 conversions and as many on probation. In both meetings one black joined. At the last meeting the conversions were clear and powerful in most instances. The very remarkable exercise of a shouting laugh prevailed more or less. At the close of each of the above meetings there were many mourners at the altar for prayer. Some three hours since, I returned from meeting (only adjourned until to-morrow) at a new church we dedicated last Sabbath, called Soule Chapel. Our meeting on last Sunday was well attended, although the weather was most unfavorable. At this last meeting only Bro. Smith and myself as preachers. The Lord poured out his Spirit abundantly, result, 9 conversions, 6 joined the church. The singular exercise of the shout laugh prevailing to a considerable extent. At this place as well as Terryville, all the probationers who had not obtained regeration were converted.

R. C. Goodgion.

Bayt Parish Circuit, La. Conference.

[The P. E. gave some account of this meeting last week, but left before its conclusion. We therefore insert the more detailed account of the P. C.:]

The 13th September found us pleasantly situated in the town of Winsborough, beneath the thick shade of a grove of evergreen that wove its branches in picturesque beauty over our heads, and thus sheltered us from the rays of the sun.

The grove, filled with the melody of the songs of Zion, warbled forth from the spirits and hearts of many sweet singers. Brother Cravens, our P. E. in the stand, we prayed for a descent of the Holy Spirit. But we were not left long to muse on the probability of a revival, for our meeting opened with a revival influence, and with marked evidence that God was there.

We had several local preachers in attendance, who did their duty well, but as we suppose they wish to give God all the glory, we shall not herald forth their names with strings of eulogy that sometimes tangle the future path. However, duty and Christian respect compels me to say of Brother Stratton, (a Presbyterian minister resident of this place,) that he gave us much valuable aid during the whole time of our meeting, and thus won the esteem and affection of the Church generally. May the Lord continue to own and bless the labor of this minister of our common Saviour.

Our meeting continued with deep interest for six days, and resulted in seventeen conversions and the Church converted over. Our Presiding Elder, Rev. N. A Cravens, left us on Monday, at 11 o'clock, but the Lord carried on the work until Thursday, when we were compelled to stop on account of rain, though there were a number of penitents at the altar.

There is a general waking up of the people here on the subject of religion. Almost every one you meet seems anxious to enquire the way of salvation. Indications are favorable for a more extensive revival throughout this whole country. The Lord move on the work thus commenced.

We had occasion to say to the citizens of Winsborough, during the early part of our ministry this year, that the wickedness of the place had almost become proverbial, and to urge them to reform. This gave offense to some, though not meant as such to any; but now we rejoice to say that men have gone to Winsborough to get religion. How changed! We say to the credit of the citizens of Winsborough and surrounding country, we have never seen their hospitality in supporting a protracted meeting surpassed, and seldom equaled. Every door was throwa open to those in attendance of the meeting, and these were not a few. All met with a quiet, cordial welcome that gave [illegible] unmistakable evidence that we were in the midst of a generous and warm-hearted people. Entire good order prevailed during the whole progress of the meeting—a thing not always met with in country villages. We hope ere long to erect a good brick church in this town, which shall be an ornament to the place and a safeguard to the future religious interests of this pleasant village.

We still pray the Lord to carry on his work to the consummation of all sin in these ends of the earth.

THE THIRTY THOUSAND.

Can we raise it within the bounds of the Alabama Conference? We pledged ourselves individually at the last Conference to use every exertion in our power to do so. For one I feel like redeeming the pledge. An increase of one-third on last year's report, will settle the bill. But some of us had cranqd up the liberality of our people to the highest notch last fall, and therefore we cannot be confident of an increase from that quarter. Yet there are others who were either afraid to urge the cause, or else were ignorant of the means and disposition of the Lord's Stewards, and in consequence, they made very meagre reports. Such as these, should double and treble their former contributions this year.

I am glad to be able to say that the people of Macon, Miss., are fully alive to the missionary interests of our Church. On Sabbath last, I presented the subject to their consideration. Our congregation was not very large. We had no non-resident help—we are not a rich people, and yet we succeeded in raising a subscription of $441, and we have a prospect of an increase sufficient I hope to reach $500.

The amounts contributed are as follows:

For general Missionary purposes	$155 50
For the Kansas Mission Conference	105 50
Twenty dollars by the Pastor to make Brother John J. Beach a life member	20 00
Twenty dollars by the Pastor to make Brother E. M. Sadler a life member	20 00
H. W. Foote, John M. Black, J. J. Beauchamp and James Eckford $5 each to make Judge Reuben Ruff a life member	20 00
Mrs. A. P. McCaskill, E. M. Sadler, J. J. Beauchamp and E. Bismukes $5 each to make Rev. W. P. Harrison a life member	20 00
Mrs. R. A. E. Beauchamp, Miss Maria Davies, E. M. Sadler and John J. Beauchamp, $5 each to make Mrs. Elizabeth J. Harrison a life member	20 00
W. P. Harrison, R. Ruff, T. P. Harper and Miss Maria Davis, $5 each to make Miss Rebecca Callaway a life member	20 00
E. M. Sadler, W. P. Harrison, James Eckford and E. P. Daves, $5 each to make Mrs. R. A. E. Beauchamp a life member	20 00
H. W. Foote $10, E. M. Sadler $5, Mrs. Eliza Lucas $5, to make Mrs. Henrietta Clemens a life member	20 00
Total	$141 00

Last year we reported $210, so that we have doubled our offering this year, and nobody is hurt by it in the least.

My stay among this people will not be long. The past two years have been marked by the vicissitudes of ministerial life. Perhaps I am too deeply inoculated with Methodist doctrines to suit the taste of some good people of other churches, and too much prone to defend the cause I love to please some others, but I shall leave this work in these respects with a clear conscience. I shall carry no resentment with me, whilst I leave very many whom I love in the gospel.

DEATHS.

Died—In Jonesborough, Alabama, on the 6th September, SARAH TARRANT, wife of Samuel Tarrant, in the 83d year of her age.

She was born in Virginia. While quite young her parents moved to Greenville District, S. C., where she was married to Samuel Tarrant, in the year 1801.—She professed the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ and joined the M. E. Church in 1814. She fully embraced the principle and doctrines of our holy religion after the manner of our old-fashioned Methodism. To serve God in every thing and at all times was her chief concern. She enjoyed much of the pure and undefiled religion which prompted her to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," in every possible way to administer to their comfort. For more than a quarter of a century she cordially shared the joys and sorrows of her excellent companion, being more than ordinarily devoted to him and his welfare. As a mother no sacrifice was too great for her to make for her children, and as they became scattered in different States, she at times, even in old age, would almost hazard her life in passing from one to the other. She "set her house in order" made arrangements for her funeral, and gave ample evidence to her companion, children and friends that she believed she had presentiments that her dissolution would be sudden. It pleased God however to confine her to her bed of affliction for over a year, during which time she had repeated paroxysms of apoplexy. But in the intervals she was meek, patient and feared no evil, heartily joining in all the religious exercises with which she was often favored in her sick room. She suffered inexpressibly from pain, being forty-eight hours in conflict with her enemy. The last hour she was calm and easy.—No doubt she sleeps in Jesus. R. PHILIPS.

Died—On Wednesday, 10th September, at the residence of Dr. Walker Chamming, in Clark City, Miss., Brother SAMUEL THOMPSON.

The deceased has been a faithful member, filling regularly at different times the office of Leader and Steward. The Church in him has lost one of its most faithful members, society an ornament, the country a good, peaceable and orderly citizen, and his family their chief support. Our Brother leaves a wife and eight children, together with a numerous host of friends and relatives to mourn his loss, but not as weep not as those who have no hope, for his was the most triumphant death that has ever been witnessed in this county. I might dwell upon the amiable traits of character which marked his career, but forbear by simply saying he was the embodiment of them all. I never knew a better man.—Since fourth Q. C. for the Enterprise Circuit held in Louisiana, Rev. G. Garrett presiding, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, In the providence of God, our beloved brother Samuel Thompson, one of the Stewards of the Circuit, has been taken from the Stewardship here below to a more enduring reward, to a better and higher land. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Q. M. Conference, deeply deplore his loss, and hereby tender our sincerest sympathies to his bereaved family, commending them in their affliction to the protection of Him who hath declared that he would be a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow.

Resolved, That we send a copy of the above to the N. O. Christian Advocate, and request its publication. W. C. TURNER.

Died—In Carroll County, Miss., on the 4th of August, 1856, in the 45th year of her age, MARY TURNER, wife of John T. Turner.

She was born on the 11th of September, 1811. At an early age she remembered her Creator and sought to seek the Lord whom she found precious in forgiving. At the age of twelve or fourteen she found peace in believing, and joined the Methodist Church, in which she remained in full acceptance until her marriage with Brother T., at which time she resolved that his people should be her people. Accordingly she united herself with the M. E. Church. She seemed much attached to the Church and her latter choice and loved to dwell upon the evidences of experimental salvation. She was devoted and consistent. She was zealous in the fear of the Lord, and served God, not with eye service, but with fidelity of body, soul and spirit, which she considered as St. Paul "as but a reasonable service." It has been the lot of but few of the afflicted on earth to suffer so excruciatingly as sister T. Her disease was original, was of the most painful character. She lingered long in the agonies of nervous disease, but the Lord whom she professed to know in health, was her help and stay in affliction's gloomy vale, and her comfort in the dark shades of the valley of death.—When interrogated touching her prospects, she replied God's grace was her support and her all-sufficiency. And as she neared the land of gloomiest hue, calling her unconverted son and daughter to her dying couch, she besought them to prepare to meet their mother in heaven." She addressed her husband, children, kindred and friends in the language of the dying Christian "meet me in heaven." After which she leaned her head upon Jesus's breast and quietly laid her life out sweetly there. Write, "blessed are they that die in the Lord."

DEATH OF A TALENTED LADY. — Mrs. Ellen K., wife of W. E. Channing, Esq., died in Boston on the 9th ult., at the residence of Dr. Walter Channing, at the age of 36 years. The deceased was a sister of the late Margaret Fuller, Countess Ossoli, the noted writer, and Mr. Eugene Fuller of this city. She was a lady of uncommon ability.

☞ Hostetter's Bitters.—At this season of the year, when the digestive organs are weakened and debilitated by a sudden and over-use of vegetables and fruits, it is necessary that a good and pure medicine should be used to expel chills and the usual Fall Fevers. A new stimulus is needed; it must be a genuine, invigorating tonic and we are very confident there is nothing in the whole catalogue of medicines that can compare with Hostetter's Celebrated Bitters. We are glad to be able to say that the principal drug stores in the city of Louisville keep it in store. A great remedy.

Louisville Times.

☞ For the benefit of the invalid portion of our community, we subjoin the following from the Almanac of Dr. C. M. Jackson, proprietor of HOOFLANDS' GERMAN BITTERS, hoping it may induce a trial of them:

SHEFFIELD, Ill., March 19, 1855.

Dear Sir: I have to sell great quantities of your Bitters this year. Many of my customers speak in the highest terms of their qualities. I myself have used a great quantity of the Bitters, and the very best thing I ever took for a diseased liver and Ague prostration. I feel as well as I ever did in my life, and have a good natural appetite. In fact I eat a little more than is healthy. I have no doubt but your Bitters are the very best in all cases known for debility, and, being entirely pleasant for any one to take.

C. L. D. CADICK & CO.

ASAMSA, Iowa, May 1, 1851.

The Bitters give unbounded satisfaction to all that have used them, and I do and can always recommend them to all that are afflicted. They have cured many cases of Dyspepsia, some of which had hundreds of dollars have been spent for remedies which afforded no relief, and were considered incurable until they used the Bitters. THE BANKING SYSTEM OF LOUISIANA.

The New Orleans Canal and Banking Company.

[CONCLUDED.]

The amount of stock requisite for the organization of the bank was readily taken, and at the meeting of stockholders the first board was comprised of the following persons, all at that time in high credit and occupying the most influential positions commercial, financial and social: Archibald R. Taylor, John Linton, James Foster, Jr., Julius Mintura, Thos. Dixon, Isaac Ogden, Samuel Livermore, Charles Gardiner, Peter Laidlaw, Ed. Yorke, Jas. Purdon, H. F. Barthe, H. F. McKenna.

Thus duly organized, the Company commenced business in the building on the southwest corner of Magazine and Common streets, owned by the late Benjamin Story, and occupied by him as his family residence and office. It may be well enough here to remark that in times gone by it was the custom for the leading merchants of the day, in New Orleans and other cities, to have their places of residence with their counting rooms and stores in the same building. The first merchants in fact the first men of the country, followed this course. Also, the custom was then, and is still followed, for a bank to furnish its cashier with a dwelling, which was generally over the banking room of the bank; for instance, like the Louisiana State Bank, where its venerable cashier has resided since the year 1820.

The Canal Bank, duly organized, commenced its operations under the most favorable auspices. The Company purchased the property forming the southwest corner of Magazine and Gravier streets, and erected a very comfortable and commodious banking house, with all the appurtenances of a first rate dwelling for the cashier, Mr. Chew. To this location it was removed, where it continued till the revolution in banking occurred in 1842, when it was demolished, and the present buildings which occupy the ground were erected by the bank. The bank, about this time, had become so hopelessly involved that its best friends and largest stockholders seemed inclined to abandon it to the fate which had befallen eleven of the banks of the city, and only reserved for its use the limited privileges in the building known as No. 39 Magazine street, and occupied by R. H. Thorn & Co., at this time as an exchange office.

To give the full details of the immense success and benefits which the charter to this bank has conferred on the commercial, the agricultural—in fact, the general interests of certain sections of the State, though it has not been sectional in its privileges and returns—we must go back to the years 1831 and 1832, when the contract was made with Ben. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, (an individual not unknown in the political world,) to excavate and construct the canal and basin which has tended to increase the value of property of every kind above Canal street, and which we may assert has been the means of producing greater local benefits and greater good in the rear of the city than any undertaking of the present century.

The canal and basin of this Company which has received a good share of wrath from individuals entirely unacquainted with the time and the conditions which brought it into existence, cost the round sum of one million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It disbursed over one-third of the subscribed and paid up capital of the bank. At the time the bank commenced business, estimates from the best engineers of the day—among them was Lieut., now Major Delafield of the United States Engineers—that the cost of the canal and basin would not exceed three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In fact, a distinguished scientific engineer from France, estimated the cost as low as two hundred and seventy-six thousand dollars. Of course, these estimates were encouraging, and led the public to believe that an outlet for the important trade of the Lakes would be available within twelve months after the organization of the bank. It is not our purpose at this time to comment on, whether the digging of the canal and basin was or was not at the time a secondary object with the managers of the bank. The most of them at that time, in fact, all with three exceptions, have been called to their final account. But suffice to say, from the failure and inability, including the great Cameron, of contractor after contractor, the year 1836 arrived, and the canal and basin which was to have been completed within six months from the fall of 1831, was wholly unnavigable for navigation; and with the portentous clouds hanging over the commercial horizon, the prospects for the success of the measure were indeed gloomy, and the inevitable bankruptcy of the company was apparent. But still, in an association or incorporation of this character, there are always to be found some members of an energetic and confidential disposition, who are willing to sink or swim with the results.

We have alluded to the first President of the Bank, Archibald Ritchie Taylor. He was a model man as a merchant and citizen. He died, we believe, in the summer of 1832, and was succeeded by Mr. Chew, then Cashier, who held the office till 1834, when he was succeeded by John Mintura, Mr. Chew resuming the office of Cashier, which had been filled for two years by N. N. Wilkinson. He, Mr. Wilkinson, going into the cotton factorage business. [He was supposed to be a man of abilities, from having been the receiving Teller of the Branch Bank United States for some years, and well versed in finance.] Mr. Mintura was a Quaker by birth; who came to this city from New York in the year 1818. He held the office of President for two years when the Merchants' Bank, we may term it the bank of renown, was incorporated, to which he was elected President. This bank was rendered famous by its intimate connections with the Bank of the United States and the United States Bank of Philadelphia; all our old residents will recollect the circumstances. Mr. Mintura was supposed and believed to be a good financier, though the manner in which the Merchants' Bank was forced to suspend has not to this day been satisfactorily explained after having withstood the revulsion, and never suspending payments in specie through the famous era, from 1837 to 1842. Mr. Mintura had large contracts with the city for the paving of the streets, and his name, figures in bonds of the city, at various times, to the amount of half a million of dollars directly, how much indirectly we cannot say.

Mr. Mintorn was succeeded by Hugh Pa McKenna. He was followed by George B. Ogden, a connection of Isaac Ogden, a great cotton operator of those days, and who wielded a great influence in the general affairs of the Bank. Mr. Ogden held the Presidency from 1837 to 1842, in which year he lost his life in the neighborhood of the shell road whilst out riding in business connected with the company. His death was never accounted for. His body was found in the canal some days after the occurrence.

In 1842 the great Bank act which takes precedence of any enactment of the kind ever engrafted on the statutes of any State or government was passed. It found our banks in a sad condition, and as heretofore noticed, ten out of the sixteen banks were compelled to liquidate. From 1836 the Canal Bank had been gradually declining. The canal had already cost four times more than its original estimate. One million and three hundred thousand dollars of the capital had been invested in four branches located, viz: One in St. Francisville, with $400,000; one in Alexandria, with $400,000; one in Franklin, with $250,000; and one in Donaldsonville, with $250,000. This sum, with one million dollars then expended in the canal and basin, afterwards ran up to $1,350,000, was eating out the very vitals of the institution. $300,000 had been taken, misapplied, (or, perhaps, harsher terms may be found for the defalcations,) by officers of the Bank, the stock declined to fifteen or twenty dollars per share, or over 75 per cent. discount. It was certainly a bold and enterprising man who would undertake to conduct the bank through the crisis then impending. So little confidence had the large stockholders in its sustainment, that they all appeared at that day willing to have abandoned it to the mercy of commissioners. We find that in 1843 the Board of Directors only held the following amount of stock: Geo. B. Ogden, 15 shares; Jas. L. Bogert, 10 shares; Edwards Ogden, 10 shares; Jas. B. Bellin, 10 shares; J. W. Lastamand, 10 shares; Jas. B. Bellin, 10 shares; Wm. A. Read, 10 shares; Wm. M. Beal, 10 shares; Edwards Ogden, 10 shares; A. B. Wallace, 10 shares; E. H. Lammeyer, 10 shares—Total, 95 shares.

And the general distribution of the stock was as follows: Owned in Louisiana, 3,916 shares; in New York, 8,533; in Philadelphia, 7,15[illegible]; in Boston, 100; in Europe, 20,167—Total, 40,000 shares.

In taking a cursory view of the financial condition of the city at the period alluded to, and calling to our aid the general statistics stored up as it were in our memory, with some figures which are on record, we find that the citizens of New Orleans, perhaps we may as well embrace the State of Louisiana, were indebted to the sixteen banks of New Orleans in January, 1838, the round sum of fifty-two millions four hundred and seven thousand dollars. In the name of the great Jehovah was this not sufficient to ruin any community of modest or limited pretensions? At the same time the sixteen banks of the city had specie on hand to the amount of $2,726,983, and a circulation of $7,558,168. The line of deposits was a trifle over $7,000,000; the amount of capital paid up, was $39,-[illegible],000; the nominal capital was $52,000,000. The amount of indebtedness due from the community, the illusion and we may say the delusion of the day, created the impression that our good city reached its culminating point about the time of which we write—that it was hopelessly and irretrievably ruined, that there was nothing to redeem or reinstate it in the world of commerce, finance and trade. In 1838 the value of sugar and cotton received in New Orleans was $34,000,000, of which $1,500,000 was sugar, leaving $29,500,000 as the value of cotton; how much was the product of Louisiana is difficult to say. It will be observed that the indebtedness of the people was near fifty per cent of the entire value of the two great staples. In 1842 the whole value of the produce of all kinds received at New Orleans was $53,000,000. Compare this amount with the amount of the season just closed, and croakers and agitators, with the despondings, if there are any of this latter among us, can decide whether our city is retrograding.

In 1836, 1837, 1838, 1839, and 1840, the average line of deposits of the Canal Bank was from $126,000 to $150,000. The canal was not making any returns, nor did it till after 1843; in fine, it had been and was then a real mill stone to the working and movements of the bank. In fact, the bank was in a state of collapse. The incalculable benefit and advantages to accrue from the canal, began to be manifest during the eventful year of 1837, at which time it was opened for business. The results to the bank did not redound to its good—it was not receiving the least return or equivalent for the immense outlay. The public at large, the commercial, agricultural interests, the navigation of the lakes, the social relations of other districts and other States, were the recipients of the vast good and benefit derived from the completion of the canal and basin.

The year 1842 brought into existence the famous law reviving the charters of the banks, for our Legislature had previously declared that every bank in the city had forfeited its charter and privileges. Still they were suffered to go on from 1837 to 1842, becoming every year more hopelessly involved, paralyzing the energies, corrupting the morals, and setting at defiance laws and statutes of the land. The Legislature and the Executive of the State could not harmonize on a course for the relief of the people. The notes of the various banks were estimated and sold for coin at from 10 to 50 per cent. discount. Public meetings were held to deliberate on the monstrous and gross perversion of credit, justice and faith which led to a forced compulsion to coin payments. Two of the banks, the Bank of Louisiana and State Bank, commenced to redeem their issues in specie, but could not receive deposits of the notes of other banks only to be returned or paid in kind. It will at once be observed business could not prosper or move on under such state of affairs—two or three banks doing business legally, and a dozen more illegally and unjustly.

The generally vitiated position of the currency, the growing depreciation of all interests, commercial and social, required strong measures to aid in redeeming the general credit of the country. This was felt by the Legislature of Louisiana. Several of the most prominent financiers contended that a return to coin payments on the part of the banks could not be effected without the aid and co-operation of a national bank, and some managers seemed determined to wait for the incorporation of one by Congress.

It will thus be seen what a state of chaos and confusion the general financial and commercial interests of our State were in at the time of the passage of the Bank act.

The act itself was severely denounced, being considered arbitrary and unjust. "Old financiers, old bank managers, asserted that the banking institution could move or work under its provisions. Results, however, have proved that they were wrong in their views, lastly in their conclusions—no statute has conferred more good on Louisiana than this Bank act.

The bank act, as before remarked, found the Canal and Banking Company in an insolvent and apparently hopeless condition. A majority of the stockholders, at a meeting to decide on accepting the act, deemed it advisable to accede to its provisions. An entire change in the Board of Directors was considered requisite, which resulted in making Mr. Wm. A. Gasquet, one of the largest stockholders then and now in the bank, President of the Board. He found the affairs of the institution in such desperate circumstances, that he retired after a brief administration. The current report of the day was that he was discouraged at the position of affairs. In fact, there was not an individual stockholder who felt disposed to take the responsibility of relieving the bank or to bring it out of the cloud of insolvency which hung over it.

However, at the solicitations of Northern and resident stockholders, and the desire of the Board of Directors, Mr. Glendy Burke, then occupying the highest commercial position in our State, with a great array of friends, strong credit, and large social influence, accepted the Presidency, and it was but a short period before the bank, the community, one and all, began to feel the results of his administration of its affairs. Instead of confining the business of the Bank to the contracted office on Magazine street, with one or two clerks, the building where it is now located was purchased from the Commercial Water Works, there removed, and in a short time the good effects of Mr. Burke's administration were manifested in the increase of business of the Bank; growing credit, enhancement of the value of the stock, together with an entire revolution in the management of the canal and basin of the Company, which resulted in a revenue of 4 per cent. on the $1,000,000, denominated in the dead weight of the bank as public improvements; and really and truthful can the outlay be called public improvements, and more such as were never undertaken and completed by any banking association in the country.

The Bank is commended for the perseverance and energy displayed in fulfilling the requirements of its charter. It has continued to perform its duties to the public, though at times its administration, like all public institutions, has been censured. If any incorporation is closely identified and interwoven with our community, it is the Canal Bank. Its largest stockholders are among the most extensive owners and proprietors of real estate in our city, some six or seven of them particularly so, and it is extremely hard to create the belief that individuals so deeply interested in the general welfare and prosperity of New Orleans can have any other but the most liberal intentions and feelings towards its citizens, its merchants, and the planting interests of our State.

AID FOR THE SUFFERERS.—The Late Inundation on St. Martin Parish.—We learn from the Courier of the Teche of the 27th ult., that there was a large meeting in the town of St. Martinville, for the purpose of taking measures for relief, required by the present unfortunate and destitute state of that portion of the citizens of that parish who had suffered from the late inundation. A committee was appointed to solicit contributions, and the ladies were requested to get up a fair for the purpose of raising money.

FROM RED RIVER.—Capt. J. Jennings, of the steamer Camden, which arrived yesterday, reports having left Jefferson on Saturday last, 30th ult. Water in the lake and upper Red River falling; water at Shreveport falling; three and a half feet on falls; thirty inches in Old Riverand cutting. Brought out five hundred and seventeen bales of cotton, lot of hides and sundries, and about sixty or seventy passengers. Reports that the cotton on board caught fire at Grand Ecore, and had to throw over twenty-five or thirty bales to save the boat. Cotton but slightly damaged.

Motives Again—Misrepresentations Corrected.

In a late review of my article on motives, Brother Harrison made several misrepresentations which I propose to notice.

1. "Every man commences life an unfallen Adam; every woman commences life a sinless Eve." This quotation from an article signed "Ignatius Jr." Brother Harrison lifts out of its original connection, and thus alters its sense so as to place the writer in a hostile attitude with Art. VIII of the Discipline. The sentence is quoted from a fragment headed "Spiritual Death, and Christ as Life-giver." Starting with the received axioms of Christian theology, "God alone has life in himself," and "all Spiritual life must flow from God," the writer proceeded to state the entire dependence of Adam on God for life. Adam lived because he was in union with God. Spiritual death ensued by a natural law on the disruption of this union.

Man, disjoined from God, became a source of life to himself; was in a state of actual atheism, without God and without hope in the world. "The sin of the fall was too disastrous to be accounted for by a wave of sin troubling the outer edge of his being. It was a shaft of lurid lightning, shot from hell into the heart of humanity." Disjoined from God, the tendency of our race was downward to deeper chambers of spiritual death. Christ counteracts this deathward tendency of our race, and by his atonement places every man in a sufficiently living relation with God to recover his lost position in the universe. He calls upon us to acknowledge this redemptive life as coming from God. If we refuse, we repeat in ourselves the sin of Adam, and again become spiritually dead. "Every man commences life an unfallen Adam," i. e. innocent of the sin of Adam, and made capable, through divine grace of achieving final redemption. "Every woman commences life a sinless Eve," i. e. innocent of the sin of Eve," etc.

Brother Harrison isolated the sentence commencing "Every man," etc., and thus placed the writer in a hostile attitude with his church. A criticism so unfair and regardless of the sequence of thought, would convict of heresy every writer, from Moses to my respected reviewer.

Two facts are evident from the above, viz:

1st. The fall of man is too broadly stated to render me obnoxious to the charge of Pelagianism.

2d. Upon a dark back-ground of spiritual death, the atonement is pronounced as the only hope of the world.

But suppose for a moment that Brother Harrison does understand "Ignatius Jr," then it follows he does not understand Pelagius, for Pelagius utterly denied the fall of man, and thus vacated the atonement. He received Christ as a Teacher, and rejected him as a Lawgiver; accepted him as light, rejected him as life. (See Wiggers "on Pelagianism," page 84. Neander C. H. vol. II, page 603. Hase C. H. page 122.)

My reviewer is therefore in error any way it can be fixed. The fragment on "Spiritual death, etc." is extracted from a sermon on John 1:12, showing, against modern Pelagians, that Christ must be received as Teacher and as Law-giver, as Light and as Life, before we can become Sons of God.

II. Brother Harrison asks, argumentatively, "Has love in a solitary instance aroused the sinner or converted his soul?" No, we reply, "fear and hope are factors of the moral government of God preparatory to the Christian life of love." They arouse the sinner. Brother H. assumes that the point at issue between us is just what he chooses to make it. He here chooses to make me utterly exclude hope and fear from the divine government, but my words stand recorded, and I am not accountable for the fancies of my reviewer. An unsanctified logic may change the point at issue to suit every varying circumstance, and lead the whole universe of truth to the support of contradictory propositions. This sort of sophistry is so common with those who deal in controversy, that we set it up in syllogism, the more clearly to exhibit its deceptive fallacy:

The divine government desiderates the conversion of souls.

Without fear and hope as elements of the divine government, souls could never be converted.

Therefore, whatever theory excludes fear and hope from the divine government makes it a failure and is absurd.

This is a potent syllogism against any one that excludes hope and fear from the divine government, but who does? Only the fancy theory of Brother H., which falls prone beneath the relentless logic of its own father.

III. "Love is the substance of experimental religion. But what motive leads me to seek it? I should say with the Discipline, a desire to flee the wrath to come." But Brother Harris says love is the motive. That is to say that love is a motive before we possess it; at once cause and effect.

It will be seen that this argument rests upon the assertion, "Brother Harris says love is the motive." But I deny having said so; on the contrary I have given fear and hope a pedagogical position as schoolmasters to bring us to Christ.

In other parts of his review Brother H. gives me credit for saying "Fear and hope are preparatory to the Christian life of love." Why not remember it here and meet my position with a manly candor? A misrepresentation so gross merits stronger rebuke, but we will only restore the argument of our respected reviewer to its truthful form:

Religion is love. To say that love is the only motive that leads up to religion, is to confound cause and effect and therefore to be absurd. Brother Harrison's fancies say this, therefore Brother Harrison's fancies are absurd.

IV. "God hath declared, the soul that sinneth, it shall die. But if the Christian is in danger of sinning, he knows that God will be angry with him if he does it, and just so long as a possibility exists of his incurring penalty, just so long will a fear of that event influence his Christian character and course. Then fear must be a motive, a moving cause, etc."

The partial truth contained in the above argument gives it an appearance of solidity—the diffuse language in which it is written hides its fallacy.—But we think the premise is strained and pushed to an unjustifiable conclusion, which will appear on throwing it into logical form:

Whoever is in danger of dying is the subject of fear.

Whoever is in danger of sinning is in danger of dying, and is therefore the subject* of fear.

The Christian is in danger of sinning, therefore the Christian is the subject of fear.

The premise cannot be pushed further without violence. To say with Brother H. "therefore fear is a motive of the Christian life," is to open an impassable chasm between the premise and the conclusion. The argument would overthrow my theory if I excluded hope and fear as emotions; but it is written, "I do not exclude them as emotions, I do as motives." Hell is necessary to the evangelism of the world, and to the bringing home of the sons of God, yet its mighty threatenings reach not the bosom of redeeming love. The kingdom of God is girt with an adamantine wall of faith and love that strikes back its mighty undulations of terror.

V. One suggestion of our reviewer is both ingenious and profound, and merits a more generous treatment than the above noticed misrepresentations, viz: "The ultimate truth of the gospel is eternal life." To secure it, it is the controlling motive of the christian life." "To recover man's lost inheritance (eternal life) is the object of the gospel." Let it be observed that three terms are here predicated of eternal life. For the sake of distinctness we will number them in our own order:

No. 1. It is the "ultimate truth" of the gospel.

No. 2. It is the "object" of the gospel.

No. 3. It is the "motive" of the Christian life.

Eternal life is most certainly the "ultimate truth" of the gospel in two senses, viz: 1st, In its relations with the designs of God in the scheme of redemption. See John 3:15, "For God so loved the world, etc." 2d, Historically it is the ultimate truth (fact) of the gospel, for eternal life is the grand ultimation towards which Christianity as an historic force moves. See 1 Cor. XV. In these two senses it is also the "object" of the gospel, and thus the first and second terms, (Nos. 1 and 2,) predicated of eternal life, become identical, and are conceded to be valid.

But let us not be deceived, we have not yet decided the fate of the third term, (No. 3.) It is still an undecided question, whether eternal life be the "motive" of the christian life. Our respected Bro. Harrison confounded the three terms, and thought that in settling Nos. 1 and 2, he had also settled No. 3. We would respectfully suggest that the third term predicated of eternal life be kept totally distinct from the two other and identical terms. Eternal life is most certainly the object of the gospel: that object is to be attained by a life proceeding from what motive? We have said love, and refer the reader to our article on "Motives," and especially to the criticism Mat. xix., 16, etc. for a fuller discussion.

Our Saviour requires us to love him so ardently as to hate our own lives if we would enter into the eternal life. John xii., 25.

We leave the subject with two hints. First, Religion is directed exclusively to the cultivation of man's moral nature. It does not trouble itself about his physical and intellectual condition, but only about his moral. But man's moral nature is confined exclusively within the sphere of motive. Does it not follow that religion also is confined exclusively within the sphere of motive? Or, to express the same thing in different language—inasmuch as religion is conversant exclusively with the moral life, and inasmuch as the moral life is conversant exclusively with motive, it therefore follows that religion is conversant exclusively with motive, and that to define religion is to define the motive of religion. And since love is admitted to be "the substance of religion," in the language of Brother Harrison, it follows also that love is the only motive that leads up to eternal life. It follows also that to call eternal life the motive of the Christian life is to confound subject and object, means and end, religion with object of religion, the means of eternal life with eternal life.

Men have alternated between the icy fields of Unitarian theology and the silent cells of contemplative mysticism in order to avoid that religion which is conversant alone with motives, and is therfore a stern and living fact; but there is no medium between religion as motive, religion as love, swaying the sceptre of God over the life of man, and the moralism of the Jew, or the verminous piety of a monk.

Second.—There are four circles of moral life, or four moral conditions, through which, according to Methodist teaching, we must pass, before we can be said to be proper representatives of the religion of Jesus, viz.:

1.—Repentance in which the soul trembles before an "uncapped hell."

2.—Justification by faith, in which the voice of redeeming love excites a feeble return of love.

3. Regeneration, in which the soul opens her infant eyes upon the glories of a new creation in Christ Jesus, and is moved to more ardent love.

4. Sanctification, or, in the appropriate technology of our own church, perfect love, in which the soul stands a complete representative of the religion of Jesus.

Let it be remembered that this is a correct sketch of the development of christianity in the individual, according to the Methodist chart. It flashed on the soul of our founder when he was reading the chapter on Intentions (motives) in Taylor's Holy Living and Dying, just in the line of thought we have been pursuing.

The progress of love marks the advance of the soul towards the eternal life. Love gradnates the evolution of christianity in the individual life; imperfect love, imperfect christianity; perfect love, perfect christianity; this is the formula upon which Methodism hung the hopes of her children and the evangelism of the world, yet,

VI. We are charged with preaching doctrines "contrary to the truth as taught by the Methodists." Father, forgive them, they know not what they do. We love methodism so far as methodism loves the truth, and that is as far as we know. Beneath her symbols and with her keen quick blade, the holiest truths are fighting against the infidelities of the age. Her friends are often her real, though unconscious foes. In the beginning she raised her voice against ecclesiasticism; efforts are now being made to ecclesiasticise her, that is, to consolidate her as a church system. In the beginning she humbled herself beneath the insignia of a sinless life; now, her oldest children, as they near the tomb, speak back to the enquiring young, words of discouragement as to the possibility of a life of perfect love in Jesus.

She was once an evangelical church. She is fast becoming an orthodox church, that is, a church of fixed doctrines without variation or shadow of turning, instead of a church of vital piety. Yet she is a young giantess, upon whom depend, to some extent, the hopes of the world; not because of her doctrinal superiority, for doctrines have but little to do with the hopes of the world; but because of her energy, her adaptiveness, her independence of antiquity.

If I depart from her precepts, so long as her precepts are heaven's, tell me of it, and I will kneel in tearful sorrow, and invoke forgiveness. I have only desired to call attention to the truths that nursed her infancy. Love is the substance of religion; the living motive of religion, perfect love as perfect christianity, expressed in the beautiful words of that most holy man of God, John Wesley,

"O grant that nothing in my soul
May dwell, but thy pure love alone.
O may thy love possess me whole,
My joy, my treasure, and my crown;
Strange flames far from thy heart remove,
My every act, word, thought, be love."

We have so much faith in the self-denying courage of methodism, that we believe, unlike other church systems, (e. g. the Papal, Anglican, etc,) she will be willing to die and be decently buried when her time comes; that is, when she shall have sunk into consolidation, and become a self-centred system, working for her own perpetuity as an influential church, instead of the glory of God and the salvation of souls; when the already begun centralization, manifested in the gathering together of her mighty men at large cities, shall have been completed; when her lithe limbs shall have become palsied with ecclesiastical pride and sectarian bigotry. May God avert the doom! Let the followers of Wesley,

"Be bold for Truth, tho. all the world despise;
Be strong for Right, tho. all the world oppose;
Be free in Love, tho. all men are their foes;
And God WILL bless the sacrifice."

NOTE.—I think Bro. H. wrote too hastily, as is indicated by the diffuseness of his style and the laxness of his thought. He did not intentionally misrepresent me, I hope. As to the taunts and boasts of "camp-meeting theology," "seedy adjectives," "German mysticism," etc., such cant looks ashamed of itself in print, and reminds us of the quaint old Montaigne, who put his capricious thoughts down in black and white, to see if they would'nt get ashamed of themselves. * The word "subject" in the above syllogism is used phenomenally, and not in the sense of rule, as the soldier is subject to his General.

The "John Johnsons."

A correspondent of the Christian Times who attended the last session of the Hudson River Association North, where Dr. Welch was Moderator, states that during the session there was an interchange of views on the permanency of the Pastorial relation. After some discussion of the point, brother D——, arose and related the following anecdote:

"When our Moderator was Pastor of a church in Albany, a brother minister from the South, who was in quest of a location, called upon our Moderator, for some advice. Having stated his business Dr. W. inquired, "why not remain where you have labored?" "Oh I have a man in my church by the name of John Johnson who causes me much trouble."

The Dr. replied, "I have a John Johnson in my church, and have had for a long time, but I do not think it best to leave on that account." Next the brother went to New York, and sought direction from Dr. Cone.

Having stated his object to Dr. Cone, he was asked, "why not stay where you are?" "Oh! I have a man in my church by the name of John Johnson, who is very troublesome."

"I have always had two or three John Johnsons in my church," said Dr. C., "but I never mind them."

Not yet quite satisfied, the brother went to Boston to consult Dr. Baldwin. Having stated his errand, Dr. B. inquired; "Why not stay where you are?" "I have a man by the name of John Johnson in my church, who makes me a world of trouble."

"Well, says Dr. B., "I have some John Johnsons in my church too, but I remain notwithstanding."

Our opinion is, that these John Johnsons are a perfectly ubiquitous race; and he who expects to be entirely rid of them, must needs go out of the world.

President Edwards' Resolutions.

Among the excellent resolutions adopted by President Edwards, were the following:

Resolved, That I will live so as I shall wish I had done when I come to die.

Resolved, Never to do anything that I so much question the lawfulness of, as that I intend, at the same time, to consider and examine afterwards, whether it be lawful or not, except I as much question the lawfulness of the omission.

Resolved, I will act so as I think I shall judge would have been best, and most prudent, when I come into the future world.

Resolved, After afflictions, to inquire what good I have got by them.

If there never was to be but one in the world at a time who is properly a complete Christian, in all respects of a right stamp, having Christianity shining in its true lustre, appearing amiable from what part and under what character soever viewed.

Resolved, That to act just as I would do if I above with all my might, to be that one who should be in my time.

Reader, will you reflect on these resolutions and make them your own?

Sinners, if you will not hear God call to-day, you will harden your hearts to-day. And if you harden them to-day, God may harden them to-morrow. If you will not set about repentance to-day, God may justly deny you his assistance to-morrow.

A Texas Camp-Meeting.

Anderson county, Texas, September 10.

Dear Brother McTyeire:—I have just returned from a Texas camp-meeting, the first I have attended in the State, and as a brief account of it will doubtless interest many of your readers in the old States I proceed to give it.

It was held in Cherokee county, two miles from Jacksonville, in a most enchanting grove of tall oaks adjacent to "much water," a fine spring, where your correspondent baptized twenty-seven persons at one time. Immersed none.

The meeting commenced on the 4th and ended on the 15th September.—There were ten or twelve tents built after the usual style, and a large number of cloth spread out in various directions, whitening hill sides to a considerable distance.

The congregation was large all the time, but much larger on the last Sabbath than at any former time. It was variously estimated at from 2,000 to 4,000 persons.

The good work of awakening and conversion began on the first Sabbath, and continued with increased momentum to the very last service, which was held at 12 o'clock, on last Sunday night. That service I would that you could have witnessed it. The horn sounded precisely at midnight. The multitude came streaming down from every direction to the very centre of attraction, the altar. One of the ministers arose and announced the programme of the exercises. They were to march in procession around the public square twice, the preachers in front, the singers with lamps or lights in the hand next, the multitude of believers next and the mourners in the rear. There were many of the last class yet lingering at the altar.

The signal being given they were soon in motion to the unearthly strains of the choir as they loaded the clear, still atmosphere with "I am on my way to Canaan." My Brother, I have heard your city choirs in full blast, but never have I been so enchanted with holy song as on that memorable night.

At the end of the first evolution the procession halted, profound silence reigned for a moment, they all knelt, and a Brother who was placed about the centre of the square led off in prayer, with trumpet voice and melting pathos. The prayer ended, they arose and were again in motion. Onward they moved, the procession full 200 yards in length, all Christians and penitents, as none others were permitted to join them, the latter in tears and many of the former holding a tight reign to keep down rising shouts.

A second evolution and prayer and they advance to the door of the altar, the singers with lights in hand, and there were many of them, face each other and make two paces backward, forming an avenue through which the procession empties itself under the arbor in good order.

All seated, the preacher arose and announced his text—Revelations 7th chapter, 14th verse. "These are they that come out of great tribulation," etc.

His theme was the present and future state of Christians. In about thirty minutes the voice of the preacher was lost amidst the shouts and rejoicings of perhaps one hundred converted souls, together with the old membership, who had nobly fought and gloriously won a signal victory for their Master.

It is impossible to tell how many men were converted. I give it as my opinion that there were 140 at least; 115 joined the Church, and if any of the number left without conversion I am ignorant of it. A large number of the converts were heads of families, men of position and influence. Some were previously infidels.

THREE INCIDENTS.—An old gentleman who had not been to church in seven years, owing to his infidelity, was among our brightest conversions.

An unbeliever who was present at the camp-ground on Sunday and Monday, died suddenly in town on Tuesday.

A man left the camp-ground about the middle of the week and visited a grog-shop a few miles off and was shot dead by the grocery-keeper. The murderer was arrested near the camp-ground, and was to have his trial on last Monday. Truly the way of transgressors is hard.

This camp-meeting lasted eleven days. It was in Texas. Sinners were in attendance by hundreds if not by thousands, and yet, will you believe it, there was not the slightest disorder. No whisky jugs—no cake wagons—no peddlers of any sort—no reproof from the pulpit—no cause for it.

Brother McTyeire do you not wish you had been there? I do most cordially invite you to come over to our next. I'll promise you a long list of new subscribers, and the privilege of preaching at least ten days in succession to a multitude of noble-hearted Texians.

ROBERT S. FINLEY.

REMARKS.—We thank Brother F. cordially for the invitation. It is good—from a good source—to a good work. The two-fold inducements he holds out are great. The result of the meeting was glorious. But we fear that, in the triumphant midnight procession, we, going from this wicked, wicked city, might not be numbered with the believers, but should have to fall into the rear.—[Ed.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE

ARRIVAL OF THE ARAGO AT NEW YORK.

The United States Mail steamship Arago, Capt. Lines, with French and English mails to the 24th ult., arrived at New York on the morning of the 8th inst. We condense from our exchanges the following summary of the news:

The Journal de Constantinople says that a serious conflict had taken place at Trebizonde. Eight Turkish sailors tore down the Russian flag from a merchant ship. They threw the Russian sailors in the sea. The Russian consul had demanded the dismissal of the captain of the port. The sailors who made the attack were publicly bastinadoed.

The German journals are full of conjectures as to the course Prussia will pursue with regard to Neufchatel, but it is certain that no step will be taken until it is seen what is the final treatment of the prisoners in the hands of the Swiss Confederation.

The intelligence from Naples is becoming more interesting. The knowledge of the withdrawal of the English and French Legations, and of the sending thither of a naval squadron, had produced a fall in the funds of about 4 per cent. The Times correspondent, although he considers the abave statement unfounded, considers, also, that it may probably prove a shadow of coming events, especially as regards the interruption of diplomatic intercourse with the Neapolitan government, which it was thought will assuredly take place. It was generally thought that the appearance of French and English ships in the bay would cause an insurrection, and the king was taking every precaution in anticipation of rebellion against his government. It is said that the place of rendezvous of the English and French forces is Ajaccio. This naval movement, together with an announcement of the attempted evasions of Russia in connection with the settlement of the Bessarabian frontier, the British fleet had been ordered to remain in the Black Sea, had an effect upon the money market which caused business to be very flat. A report was also circulated of probable difficulties with Austria, whose military agents in Lombardy, Tuscany and Parma, are stated to have thrown into prison thirty-one officers and men of the British-Italian Legion, on their return home after their discharge from Malta.

Mr. Jerome Bonaparte, of America, and his son, says the Journal du Havre of the 20th ult., are expected in a few days in this town, where apartments have been taken for them. Mr. Jerome Bonaparte is about to embark on board the Arago for the United States.

Intelligence from Constantinople via Marseilles states that Austria wishes to occupy the Principalities until the month of November.

The failure of the Royal British Bank continues to absorb great interest in England. On the 20th ult., an angry meeting of the shareholders was held in London, at which it transpired that the loss to be made up was £210,487. On the testimony of the accountant, it was shown that the account of Mr. H. Brown, the member for Tewkesbury, and until recently a director of the bank, exhibits a debt of £70,908. Mr. Jno. McGregor, member for Glasgow, and founder of the concern, £7,362. Mr. Cameron, late manager, £23,000, the utmost worth of the securities against which is £3,000. Mr. Mullens, late solicitor, £7,000; one of the auditors £2,000. Other persons connected with the bank had also devoted to their own uses various sums, looking in all a total of £121,000. Some works in Wales had involved a sum of £106,453, but they were considered to be at least worth £40,000. According to the balance sheet, the entire liabilities of the bank are £539,131, while the assets, taking the Welsh property into consideration, are estimated at £128,644 for the whole. The prospects are worse than at first expected, which will be further exaggerated by the costs, which will probably be increased by the Court of Chancery.

Intelligence from Madrid states that a severe engagement took place on the 9th September between the garrison of Melella and the Moors of the environs, in which the latter had suffered a serious loss. The Spanish troops had ninety killed and seventy wounded.

The ball at Moscow on the 14th ult. is described by the correspondents of the English journals as a most brilliant affair. Lord and Lady Granville, and other members of the English embassy, were present. French cooking and French fare were the arrangement of the cuisine department.

Later intelligence from South America has been received. Little business had taken place since last advices. St. Vincents had suffered immensely from cholera, also the islands of Madeira and Porto Santo.

The Times publishes an unusually severe but highly justifiable article upon the conduct of the directors of the Royal British Bank. It considers that such "crimes" should be visited with penal servitude for life, and that there is more reason for pity for the highway robber, the burglar and the pickpocket, than for a class of men such as those who are connected with the downfall of the Royal British Bank.

The Emperor of Russia has confirmed the organic statutes of the three steam navigation companies destined to facilitate trade throughout the ports of the south of Russia and the Mediterranean.

THE TREATY WITH HONDURAS.—The Liverpool Albion published a copy of a communication from Don Leon Alvarado to the Governor of the Republic of Honduras, advising him of the conclusion of the negotiations with England, and specifying the terms of a treaty. The letter is dated "Legation of Honduras, London, September 15, 1856, thirty-fifth anniversary of the independence," and intimates that the negotiations with England are concluded. Although claiming the Bay Islands, Honduras was willing to leave them free to the enterprise of the world, on condition that her sovereignty were recognised, and the Mosquito territory were returned to her. The United States accepted these conditions, and England saw in them a means of getting out of a disagreeable question. The ambassador then announces that the treaties are concluded, as follows:

1. The restitution of the sovereign rights of Honduras over the islands of Ruatan, Bonacca, etc., and declaring them free territory, governed by its proper municipality.

2. Acknowledges the territorial limits of Honduras marked in the map by the Hon. George Squier, say from the river Wans o Segovia to the river Negro.

A tribunal of reference, composed of one citizen of Honduras and one British, if necessary, an impartial third of any nation, will fix the boundary, indemnify the Mosquito Indians for the losses which they suffer, and adjust all claims whatsoever.

3. Memorandum of the basis of negotiations.

Senor Minister: True wisdom teaches that a nation should march with the circumstances of the day. Honduras enters a new political life; her steps should therefore be to declare

1. That she knows no enemies or parties, and forgives all past offences;

2. Cultivate friendly relations with all who will accept them;

3. To avoid all compromises, offensive or defensive leagues, so common in America, and so disastrous;

4. To form no league, diet or confederation;

5. Invite all her neighbors to regulate territorial limits, and to examine the claims made by Copan on the part of Florida, and that in six or eight months the titles should be exhibited;

6. Prohibit or abolish from the public press all politics, give regulations for education, etc.

In announcing this treaty, Don Leon Alvarado expresses his thanks to Mr. Marcy, to Lord Clarendon, to Mr. Dallas, to Mr. William Brown, M. P., to Mr. Squier, etc. for their several shares in effecting this treaty.

ARREST OF ANOTHER MEMBER OF THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.—We learn from the New York papers that James Dowe was arrested in that city on the 6th inst., on affidavit being filed by C. P. Duane to the effect that said Dowe was a member of the late San Francisco Vigilance Committee, by which he had been banished from that city to his great personal loss. Dowe was released on giving bail for $1,500.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Charles Morgan on Saturday morning, from Galveston and Indianola, we have received full mails from all parts of Texas to late in dec.

The Charles Morgan also brought the melancholy intelligence of the burning of the steamship Perseverance, which event took place whilst she was taking in cargo at Powder Horn on the 24 instant. The particulars of this disaster will be found in the annexed memorandum of Capt. Sheppard, the commander of the ill-fated vessel:

POWDER HORN, FRIDAY, October 3.—About 4 o'clock P. M., while engaged in taking in a cargo of cotton and hides, smoke was seen coming out of the after hold. The alarm of fire was immediately given, and the people set to work throwing water in the hold. Opened all the seams connected with the engine to let in water, in order to fill the ship. In the meantime, assistance had been obtained from shore, and every effort was made to put the fire out by sinking the ship and throwing water on the flames with the hose and buckets from above. The ship was then shoved off from the wharf and anchored; in a few minutes she brought up on the bottom, there not being water enough to cover the lower deck. By this time the flames had increased so rapidly that the men were compelled to abandon the after passage. The fire increased so rapidly that it was impossible to save anything from the ship; the boats and [illegible] were destroyed before they could be lowered, the fire increased so that all hands were compelled to abandon the vessel, the flames driving the men over the bows. At 12 at midnight the ship had burned to the water's edge.

The merchants and citizens of Indianola have sent us the following card for publication. It contains a well earned tribute to Capt. Sheppard, which all who know him will readily endorse:

INDIANOLA, Texas, Oct. 8, 1856.

To the Public: The burning of the steamship Perseverance on the 3d inst., occurring so soon after the melancholy fate of the Neptune, will doubtless cause emotions of fear and apprehension in the public mind in reference to the safety of the gulf travel.

It is only necessary to state the steamers of the Southern Steamship Company are substantial, commodious, and commanded by officers of great experience and nautical ability. Capt. Henry Sheppard, of the late unfortunate steamer, has long been known and esteemed by the citizens of this place. For a series of years he has commanded vessels sailing from this bay, and by his uniform gentlemanly conduct he has drawn to him the friendship and confidence of all who know him.

We feel it due to him to state publicly that he has ever been an officer of the strictest discipline and the most watchful care. We therefore take pleasure in endorsing, in the fullest and most cordial manner, his character as a gentleman and a commander. In the hour when the flames wrapt and devoured his vessle [illegible] he was seen everywhere to direct and animate his crew, and when all efforts to save her were unavailing, he was the last to leave her. Honor to such a man, and though the catastrophe has marred his happiness, yet he has the satisfaction of knowing that hosts of friends tender to him that generous sympathy so soothing to a sensitive mind.

How the fire originated is not known. She was lying at the wharf receiving a cargo of cotton, hides, etc.

In a short time she burned to the water's edge, and all that is now seen of the noble steamer is a charred and blackened mass of wood and iron, which will long remain a sad monument of her fate. No lives were lost.

JOS. T. Baldridge, Com. Perkins, R. H. Wilson, J. T. Austin, John A. King, A. J. Walker, Mr. D. Brannan, Jos. H. Bailey, H. N. Pendestar, A. H. Schield, Bernd Lorenz, Mrs. Lorenz, John H. Dete, A. H. Beatty, W. Johnson, T. O. Johnson, Capt. N. Hreesmon, Cleveland & Mills, Robert J. Clay, R. Kyle, J. N. Holdridge, Wm. M. Cook, Wm. Kelley, N. Caldwell, Jas. Ashworth, W. H. Woodward, J. D. Wheeler, J. D. Bunga, V. F. Rogers, J. H. Duncan, O. B. Hubbell, Wm. P. Kirby, Wm. G. Womble, Geo. S. Martin, R. B. Blessamen, C. McCrea, A. A. Bergman, J. C. Motley, J. K. Stanley, A. Oliver, D. M. Rhapp, Samuel Turner, P. Villepire, Aug. Fromut, John A. Haley, R. O. Sarrill.

We have been informed by Messrs. Harris, Morgan & Co., that it is not their intention that the interests of the public should suffer by the loss of this steamer, and that they will put the staunch and fast-sailing steamship Atlantic, which recently arrived here, in her place, immediately.

We are exceedingly glad that such is the fact, as there is an immense amount of freight always at this season for Galveston and Indianola, to say nothing of the inconvenience it would occasion travellers. Messrs. Harris, Morgan & Co. deserve the thanks of the community for their promptness.

Mr. N. G. Sprague, an old citizen of Galveston, was drowned on the 6th inst., through the upsetting of a pleasure boat off Pelican Island.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—The papers notice that there had been general rains throughout the State, which had proved beneficial to grazing lands and gardens, but was too late to do much good to the general crops: Range for stock for the coming winter is expected to be good. In the western portion of the State, the farmers have hardly made corn enough for food, and many not even as much as that. Serious thoughts are entertained by a great portion of them of removing to the eastern part of the State. Cotton picking is not making much progress, and the crop was estimated to be exceedingly light. The sugar crop will be better than was expected. We learn from the Columbia Democrat that there will be fully 1,000 hogsheads made in that county alone.

LANDS.—The Houston Bayou City says that a gentleman from Chappel Hill informs them that unimproved land is selling in that neighborhood for $12 per acre, and improved, from $15 to $25 per acre.

The Liberty Gazette, of the 6th inst., says Judge Griffin, the collector appointed and qualified in that place, under the late River and Harbor bill, has obtained subscriptions to the amount of $1,350, of which five per cent. has been paid in. The paper says if other counties will do as well, the $50,000 from the State treasury will easily be secured to the Trinity. In no portion of the State are the people more deeply interested in this law than those residing in the Trinity Valley, and we cannot, therefore, suppose the result of their action at all doubtful.

The Houston Telegraph, of the 8th, says:

We hear of several horses having been stolen from the vicinity of this city during the past week. Nothing positive is known, however, but from the mysterious disappearance of horses already, it would be well for the owners of such animals to be on the look-out.

We learn from the San Antonio Texan that Capt Pope and his command arrived at that town on the 20th, en route for Washington. It will be recollected that Capt. Pope is the author to whom was entrusted the important expedition for the purpose of testing the practicability of boring Artesian wells in the great Western Salt Desert, or, as it is called, Llana Estacado. The Texan says:

From what we have been able to learn, his examination as to the practicability of Artesian wells on the Llano Estacado, as far as he has proceeded, has proved successful, far beyond the most sanguine expectation of its most ardent supporters. * * * * Capt. Pope, owing to the complete success of his efforts thus far, will no doubt be sent back in the spring to complete his labors, and establish a line of these wells across the "Staked Plains," on the line of 32 degrees of latitude, which will, as certain as day succeeds night, be the great railroad route to the Pacific. Much valuable information has been obtained by Capt. Pope and his party on the subject of the soil, productions, climate, &c. * * * *

We learn from the Dallas Herald that the commanding officer at Camp Cooper, whilst bathing in the Clear Fork of Brazos, some three or four weeks ago, was shot by four Indians belonging to the Camanches. Four or five soldiers who were at a short distance, immediately came to his relief, killed two of the Indians, and captured the other two. The Herald learns these facts from a gentleman recently from Fort Belknap.

By the arrival of the steamship Mexico, John Y. Lawless, commander, yesterday morning from Galveston and Indianola, we have dates from those points as late as the 11th inst.

We learn from the Galveston Civilian that the city council have a night police, a measure much needed in that city for the protection of property.

The bark Ocilla, Capt. Ashby, arrived off Galveston bar on the 7th inst.

The attempt was made in Corpus Christi, a short time since, by a party of Mexicans, to liberate one of their friends who had been arrested and imprisoned for horse stealing, which resulted in the death of the father of the thief by the hands of one of the guard.

We learn from the San Antonio Herald that business is improving in that town, and since the Quartermaster's Department has resumed payment, which had been stopped on account of the difficulty in getting the Army Appropriation bill through Congress, money matters have become more easy.

The same paper notices the fact that thefts are becoming quite common in that town.

The Austin Times, of the 8th, says that the corn crop of Travis county is short by one-half. There are no emigrants arriving in that portion of the State. The failure of the crop and the hardness of the times will prevent many from making the trial. The same paper says that there is a good yield of pecans this season. They are just beginning to ripen.

The Waco Statesman has the following item:

We learn from a gentleman just from the upper counties of this State that there will be at least [illegible] acres of wheat sowed in those counties this year, against one last year. Wheat is considered a safe crop there, and no crop will more readily command the cash under any and all circumstances.

The Galveston Civilian has the annexed item in regard to the Honduras and Mexican Gulf Railroad:

It seems that a survey is now going on between Pine Island Bayou (a tributary of the Neches,) and Woodville, Tyler county, a distance of forty-one miles. Should this road be completed to Henderson in any reasonable time, the Opelousas Railroad Company will connect with it, and the whole country be brought into connection with New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1856.

1000 NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Wanted. Our Publishing Committee have bought a [illegible] power press; a fount of new type, clear, and readable, is on hand; the new office is being fixed up. All [illegible] at a cost of $2000. The [illegible] the Advocate has been printed by contract. Though we have been fortunate in our contractors, the [illegible] had its objections. But it was cheaper—and we had to consider that. Now we set up business for ourselves. Will you sustain us? We want 1000 new subscribers between this and first February. Begin to get them now.

THE QUARTERLY REMOVED.—The Book Agents, believing that the circulation of the Quarterly Review might be greatly increased if printed at the Publishing House, and that it might be done at much less expense than to hire its publication at Richmond, have, with the advice of the Book Committee, and the approbation of the Editor, Dr. Doggett, determined to remove it to Nashville. The January number of the Quarterly will therefore be issued at the Publishing House. Let us one and all, come up to the Quarterly. We need it—cannot do without it.

CARONDELET STREET.—The Pastor, Rev. L. Parker, has been holding for two weeks a series of night meetings, that have been much blessed. Congregations good. About 25 conversions and 23 additions to church. The meeting is still in progress.

REV. J. E. EVANS.—Our esteemed friend, the Ex-Book Agent complains of what appeared in the Advocate touching his resignation. Of course, his letter shall be published—next week.

SOUTHERN METHODIST ALMANAC FOR 1857.—Twenty Thousand just issued from the press—price 5 cents. Send your orders to Nashville.

OROPOSA CAMP MEETING.—A visiting lady friend gives us an interesting account. We learn that there were fifty conversions or more.

THE INFLUENCE OF METHODISM.—Many of our brethren think hard of it, that all who are converted in and by our church, do not become members. Something must be allowed to family associations and influences. If, in other communions, our converts become active and shining, our labor has not been lost. It has ever been so.

The Ladies Repository, speaking of John Wesley, says well:

> The results of the labors of this man of God and his coadjutors are not comprised in the statistics of Methodism; they are not to be weighed by the millions already brought home to God through its agency, nor by the hundreds of thousands enjoying the benefits of its communion. The reformation was so near the heart of Christianity itself, that every vein and artery of the whole Christian Church felt its impulse; so that it may be difficult to determine whether the good of Methodism lies more in its organization than in the general impulse it has given to genuine evangelism; yet it is not doubted that its organization was necessary in order to perpetuate that impulse. The essential doctrines of Christianity, revived by Methodism, even where they are not adopted pro forma, are regarded with increasing favor, and exert a corresponding influence.

SHIBBOLETHS.—A correspondent of one of our exchanges opens an article as follows:

> "A witty divine has been heard to say that you can tell by the first sentence of his first sermon from which of three seminaries a new licentiate has come. If honored Princeton was his alma mater, he begins, 'This beautiful passage of Scripture;' did Andover send him forth, his opening paragraph is, 'The exegesis of these verses;' but has Dr. Taylor become responsible for his theological furniture, and was New Haven the port of his departure, he will give us "The natural capacities of the human mind."

PROTESTANT CONVENT.—Professor Stahl is about to establish a Protestant convent in Prussia. The project affords matter for a very animated conversation in many of the Berlin circles, this being an institution which belonged until now, exclusively to the Catholic Church. The convent in question is to be at once a refuge and a kind of seminary for youth. It is to be called "The Beaconage."

REV. J. MORRIS PEASE died in Chicago, Illinois, 29th September. His disease began in intermittent bilious fever, ran into typhus and terminated, after three weeks, in hemorrhage of the bowels.—He was forty five years old and in the twenty third of his ministry. His death was in great peace. Mr. P. was well known and favorably in the South, for his earnest and judicious efforts in the Colonization cause. He had devoted his best days to it, and measures were on foot for his personal exploration of the interior of Africa. In his last unsuccessful attempts to speak, he enunciated a sound which his wife thought was an effort to say Africa.

PHILOSOPHY AND PRACTICE OF SLAVERY.

Dr. Smith has consented to give the public the substance of Lectures on Domestic Slavery which, for several years, he has delivered to his classes in Moral Science, in Randolph Macon College. The volume* (12 mo. pp. 328) has been issued by our Book Concern and does credit to it.

He uses Wayland's text book; but the famous chapter on Slavery is made the basis of exceptions rather than a standard.

Long before his connection with the College Dr. Smith was known to have studied this subject thoroughly—in its scriptural, social, political and economical aspects. He was the principal defender of Southern Methodism in the division General Conference of 1844.

The first sentence of the book squarely faces the question—"Is the institution of Domestic Slavery sinful?"—

> "The position I propose to maintain in these Lectures is, that slavery, per se, is right: Or, that the great abstract principle of slavery is right, because it is a fundamental principle of the social state; and that Domestic Slavery, as an institution, is fully justified by the condition and circumstances, (essential and relative) of the African race in this country, and therefore equally right."

There is nothing of apology here. Indeed Dr. Smith has no sympathy, hardly patience, with those who are in the habit of admitting Slavery to be "wrong in the abstract," but say they can't help themselves! Fatal admission in argument. Is any man obliged to own slaves—compelled to sin? All such attempts of pseudo-friends at defence of the South are characterized as "flimsy and ridiculous:" nay worse, they yield the vantage ground to her enemies, weaken her hands, demoralize her conscience and invite an endless agitation. The institution is right or wrong. If wrong, abandon it; if right, it needs no apology.

Alluding to the compromises in church and state wherein Domestic Slavery is put down as "a great evil," Dr. S. says:

> "No doubt Messrs. Doddridge, Rives, Clay, Webster and many others—illustrious names, who have substantially used this language in various connections—only meant to deprecate the evils of slavery in strong terms, that they might propitiate a more favorable consideration of what they had to say in its defence. But if we be correct in the position already postulated, it is quite time our politicians, no less than our ecclesiastics, had learned to chasten their language on this subject. The fountains of public thought and feeling have, to a great extent, been poisoned—that is, the abstract opinions and religious sentiments of the people have been corrupted and perverted."

A phenomenon is to be accounted for:—That, while the North has had the making of our books, from primer to philosophy; while teachers and texts have been imported, unfavorable to the system, yet it has spread—spread among intelligent people—good—pious! The language held in civil, legislative and ecclesiastical assemblies has been more than compromising. These influences have operated on the minds of very many slave-holders to the extent of creating distrust of their position.—They are tender-footed. They have been told and read it so often that slavery is wrong in the abstract, wrong in priuciple and only to be excused by circumstances. Southerners, engaged in regulating the practice, have let the debate on principle go pretty much by default. Their enemies have sowed tares, while they slept; insinuated their doctrines with little or no opposition. The minds of good men have been confused by their sophistries or staggered at the inconsistency between the course they follow and the doctriues they have admitted. Yet the institution itself, a great practical truth, has for a series of years become more and more practical—a fixed fact and power in the country! It is now, more than ever, ramified and interlocked with other institutions. It has struck its roots into the federal system and is indissolubly bound up with its history. How is this? We are not dealing with men who wickedly do what they know and feel to be wrong—all such are laid out of the account—but with conscientious, candid, honest men, as a vast proportion of slave-holders, in fact or sentiment, are known to be. Dr. Smith gives two explanations of this phenomenon—we present his psychological one:

> "A false principle may be honestly believed by minds, which, at the same time, adopt antagonistic principles that are essential truths; but, owing to various causes calculated to confuse the ideas, the inconsistency is not perceived. Now, in such a case as this, the principle of essential truth is really brought into practical antagonism with essential error, and that in the same minds and upon the same subject. As truth is more powerful than error in the minds of all honest people, the truth holds its way in practical results, in defiance of false principle, which is relatively powerless in the presence of truth. The antagonism between the false principle and the practical results of things may be perceived and acknowledged; whilst the antagonism of the false principle with the true principle, which underlies and produces these practical results by a law of its own operation, is not only not perceived but actually denied to exist.—Now, so long as this false principle is honestly believed to be true and clearly perceived to be in conflict with the practice, but not perceived to be in conflict with other and more latent principles which are in themselves truths, and which produce this practice, just so long will this false principle wage war by the simple law of belief against this practice. But as this war is not sufficiently potent to overturn this practice, because it is founded on the belief of principles true in themselves, the practice will remain; and so long as this false belief remains, the strife with the practice must remain."

An elaborate way of stating that a man's life may be truer than his creed. Dr. Smith, in succeeding Lectures, proceeds to expose and eliminate these false but specious principles, and set forth those essential truths underlying slavery; truths "which are firmly rooted in the belief of all civilized and honest men and which, all along, have imparted a spontaneous being and activity to the system."

In his way—"All men are born free and equal" comes up, and another of Jefferson's oft quoted expressions borrowed from the French agrarianism of his day. We think no candid Abolitionist can travel through the argument on this and cognate points and claim that any thing is left him to stand upon. As Mr. Choate, within the last month, substantially expressed it—the impassioned declaration of a revolutionary pronunciamento is not to be taken as the mature and measured utterance of philosophy. It was a good tocsin for the 4th of July. There was truth enough in it to suit its purpose and time. But when those same signers and their peers afterwards sat in Convention, they gave slavery a vital recognition in the Constitution.

We disagree with Dr. Smith, in his 4th Lecture, wherein he holds that the will of God, though always agreeable to the right, is not the origin of it. He says—"We cannot agree with them that rights and duties which are reciprocal, are resolvable only into the will of God—have his will alone for their ultimate foundation. I take ground back of this." When one takes ground "back" of God's will he is too deep for us.

Dr. S. labors here. The subject has its difficulties and his style, marked more by strength than perspicuity, does not relieve it. We are not sure we understand him. If we do, he claims God's will, as revealed, to be on his side. But that revelation is specific and not general enough for him. Slavery though right in the Jews of Abraham's day, might be objected to in ours—for want of special enactment. The Roman and Greek Christians might be slave-holders on principle, but that might not cover the case of American Christians. The Doctor would infer a broader and less changeable rule of right and wrong—from the fitness of things. "The good is the right." He accepts the Bible as corroborating his rule, but the rule lies "back" of that. God did not make right and wrong—they existed independently of Him. He learns them as we do! Creator and creature go to the same horn book of moral science! The difference is, He learns perfectly—and ever wills and acts right—but we are dull students!

This, to us vicious, position does not affect the whole argument only so far—it would be as strong upon the ground he declines, and more decisive. Why can't we bring the controversy with Abolitionists to a conclusion? Because "Thus saith the Lord" is not enough for them. They go "back" of that.—The Bible is not final evidence. They "take ground back" of the old book A text is offset by an intuition—a divine sentence by a human sentiment. "Does it appear right," etc., etc.—"From the nature of things it is not so and so." And so there is no end of it. You might as well try to come up with a Jack O'Lantern as to convince and corner a man who, leaving the law and testimony, or looking on them as only secondary, roams at large, judging the main by what seems to him the good. Hold off every thing else, and the Bible will soon decide this controversy.

Emancipation and education are touched upon with other proposed measures. The Doctor treats them calmly, practically. He blinks nothing. On a practical subject he is very practical. He can and does discuss a principle, but will not be carried away by an abstraction.

The conservative elements of Domestic Slavery upon the social and political world is discussed with statesmanlike ability.

The happy influence of the distribution among families, domestic government and contact with the intelligence and sympathies of a superior race, upon those who a few generations ago were pagans, is enlarged upon as among the greatest benefits of the system. While men have been reviling it, reproaching it, anathematising it, Providence has honored it as the greatest civilizer and christianizer of the last two centuries.

We conclude our notice of this—the book of the day—by expressing the wish that our readers would get it and read it. We did not mean to satisfy—only to whet their appetite.

The last Lecture is on the duties of masters to servants. Dr. S. says and we heartily agree:

> "I should consider any treatise on the subject of slavery as inexcusably defective that did not embrace the duties of masters to slaves; and I persuade myself that the number, if any, who take a different view of the subject, will be found to be exceedingly small."

Duties to them considered 1. as property; 2. as social beings; 3. as religious. Under each of these heads plain things are said, useful and true.—After such an argument for masters' rights, they will receive an exhortation to duties, without suspicion. They will hear him—and thousands be better and happier for it.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE

Met 17th September in Winchester, Bishop Early. Rev. Jonathan Stamper preached the funeral sermon of Father Burke and Rev. Dungan who died during the year. The Nashville Advocate from which we derive our information says:

> The year has been one of prosperity in Kentucky. We learn with pleasure that the support of the preachers was more liberal than any preceding year. The missionary and other collections are equal to the past, and in some instances exceeding the contributions of last year. The Anniversaries of the Tract, Missionary and Sunday-School Societies were very interesting.

Next session to be held in Lexington, Ky. After the failures of Augusta and Transylvania, we think it will be hard for the Kentucky brethren to work themselves or the people up to hope or action in the following line:

> The following resolution was presented by the Committee on Education, and adopted by the Conference:
>
> Resolved, That a committee of twenty persons be appointed, consisting of ten members of this body, and ten local preachers or lay members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, resident at different points in the territory embraced within our Conference boundaries, whose duty it shall be to meet on the third Wednesday in November, 1856, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in the city of Lexington, Ky., to consider our educational necessities, and to appoint an agent or initiate such other measures as may seem wisest, for the purpose of raising funds to be appropriated towards erecting or purchasing College buildings, and endowing professorships in connection with the same, to be under the control of this Conference.

Methodist Re-union with the Church of England.

A strong effort has been made for some years past to induce the Methodists, or Wesleyans, of England, to conform to the Established Church.—By thus resuming their position, which the followers of Charles Wesley abandoned, they would become at once entitled to all the advantages of State patronage, their clergy have the attractions of an improved social status. The London Patriot devotes a long article setting forth the subject in its various aspects, showing what must be abandoned by the step, and what would be gained.

We find the whole matter discussed in the London Quarterly Review; and, as that periodical, though not under the direction of the Methodist Book-room, was avowedly set up to argue all questions from the Wesleyan point of view, we may safely regard the sentiments as those of the leaders of the Wesleyan Conference. The writer enumerates the propositions, and in behalf of the Methodists he says they utterly decline these proposals, so little attractive, and so extremely repulsive. They resent, with great indignation, a scheme of proselytism creative of "a mutual jealousy, which desertions from the ranks of the one, and seeking for deserters on the part of the other, would foster, if not inflame." They will not listen to terms by which spiritual movements, spiritual gifts, and all evangelistic action, would be brought under the control of the bishops. They would be dazzled by any prospect of incorporation with a church which, though calling itself "the Church," commands, even as to adherents, but a minority of the population, and, as to communicants, a very small minority indeed; which, in the British Colonies, has not the least prospect of being the denomination of the majority of the godly people; and which, outside the British Empire, is an inconsiderable body." But, when they are themselves invited to enter, yet "leaving their Methodism outside," to scrape their dirty shoes before they come in, they deliberately prefer,—wonder who will at their want of taste—to remain "the filth and offscouring of all things."—Granted that to accept the invitation would place them on high ground; but they would rather remain in the valley with "Baptist Noel, James Hamilton, Norman M'Leod, and Angell James," than be "separated by a mountain chain, very elevated it is true, but covered with perpetual snow." They held Thomas Chalmers to have been as true and good a minister as Archbishop Sumner; Adam Clark a great deal better than Sydney Smith, and Richard Watson, than Dean Swift; and though these were not ordinary men, yet they repudiate the idea that mediocrity any more than excellence could derive fertility from "an unwholesome graft from an evil stock," or health from "an inoculation from the diseased body of Rome." How far, in fine, Methodism is from being ambitious of the union so awkwardly proposed and so decidedly rejected, and in how different and independent a direction her ambitious thoughts (pardon the inference!) tend, let one remarkable sentence indicate: "When we remember that Methodism has had only one century to grow in, and has not only been destitute of patronage and national support, but has had, at home and abroad, to contend, inch by inch, against all the force of these, wielded by the Establishment to thwart, and if possible, to extinguish her, the fact that, in the first century of her existence, she has grown to a magnitude equal to that of the Church of England, is one pregnant with suggestion as to what the future may be".—[N. Y. Observer.

If you will not do that which God hath enabled you to do, how can you look that he should do that for you which of yourselves you cannot do?

They that are least serious, have the greatest reason to be so; their condition is awful, and therefore their disposition ought to be so.

They that will not hear Christ say, come to me, in a day of grace, shall hear him say, depart from me, in a day of judgment.

If we are graceless here, we shall be speechless hereafter.

RELIGIOUS METAPHYSICS.

The metaphysics of Calvinism is an essential portion of the system. This is one reason why it requires more schooling on the part of its advocates and ministers than Arminianism. The way to its decrees lies over marshes, bogs and quicksands that require a deal of metaphysical engineering. The mind must be brought to an arbitrary stand-point and held there, in order to accept its dogmas.

This is perhaps the meaning of our Calvinistic brethren when they say, that their doctrines are not so agreeable to "the natural man" as ours. They do not use (we will do them the charity to suppose,) the word natural as opposed to spiritual. That would be an offensive reflection. At a plain, common sense view of the subject a christian takes to Arminianism. But put him through a special schooling, lay in his mind certain principles of mental philosophy, bring him up to the subject from a particular quarter and with careful handling, he may make a genuine Calvinist. The latter is an artificial process—the former natural.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, alluding to this subject, says:

> We need a book that is a book, on Metaphysics—the philosophy of the mind. This department of science has been pre-occupied by Calvinists. Nearly all the works on mental science that are of note are Calvinistic. Calvinism is mainly indebted for its perpetuity to the features of its metaphysical system.—Men of intellect, of learning and of leisure have industriously indoctrinated nearly the whole of English literature with that peculiar mental philosophy which alone can preserve even an apparent accordance of certain religious dogmas with facts in the nature of man, and doctrines manifestly taught in the Scriptures. Edwards and Ried, and Stewart and Alexander, both men of piety and great mind, have set up the waymarks of Calvinism in all the field of mental science. Educated men have been drawn into the alluring mazes of metaphysical speculation spread out before them. They have adopted and propagated the system downward through the masses. And it is by this cable of intertwisted truth and error that Calvinism is held at its moorings.
>
> We assume, for the present, that the doctrines of Methodism are the doctrines of the Bible, and that the Metaphysics of Methodism is the philosophy of human nature. Our doctrinal system is clearly defined by Wesley, Fletcher, Watson and many more, whose works will ever oppose a break-water to the flood-tides of error.
>
> In all such Methodist works, there is an occasional pause to undo some metaphysical knot, with which Calvinistic skill has honestly but erroneously attempted to bind the free will of man, or the free grace of God. In the writings of Wilbur Fisk may be seen a clearness of perception, a discrimination in statement and a force of logic which prompts the thought that perhaps he was the man who should have endowed the church with a thorough treatise on the science of mind as a rich legacy. But he is gone. The book is not yet written. Who shall write it?

We need the book but not as much as the opposite system needs one, of its sort. The "natural man" is on our side. Nine times out of ten he will go our way, without any special guide.—But the book would be in place. It ought to be "writ" and would be read.

What Methodist will undertake to furnish it? In this connection our contemporary suggests the names of Rev. Dr. McClintock and Dr. L. C. Garland.

DROUTH AND REVIVALS.

TEXAS ITEMS.

Mr. Tully, one of our commission merchants, called in our office last Saturday, after three months travel, mostly through Texas. The accounts we had received and published from the newspapers about the drouth that has prevailed there, did not so impress, as the statement of an eye witness.

Mr. T. says that in much of that broad country there was no rain from 12th May till September. He saw crops growing upon which rain had never fallen: corn making twenty bushels to the acre and cotton six hundred pounds. On the route from Tyler, through Palestine and Owensville to Segnin he passed more than a score of houses deserted by families gone in search of water—encamping about far off springs or streams, with the remnant of their stock. He rode thirty miles without water for himself or horse.

Not uncommonly he was refused a cup of water! This was his first experience of such refusal and he had no idea before of one's feelings under it. Yet he could not blame the people who, are generally very hospitable. "We hauled it twelve or fifteen miles," they would say, "and want it for ourselves and servants and children."

Along with this drought of rain there are showers of grace in Texas. Our informant never saw religious interest in so general and healthy excitement. Campmeetings and protracted meetings are numerous and successful.—The ministry of every denomination is faithfully warning and teaching. The people are turning to the Lord. Our Itinerants are represented as in the forefront of the battle. And as they take a neighborhood or a house they garrison it with the Bible, the Discipline, and the Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY ALWAYS.—By different nations, every day in the week is set apart for public worship. Sunday by the Christians; Monday by the Greeks; Tuesday by the Persians; Wednesday by the Assyrians; Thursday by the Egyptians; Friday by the Turks; Saturday by the Jews. Add to this the diurnal revolutions, and it is apparent that every moment is Sunday somewhere.

ARE YOU COMPETENT TO MAKE A WILL?

We dont ask you to remember us in it; though a few of our subscribers have died indebted, and we have had as much trouble as the amount was worth, to collect it from cautious or captious administrators.

Nor do we ask you to remember the church—though that would be, in many cases, paying an old score—though late.

The question is not what your will is to be. But are you in a condition to make one? What proof could be brought for its validity, were it contested?

A Boston paper says one of the facts put in evidence at a trial, in the Supreme Court, to sustain the will of the late Wm. Russell, was that only a few days before he made the will, he called at the office and paid for his paper a year in advance, thereby saving fifty cents. The fact was dwelt upon at length by the counsel, and commented upon by the Judge as one of great importance. The verdict of the jury would seem to sustain the proposition that a man who has mind enough to pay for his paper in advance, is competent to make a will.

Perhaps some of our Southerners will say—"Ah, well enough. Sensible jury that, and sensible judge. It would have been proof to the point that a Boston Yankee was not compos mentis who omitted to save fifty cents in such case."

But if you wait six months it is $2,50 instead of $2,00, if a year, $3,00. Do you lend, borrow or make money at that rate? Yet, it is more agreeable to us and for the interest of the Advocate to have the $2,00, according to the terms.

Are you competent to make your will? Consult the Agent, who has your account in hand.

A Camp-Meeting Excursion.

OROPOSA CAMP GROUND, October 3, 1856.

We took our seats in the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad cars at half past three o'clock. We reached Pass Manchac just as the sun was setting, and while we halted for a few moments we had a delightful view of the sun as he appeared to recline upon the bosom of the lake. His beautiful rays streaming forth, penetrating both hill and vale and dancing upon the waves beneath us, seemed to say, "we part to-day to meet to-morrow." As we gazed upon the scenery around, filled with solemn thoughts, we felt to exclaim, "Oh, that our earthly sun may set as brightly, and we be permitted to awake in the likeness of God the Son and behold the Sun of Righteousness as he is."

One loud, shrill whistle and we rushed onward, passing the other stopping places after dark we were unable to judge further of the beauty of the country.

We reached Magnolia, the point where the passenger cars stop, at half-past ten o'clock. There we found D. met us and kindly escorted us to the Magnolia Hotel, where we rested a few moments while Captain D. made arrangements with the conductor of the lumber cars to convey us within a mile of our dwelling. After having our trunks properly adjusted upon the freight, a fine lot of railroad iron, we seated ourselves upon them and journeyed on. As this was a new mode of traveling to us, we were reminded of what Brother P. said to us the evening before we left. He remarked that we should certainly see tribulations, but the poet's sentence—

> "Through tribulation deep,
> The road to glory is," brought consolation, and we felt comparatively happy. We proceeded slowly on and reached Captain D.'s at twelve o'clock, where we were cordially welcomed. After partaking of a hearty supper, we returned thanks to our Heavenly Father for blessings received, and asked for mercies to come, after which we retired to rest.

We were awoke in the morning by the merry notes of many sweet songsters, and after arising our eyes were regaled by the beauteous landscape bathed in the glorious morning light.

We tarried here until Saturday morning, during which time two were added to our number. At 8 we arose we seated ourselves in a strong vehicle, drawn by three fine yoke of oxen and set out for the camp ground. We met with no one to encourage us during our journey, until we reached Dr. Stancar's plantation, where we stopped to inquire the way. The Doctor himself came out, and seemed delighted with our method of traveling, very pleasantly assured us that we were not only in the right way, but in no danger of breaking down. With joyful hearts we continued on our way. At half past eleven we arrived at our destination. Brother Jones was in the stand, and as we drew near we learned the subject of his discourse was "Holiness of heart and life." Though we were there in time to hear only the latter portion of the sermon, yet we felt it was good to be there.

After the services closed, we repaired to the tents and were received so cordially, we felt that the people were our people, and their God our God. It seemed desirous of making us feel welcome and at home. There was such a flowing out of soul to us we felt that all was concentrated in Christ, and that we were all the children of God the Father and joint heirs of Christ our eldest Brother.

Many appeared to be all absorbed in the subject of holiness. It was talked of, preached about, prayed for, and glory be to God, many professed to obtain the blessing.

Never have we realized more signal answers to prayer than we did on that occasion. As the loud hallelujahs and praise to God for a free and full salvation, accompanied by the shouts of heaven-born souls, ascended to the throne of God, the chariot wheels of the Lord seemed to roll in great triumph through Israel's camp. In the tent and in the grove wherever prayer was offered, the Lord manifested himself in love and great power.

We did not learn the number of those who were converted, or those who claimed the blessing of perfect love, but have no doubt that Brother Jones will send us a full account.

Wednesday morning and the closing exhortation was given, the closing prayer is offered, the sad farewell and the hearty "God bless you" greet you as wherever you turn, and we feel truly nice in the prospect of one day meeting "where we can be fellowship no break up." The kind hospitality of that people will long be remembered by us, especially that of Brothers T., S. and L., who kindly tendered their services and carriages to carry us back to the Depot.

☞ How often do we hear the inquiry made, What can I get to cure this violent cough I am a subject of? I will know the cause to be my own frequent disturbance in eating the vegetables and fruits of the season, besides taking a dozen or more glasses of ice water during the day—consequently must pay the penalty. One advice now I will be always to keep a bottle of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS in the house, and a dose of it as a timely relief to any person having Cramps, Spasms, Cholera Morbus, etc.; which are generally the result of over indulgence in vegetable diet. In fact, when internal is considered, no one can afford to be without these Bitters. They can be had for one dollar per bottle, containing a pint, which can well last the season, sold by all druggists and dealers generally.

MARRIAGES.

By the Rev. E. McMeans, Mr. HAYS RODGERS, of Lauderdale county, Miss., to LUCIN DA C., daughter of Daniel and Isabella Graham, of Pickens county, Ala.

By Rev. James L. Wright, September 8th, 1856, at the residence of Rev. Wm. A. Smyth, Mr. JOHN S. DOWLING, of Bienville Parish, to Miss S. F. M. E. SMYTH, of Natchitoches Parish,

By the same on 25th September, at the residence of Mr. Allen Pior, Mr. GEORGE W. CAWTHORN, to Miss EMILY S. PIOR, all of Bienville Parish.

After marrying the above couple, we had preaching, instead of the dance and all parties seemed to enjoy themselves.

DEATHS.

The friends of Rev. J. L. and M. T. Forsyth, of Fayette Mississippi, will be pained to hear of the deep affliction which has tried their faith. On the 10th of September we laid their eldest children to rest in a common grave. OLIVIA TERESSA, aged 7 years and 10 months had died in the afternoon of the 8th inst. She was a dutiful and unselfish child, of bright mind and almost exhaustless resources of happiness to herself, and of the means of instructing others.

CORNELIA died on the 9th inst., aged 12 years and 1 month. She was a child of promise. Cordial, generous and intelligent—Prayer was to her familiar as a mother's watchfulness, and grace had taught her how to look above and beyond the forms of childhoods meeting and evening prayer to Him who has promised that those who seek Him early shall find him. She was a studious and profited reader of good books and seemed to be growing in gentleness, wisdom and love to God.

The happy and hopeful parents who gathered their little ones about their table and altar on the evening of the 4th inst., saw half of them, the other half, in less than a week withered beneath the touch of the scorching fever and sunk to the silence and loneliness of the grave.

The friends who wept with them and the multitude who walked mournfully to the place of sepulchre, felt that the stroke was only lightened by the memory of the living to the dead, and could only be patiently and submissively borne by assistance from above.

How fleeting is human life—thus shortened may be the joy that comes from childhood's innocence and loveliness. We turn from the shadow that falls upon our path and looking upward exclaim "of such is the kingdom of God." WATKINS.

Natchez, October 6, 1856.

Died—In Bolivar county, Mississippi, October 7th, ELIAS McGEHEE, infant son of Sophia and Rev. E. H. Porter, aged 2 years and 2 months.

On the 30th of September, 1856, HARVEY ELIAS, aged 3 years and 5 months and 11 days, son of G. W. and Martha A. Goodwyn.

At Shreveport, La., on the 20th June, 1856, ANNIE ONG, aged 19 months, daughter of G. W. and Martha A. Goodwyn, of New Orleans.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Notice.—To the members of the Mississippi Conference—As the seat of our next Conference is in the bounds of my charge, I would make some suggestions for your convenience in traveling to the place. And first: Those who come via Vicksburg per railroad, to Canton, Madison county, will there take the stage for Kosciusko. The stage leaves immediately on the arrival of the cars at Canton from Vicksburg. There will be a quarterly meeting at Sharon, Madison county, embracing the Sabbath before Conference, to which our brethren are invited, and the preachers are invited to share the hospitality of our people at Sharon, in their route to the Conference. Sharon is about forty miles south of Kosciusko, and directly on the route.

Ample accommodations can be had all the way from Sharon to Kosciusko.

The preachers on arriving at Kosciusko will call at the store of Messrs. Clark & Welsh, south east of the public square and they will be conducted to their lodgings during the session of conference and it is earnestly desired that there should be a general attendance of the preachers. The people will be disappointed if the preachers do not come. They have made ample arrangements and will expect you, Brethren.

Those who would bring their wives please inform me immediately at Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi.

Respectfully,

For the benefit of the invalid portion of our community, we extract the following from the Almanac of Dr. C. M. Jackson, proprietor of HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, hoping it may induce a trial of them:

C. C. SILES says:

SHEFFIELD, Ill., March 19, 1855.

I expect to sell great quantities of your Bitters this year. Many of my customers speak very highly of its good qualities, having proved itself most an excellent Fever and Ague preventive, a great purifier of the blood, and the very best thing to recruit to aid digestion and create a good natural appetite. In short, I am sure it is one of the very best medicines known for family use, being safe and pleasant for any one to take.

C. L. D. CROCKWELL says:

ANAMOSA, Iowa, May 1, 1854.

The Bitters give unbounded satisfaction to all that have used them, and I do and can always recommend them to all that are afflicted. They have cured many cases of Dyspepsia, some of them where hundreds of dollars have been spent for remedies which afforded no relief, and were considered incurable until they used the Bitters. See advertisement.

As a general remedy for diseases, to which all families are subject, HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS cannot be surpassed.

PHILADELPHIA, March 2, 1855.

Dear Sir: I would state for the benefit of the afflicted, that I have used your "HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS" in my self and in my family, for a long time, and have always found them a great benefit in cases of Headache, Pain in the Side or Breast, Colds and Nervous Diseases, and earnestly recommend them to all suffering as being the discovery for which you prescribe them.

ELECTION RETURNS.

Pennsylvania Election.

PHILADELPHIA, October 15.—The Democratic State ticket is about 5,000 ahead, and it is believed that the Democracy will carry the State by 10,000 to 15,000.

PHILADELPHIA, October 15.—Returns keep coming in slowly this morning.

The indications are that the Democrats have carried the State by a handsome majority.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—The Democratic majority in this city is over 5,000.

Schuylkill, Northumberland, Northampton, York, Berks, Bucks, Cumberland, Lehigh, Dauphin, Luzerne, Carbon, Mifflin, Franklin, Westmoreland and Monroe counties gave an aggregate Democratic majority of 10,100.

The Democrats have elected Congressmen in the First, Third, Fourth and Fifth Districts. In the Second District Edward Joy Morris (American) is elected.

Private dispatches say that in nine Districts heard from the Democrats have elected eight Congressmen against one Unionist.

Berks county gives 5,500 Democratic majority.

Nearly all the counties reported show large Democratic gains.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—The returns from twenty-eight counties show a Democratic majority of 10,054, being a nett Democratic gain over the vote of 1854 of 29,384.

Ohio Election.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The returns from Ohio are meagre, and so far are favorable to the Republicans, with the exception that the Democrats claim to have elected C. L. Vallandingham over L. D. Campbell in the Third District.

Scattering returns from Ohio show the Republicans ahead as far as heard from. They have probably carried the State.

WASHINGTON, October 15.—We have full returns from eight counties and partial returns from another, which gives an aggregate Republican majority of upwards of 13,000. It is conceded that the State has gone for the Republicans by 30,000 or 40,000 majority. Pendleton and Groesbeck (Democrats) are elected to Congress from Cincinnati, which is a Democratic gain.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Campbell is elected from the Third District by a trifling majority.

S. S. Cox, Democrat, is elected from the Twelfth District, Mott in the Fifth, Wade in the Nineteenth, and Giddings in the Twentieth. The three latter are old members, and Republicans.

Indiana Election.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 15.—The returns from Indiana are meagre. We have nine counties, six of them in Southern Indiana, which give Willard, (Dem.) for Governor, 1200 majority. Both parties claim the State.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 15, P. M.—The returns come very slow. Willard (Dem.) is 5000 ahead, but the Republicans claim that the returns from the Northern part of the State will show a Republican majority.

EXPLORATION AND FUTURE OF AFRICA

Under the foregoing caption the Colonization Herald contains a very interesting and elaborate article, which we propose condensing into a compass that will suit our limits without interfering with its interest or value.

The largest proportion of the vast continent of Africa has always been a terra incognita to the civilized earth; but the signs of the times indicate that the period is approaching when its mysteries will be laid bare by the hand of science and enterprise—when the veil that has covered it as with a pall for thousands of years will be withdrawn—and when, to the eye of skill and industry and art and religion, will be unfolded a field for labor and development such as the earth has rarely known in any of the important eras of her history.

Earnest and zealously continued efforts are being made in Europe and America to obtain an accurate knowledge of the topography, climate, resources, latent and otherwise, and population of this comparatively unknown continent, with a view to the extension of agricultural, commercial and mechanical wealth, laws, literature, civilization and christianity. This extension depends almost entirely upon extraneous aid; the inhabitants having, from time immemorial, displayed a lack of vigor and intelligence which leaves little or nothing to expect from them until a new life is infused by outside pressure acting and re-acting upon internal progress. France has spent immense sums of money on the conquest and improvement of Algeria. That colony costs her annually £1,210,000, while the revenue is only £10,700. A military force of 100,000 men, chiefly natives, is kept up regularly. In Alegeria, up to 1855, the French had constructed over 4,500 miles of new roads, drained large swamp districts, built towns and cities, and executed many other important works. In 1840 the European population was 28,736; in 1841, 75,420; in 1845, 96,190; and in 1852, 119,266. Still, notwithstanding this large progressive increase, agriculture has made slow progress, comparatively speaking, although the French are making large calculations upon the production of cotton in future. That the occupation of Algeria by the French has conferred an immense amount of good upon that portion of Africa, there is no room for doubt. Neither is there any that a continued occupation will result in the building up of a wealthy and prosperous country. Therefore, we wish the French unbounded success in their undertaking. The French have also designs upon Senegambia, but in regard to what they are, nothing definite is known. Until recently they have attempted no colonization in that quarter further than establishing trading posts and forts, but latterly they have sent steamers to navigate the Senegal river, etc.

A French expedition under Count d'Escayrac de Lautare, and under the protection and auspices of Said Pacha, of Egypt, will leave Europe on the 10th of November to explore the head-waters of the river Nile. The whole force will comprise twelve Europeans besides the leader, and three hundred soldiers furnished by the Egyptian Government. For the navigation of the Nile the expedition has thirty barks, two small steamers and one hundred sailors. There are also men and means to continue the journey by land beyond the head of navigation. This expedition is expected to accomplish wonderful and lofty results. If the now unknown sources of the mighty river are discovered and mapped down, a contribution to the cause of geographical science will have been made which will excite the astonishment and admiration of the world.

A proposition was mooted a year ago to colonize the interior frontier of the Cape of Good Hope settlement by the British German legion. We learn it is likely to be carried into effect. The Legislature of the Cape have voted £40,000 to settle the proposed German emigrants comfortably on their new locations. They will be liable to military service, which will not, however, interfere with their industrial pursuits. As the Germans are skillful agriculturists they will prove valuable acquisitions to the colony of Good Hope.

The English have matured their plans for the survey of Southern Central Africa lying west of Mozambique channel. The Rev. Dr. Livingstone is the intrepid leader and traveler in this extensive region. He has already made his way across the continent from West to East, and, quitting Angola, has reached the furthest inland station of the Portuguese, on the Eastern coast. He will doubtless have acquired much useful information regarding the country, the native tribes, the productions, and the social condition and wants of the people.

The following extracts from the Colonization Herald are so well condensed that we quote their entire:

Portions of the eastern coast, on the channel and the region of Delagoa Bay, are visited by both English and American vessels, which carry on a lucrative trade with the natives of the region. Into this bay empty several large rivers, and its harbor is of the most excellent character. As a coal-bearing trade was formerly carried on here for gold and ivory, the traffic could doubtless be renewed and largely extended. Far in the interior from the eastern coast of Mozambique, and south and west of the British State of Natal, lies the new Dutch republic called Kras Vaal, three hundred miles long by two hundred and fifty broad, giving a territory in extent nearly as large as the State of New York. This is now peopled almost solely by the Dutch, and is represented to number from eighteen to twenty thousand white inhabitants, who are surrounded by native tribes to the number of one hundred thousand.

An association has been recently formed in New York for the exploration of Western Central Africa. The American expedition, having for its ulterior object the advancement of Liberian interests, will extend their researches into the country lying east of Liberia—a territory concerning which very little is known. By glancing at even the best maps it will be seen that almost nothing of the topography of the country is ascertained; and yet those who have penetrated to the regions in the immediate vicinity of the interior have received the impression that a kingdom still further inland exists, in which immense cities of ever-gorgeous array, and where she lavishes her gifts in unexampled profusion. In aid of these exploratory labors she encourages the hope that the enterprising Liberian settlers will be secured. These traders, who are all colored people—for Liberian laws permit no white man to hold real estate—traffic entirely with the natives, who bring to them from the interior palm oil, dye woods, ivory, beeswax, camwood, ginger and gold dust packed in quills, receiving in exchange calicoes, calico, silk and woolen fabrics, iron, brass and copper utensils, glass and earthenware, arms and ammunition. The Liberians, in turn, find customers in the trading vessels, and realize handsome profits upon their sales. Brought thus into contact with the native tribes a tolerably accurate idea has been gained of the resources of the unexplored region; and it is even possible that the contemplated scientific survey may remove the principal obstacle to the intervention of Central Africa in civilization, the extension of christianity, and a large increase of American commerce.

The writer then goes on to say that a better day seems dawning for Africa, which although next door neighbor to Europe, has ever resisted permanent European settlement and civilization. France is moving energetically at the North, England has long been securely established at the extreme South, a large and growing settlement of American civilized blacks is to be found at the centre of the West coast, under the fostering care and protection of Americans, and has obtained a foothold through which is earnestly believed civilization can be extended far into the interior, where barbarism has reigned supreme ever since creation's dawn.

Speaking of the beneficial results that have flowed from colonization in Liberia, the Article from which we have quoted concludes in this wise:

To what will all this grow? No prophet can predict the whole future result, but it is the greatest revolution in Africa that thousands of years have produced. The interior of that vast continent will be opened up to commerce, to christianization and to christianity. Soldier tribes that those along the coast will be found. We shall obtain a complete knowledge of the geography, language, manners, customs, and even origin, peculiarities, of many of their races. The influences of the natives daily will increase the power of Liberia as the center of civilization, of commerce and religion will daily expand, and additionally we may expect and believe that numerous Christian republics, imitating our forms of government, will embrace a vast extent of that continent and many millions of the descendants of its present degraded inhabitants.

Let the friends of colonization take courage from these facts, and persevere in the noble work so ogbly commenced some thirty years ago. "Much has been done, but more remains to do." The difficulties of the West coast have been surmounted. The interior should now be penetrated. In the vocabulary of these the only real philanthropists of the day, so far as the negro race is concerned—there should be no such word as fail.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN TUSKEGEE, ALA.—The Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer, of the 11th inst., says:

We regret to hear of a very destructive fire at Tuskegee, Ala., which broke out early yesterday morning. It commenced just above Isbell & Montgomery's brick store, opposite the Lower Hotel, and burnt the two squares between the starting point and the Masonic Republican office, opposite the Masonic Hall next to the other hotel—some twenty-five buildings in all. The brick store (in which building is the office of the South Western Baptist) was saved; but we regret to learn that the Republican office had to be blown up to stop the progress of the flames, and that a large portion of the type, furniture, etc., removed into the street, took fire there and was consumed. The loss of our friend Sayre must be a severe one, and particularly to be deplored just at this time. The heaviest losers, we understand, are Messrs. Isbell & Adams, merchants, at the corner facing the Court-House on the east. Mr. Nell D. Smith, whose extensive carriage shop and livery stable were burnt, must also be a heavy loser. There being no fire engine, and the buildings being so very dry and combustible, with a breeze fanning the flames and water scarce, the fire could not be arrested until it had swept over the extent described. It is a very serious calamity to the thriving and growing town of Tuskegee, but we trust that that handsome town will soon recover from it and be improved in appearance by the disaster.

Talk on 'Change—Cotton and Sugar.

On the streets, an 'change, here, there and everywhere, the chief topic of remark is the weather—the effects of the recent frost, or rather the frost on the night of the 30th ult., on the cotton crop. Many persons do not yet believe there was sufficient frost to injure the growing cotton. The receipts of the article were very light yesterday, being only 1425 bales. The general feeling towards it by buyers was not so free as last week. There are several parties ready to enter the market at a decline from present prices, and of course we have to hear of some very decided advance on the other side before it will be safe for buyers to purchase largely on speculation, though orders they may now and then venture. But it is impossible for operators to purchase all cotton that comes to market and hold for a rise. This would require rather more money than even the Bank of England could well advance at this juncture. We have felt the effects of banks advancing in cotton for monopolizing and speculating purposes in the action of the United States Bank of Philadelphia years ago, and some of the banks of this city under the old regime. We desire never again to hear of a bank entering the cotton market. The following are the quotations for middling cotton in this market at the respective periods:

October 13.	1856.	1855.	1854.
Middling.....	12@12¼ asked.	8½@9	8¼@8¾

So it will appear that planters cannot have the least cause to complain but what any deficiency will more than be covered by the advance in price. Factors generally have managed the market thus far with consummate ability and shrewdness. We shall know in about thirty days how Mr. Hull receives their address. But it will be the first of the next year before the case is fully developed here concerning with the other side. The present and expected prices will undoubtedly stimulate the product next year to the fullest extent and resources of the country and undoubtedly call into requisition much land in this State, heretofore devoted to sugar, to the product of cotton.

The sugar cane is progressing as well as could be expected under the many vicissitudes which it has undergone through the entire season. The estimates of 130,000 hhds. as the crop of the State are still maintained. If consumers have not yet realized high prices, they may have the opportunity the coming year. We have been examining some of the so-called Muscovado sugar recently imported, and more trashy, dirty compounds we seldom have met with. They are nearly as inferior as the Manilla and Calcutta sugars, which were always considered half sand. Our country, after having for so many years been favored with a good, clean article of sugar, the product of our own State, will find it extremely difficult to reconcile the trash which will be consigned in place of the pure saccharine of the Pelicon State. Come, let us have Cuba and we shall have an abundance of good sugar, and Louisiana will aid to extend the cultivation of cotton sufficient to supply all the world.

The arrivals of vessels have been free for some three days, causing great activity at the levee. Shippers will rest easy for the present. We notice heavy cargoes of salt—one ship arrived yesterday with 11,820 sacks, another with 10,122, a third with 6,631, a fourth with 7,128, a fifth with 8,281 sacks—total 43,982 sacks; and more cargoes reported in the river. Really, Mr. Hull intends to keep us in salt, for fear we should disappoint him in cotton, perhaps.

Business and Cotton.

Business in general was not so active Tuesday as on some days of last week. The weather changed in the morning and inwards night became decidedly of an autumnal feeling. At the steamboat landing the arrival of several boats during the day occasioned considerable business in the way of receiving produce. Up to 6 o'clock last night the receipts of cotton were—by the ingomar from Memphis, 2713 bales; Swamp Fox, from Vicksburg, 1503; Rapides, 1095; Grace Darling, 171; St. Charles, 353; Linda, from Alexandria, 639; Union, from Alexandria, 787. Total, 7263 bales. The receipts for the corresponding day last year were 5,169 bales. The market for the staple was heavy yesterday. Parties who last year were heavy or large buyers have returned from their summer jaunt, but somehow or another, though they have come from colder climates, they do not credit the frost accounts, and evince no disposition to enter the market freely at present prices for cotton. Possibly some the qualities, strictly fine, may be taken at the highest rates over 13¼ cents, but it must be such cotton as will command 83d. or more in Liverpool at this time. How much of this kind of cotton is being received is difficult to say.

New York dealers and brokers have at last consented to reduce their general estimates for the season to 3,000,000 bales—that is, since the last accounts of the 30th ult. The following is from a circular dated New York, October 7th:

We have had a buoyant and advancing cotton market during the past week, but the sales have been, in a measure, restricted for the want of stock. The transactions I estimate at 14,000 bales; about one-third in transit and nearly all the balance on speculation—spinners having taken but a small portion. The speculative purchases are mostly of cotton to arrive, there being no supply of consequence here, and several of the brokers being entirely out of the article. The supply of Uplands Middling is especially very tight, and these are even relatively higher than the better grades, of which the recent arrivals mainly consists. The shipments making are on speculation, an advance to 7¼ to 7½ for middling being confidently anticipated; and even at this large advance in Liverpool some of the shipments will not ha much more than covered.

The crop accounts, as a general thing, continue bad, but it is altogether too early to state, with any kind of reliability, what the growth will be. There are very few, however, who will look for three million bales, and many of the estimates are considerably below that figure. It is pretty safe, I think, to predict that the crop will certainly not exceed three millions, and the chances are in favor of its being less.

We give the above, and, at the same time, we must be permitted to remark, that investments in cotton at this time for a rise, or rather speculation, will require more money to carry it through than can well be furnished in this section of the country, at this moment. We observe in some sections of the country the germ of speculation taking root, not warranted by those immutable principles which should govern a well regulated and uniform mode of commercial transactions. In fact, it is currently believed in the country that middling cotton is selling too cheap in our market, and that it ought to go to 15 cents. This is mischievous, and calling into question the propriety of present prices being conceded to on the part of factors. At the same time we are equally anxious that combinations in Europe, aided by the junta in New York for the depression of cotton, should be met and thwarted. We have no idea of calmly looking on and permitting Mr. Hull and M. Crapeau to take our cotton at their own ideas of value, though they have been disappointed in raising the article in Africa and India; and as they only produce when and where they are compelled, we shall expect that about Christmas they will begin to open their eyes and find that cotton will be cotton for this season, and that it is not to be raised on free soil nor by free negroes.

Later advices are fully due by the Edinburgh from Liverpool, though the Persia's accounts may be at hand at the same time. Both ought to come through today; but the telegraph will be overcharged for a day or two with election items, and commercial matters may be regarded as only of secondary importance.

INTERESTING TO SEAMEN.—A new plan for Rafting Topsails.—Mr. Ross, of New York, has recently secured a patent for reducing and reefing topsails. The plan is very simple. Four legs, or crowsfeet, are spread along the foot of the sail and secured to it, two on each side of mainhilips, and are sewed to the sail up to the close reef-band, where they terminate in eyes. To these eyes four ropes are laid, which have through hitchers on the yard, and thence through blocks at the mast-head, to the deck. When the sail is required to be reefed, these ropes are hauled taut, the topsail halliards let go, and the sail is brought bodily up the yard and confined there. The slack of the reef-tackles is then handed, and the sail is almost as snug as it were at sea reefed. The work of hauling out the yarings, and setting the points, is then comparatively easy. This plan, it is thought will answer well with double topsail yards. Mr. R. T. Martin is now in Boston fitting the sails of four ships with this plan.

WEALTH OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The total assessed wealth of Providence the present year is $38,064,576, on which the tax is 77½ cents on the hundred dollars. The largest tax payers are Alexander Duncan and family, $1,835,15, on a property valued as $1,611,600; the heirs of Thomas P. Ives pay $12,775.85 on $1,618,200; Moses Brown Jenkins, $6,032.21 on $778,350; three others pay upwards of $4,000; seven over $3,000; thirteen $2,000 and upwards; forty-four over $1,000, and eighty eight $500 and upwards. There are ninety three persons taxed for upwards of one hundred thousand dollars.

The U. S. Military Asylum at Washington.

The National Intelligencer has the following interesting description of this institution:

The Military Asylum on the north side of the city is one of the most interesting and noteworthy of the public establishments of the District. It occupies a site once the property of George W. Riggs, Esq., from whom it was purchased by the Government. Its elevation and distance from any watercourse render it particularly salubrious, and the outlook from it in every direction is exceedingly fine. The area of the property is staked at two hundred and eighty-five acres, of which seventy are under cultivation. A large edifice of native marble, whose white tower may be descried from almost every spot for miles around, peering out from amidst the thick umbrageous foliage, is near completion, and will contain about thirty-four sleeping rooms, sufficient to accommodate two hundred and fifty inmates. The other rooms are very large and airy, and the dining-room is especially so. At present, the inmates of the asylum to the number of seventy-four inhabit the mansion first owned and built by Mr. Riggs. Besides the new main building, which can be extended without marring the portion now erected, there have been two large and tasteful mansions of the same material as the asylum occupied by the officers in charge of the establishment. In one of these, Col. M. M. Payne resides as governor; Dr. Benj. King, secretary and treasurer, and temporarily in charge of the sick, occupies the other. Major Larkin Smith, deputy governor, lives in a dwelling on the same estate, but more distant.

The old soldiers have a perfectly easy time at this asylum, doing pretty much as they please, working or playing at will. They are of course subject to proper regulations, and may render themselves liable by misconduct to have their monthly pocket money stopped, to confinement and even, by judgment of the executive committment, to ejectment. Workshops are provided, where they may work at their trades, and any of their products of industry which may be of use in the military service of the country are bought by the ordnance and quartermaster's department at fair rates. The persons who are entitled to the benefits of the asylum are, first, those who may have served in the United States army faithfully for twenty years; so also soldiers and members of the marine corps wounded or disabled by disease contracted in the Mexican war. Soldiers who may have contributed to the funds of the asylum under certain regulations are also included. No provision is made for the wives and children of pensioners, as no such provision is contemplated in the law, but to invalids, such as can prosecute a trade or handicraft, facilities will be afforded for so doing. Good character, at least since admission into the service of the United States, is deemed essential to an enjoyment of the benefits of the asylum.

This establishment is distant from the Centre Market just three miles, and is most conveniently approached by Seventh street for the eastern part of the city and Fourteenth for the western. It is not surprising that it is a favorite place of visit in the mild seasons of the year.

FROM KEY WEST.—We extract from the marine correspondence of the Charleston Standard, the following items of news:

KEY WEST, Sept. 25, 1856.—The French ship Don Juan, Capt. Gaillard, from Matanzas, Cuba, with a cargo of sugar, bound to Havre, ran upon the reef near Key Tavonier, on the 8th instant, and received assistance from the sloop Dolphin and schr. Chestnut, which vessels, taking out 322 boxes sugar, hauled the ship off and brought her to this port. Her injuries are extensive, and she is discharging for the purpose of undergoing the necessary repairs before continuing her voyage. The salvage will be determined by the Admiralty Court, to meet in October. She is consigned to W. H. Wall & Co.

The ship Isaac Allerton is being thoroughly wrecked. All the goods between decks have been brought down and sold by the Marshal, and the divers are making good progress among the packages in the lower hold. The goods now sold are in very bad order, and sell at low rates. The first sales were well attended, the bidding spirited, and prices very satisfactory. The U. S. Marshal has sold nearly $70,000.

The brig R. Bingham has been discharged and safely moored in the Inner harbor, where she will remain until the Judge of the Admiralty Court arrives and determines the salvage.

The schr. Curtis Sanford, McMunn, is nearly ready for sea.

The schr. Eliza Fisk, Simpson, is awaiting orders.

LATER FROM VENEZUELA.—Dates from Puerto Cabello, received by the Joseph Maxwell at Philadelphia, are to the 10th ult.:

The Republic is perfectly quiet, and the habits and manners of the people of the interior are changing for the better. Revolutionary tumults are among the things that were; and industrial pursuits have succeeded and are fast developing the resources of the country. Vast tracts of low land have been prepared for the production of cotton, and in a few years it will be the staple crop. Coffee is very scarce, and only small lots of the remnant of the old crop of inferior quality came into market, which commands 11½c. per lb.

Hides continue in considerable demand at 21c. per lb. for the United States and Europe. Cotton 13½c. per lb. for the old, and 14c. for new. Indigo, $1 to $1 03 per lb. for F. Cocoa of superior class, $27 50 per fanega; inferior quality, $20 to $25, and in good demand for the Spanish and French markets. Fustic, $17 per ton of good quality from Maracaibo, Ligumvitæ, $11 to $12 per ton. Deer skins, $11 per dozen. Goat skins, $3 50 to $4 per dozen.

There are no American vessels in port. No epidemic prevailing.

NATURALIZATION IN NEW YORK.—For several days past, says the New York Evening Post, of the 6th inst., the passages about the door of the naturalization office, in the city hall, have been crowded to overflowing by applicants for naturalization papers. So great is the crowd that it is impossible to gain admittance to the room, and as much business proceeds on the principle that "first come first served," some of the unfortunate applicants are compelled to wait for hours. The police have the matter exclusively in charge, and so clamorous is the crowd at times, that they are compelled to use their clubs, as well as their tongues, to prevent riotous demonstrations.

At 12 o'clock to-day, over one hundred, mostly Irish, were awaiting their time to be turned into Americans, and some of them seemed very impatient of the waiting. "Be aisy, now," said one of them; addressing a disconsolated neighbor, "be aisy, now, Pathrick; an' sure there's no hurry. An' aint yo paid for yer time; an' be jabers can't ye make enough by yer vote to make it all shtraight?" But Patrick seemed not at all disposed to be "aisy," and his breath plainly indicated that there was a disorderly spirit within. He swore "be the powers" he was "as good as the best av 'em," and made a violent rush for the office. But the police club presented an insurmountable obstacle, and Pat was compelled to bide his time.

GENERAL PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CONVENTION AT PHILADELPHIA.—The debate in this convention, on the amendment to the sixth article of the Constitution, relative to a uniform mode of trial of bishops, priests, and deacons, was closed on the afternoon of the 6th inst., when a vote was taken by dioceses and orders.

The vote of the clergy was, yeas 18, dioceses nays 13. The vote of the laity, yeas 11, dioceses nays 16. Maine was divided—New Jersey, Indiana, Wisconsin, and Texas were not represented by laity. Both orders of New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Maryland, Florida, Alabama, Missouri, Kentucky, and California, voted yea. Both orders of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Iowa, voted nay. The clergy of Connecticut, Tennessee, Illinois and Michigan voted aye, and the laity nay. The clergy of New Jersey, Indiana and Wisconsin voted yea; laity not represented. The clergy of Texas voted nay; laity not represented.

The amendment having failed to receive a constitutional majority, the penal code prepared by Mr. Hoffman, of New York, in anticipation of the amendment being ratified cannot now be considered.

THE TOMB OF PIZARRO.—In the crypt under the high altar are deposited the remains of the celebrated Pizarro, who was assassinated in the palace hard by. A small piece of silver, which I dropped into the hand of the attending sacristan, procured me admission forth the crypt. Descending a few steps, I entered a small place, some twenty feet long, quite light and whitewashed, and which smelt and looked so much like a coal or table wine-cellar that I caught myself more than once looking round for the wine and bottles. The first object I saw was a large square coach, surmounted by the erect figure of an abbot, and close by, in a narrow opening in the wall, I noticed what appeared to me to be a collection of dusty rags, but a closer inspection proved that this was all that remained of the renowned conqueror of Peru. He has still on him the clothes and shoes which he wore at the time of his assassination. Of course his body is nothing but a skeleton covered with dried flesh and skin, so that no features are discernable. The body is covered with the remains of what was white linen, swathed round him, but the dust of centuries has collected on it, and turned it to a light brown color, and it almost pulverizes when touched. The body is placed on a narrow piece of plank, in a sloping position, and has been placed in this hole merely to put it out of the way. The folks in Lima do not think anything of the remains of poor Pizarro; and I dare say that a little money, judiciously invested, would purchase for any curiosity hunter the whole of the remains. PRINTER'S CELEBRATION IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The Centennial celebration of the advent of printing into New Hampshire took place at Portsmouth on the 6th. The programme consisted of a procession, including military, firemen and numerous civic societies, followed by an address by A. P. Peabody, Esq., editor of the North American Review. At the dinner given the Press was liberally represented, and the speeches and sentiments eloquent and interesting and suited to the occasion. President Pierce was present.

The Autumn Gale.

[Written from one among the Islands of the South, in surprise at the coming now to the Autumn gale!
The blowing, blowing,
The moaning and groaning,
The sighing and crying,
The dying away!
The rising, the flying,
The driving, the whirling,
The falling, the dying,
The wailing, the pining,
The withering, the blighting,
The sighing and crying,
The dying away!

THE TABLE MOUNTAIN.

SAN JOSE, September 17, 1856.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire—Dear Brother: Among the curious things of this remarkable country is the Table Mountain. This very singular mountain lies mainly if not entirely in Tuolumne county, of which Sonora is the county seat. It appears to me very evident from the geological formation of this mountain, that it has been built up by some immense volcanic eruptions, occurring at different and distinct periods. The lava from the crater, the location of which I know not, seems to have taken the bed of the Stanislaus River, or a branch of it, at each eruption made a deposit of lava, which is now very hard stone, of a thickness of from three to four or five feet. The first layer of lava becomes in turn the bed of the river, as is clearly indicated by a layer of considerable thickness of sand, gravel, and boulder, and this I learn is strongly cemented together, and then comes another layer of lava stone, and these are repeated until a mountain of imposing majesty rises up before you.

This mountain seems entirely to have taken the bed of the river and turned it into a new channel, which, as yet, appears much wider than is usual to be occupied by rivers. At least this was the appearance where, in company with Brother R. Higham, I crossed it on a bridge some two miles above Knight's Ferry.

This mountain is appropriately called the Table Mountain, because it is topped off with a flat rock extending all along its extended range, and the ever regular appearance of its treeless summit, better graded than any railroad I have seen, will readily attract the attention of any observer of the scenery he passes. So far as this mountain fell under my notice, (for I only saw it at detached points,) it was precipitous along the edges of its summit, and apparently a perfect level on the top.

While in its vicinity, and not until I was about leaving it, did I have any just appreciation of what an interesting object was within my reach, or I should have given it further investigation. So of the true character of this mountain, I had no knowledge, until, as before mentioned, I crossed the bridge, or rather came to it. Here the river, as I suppose, had washed down the sides of the mountain, so that it stood up a perpendicular wall in its nakedness and grandeur, a specimen of Almighty masonry and a monument of awful eruptions.

I have not been able to ascertain the length of this mountain, or the source of the eruption. I have had it variously described to me to be from twenty-five to seventy miles long. I hope to gain more accurate information in regard to this particular.

Not knowing whether any other theory than my own in regard to the formation of this mountain was cherished by others, better acquainted than myself, I wrote to Brother Fitzgerald, stationed at Sonora, on the subject, who informed me in his reply that the idea I had conceived was the one usually entertained upon the subject.

This mountain has other attractions beside its singular formation and appearance. Sinking shafts from its top down to the depth of about one hundred and fourteen or twenty feet, in one of the layers of sand, pebble, etc., on a bed of rock, very rich deposits of gold are found. To this end it is now being penetrated to a considerable extent, and with encouraging success.

Many questions may be asked as to how such a mountain could be elevated to such a height after the manner supposed. I have a theory of my own, which to my mind serves to explain a good deal of the difficulty, but does not solve all that occurs to me. I shall therefore not elaborate my views, lest I might be interrogated above the measure of my learning.

This leaves us in good health, except that I am well worn down by hard out-door labor in the service of camp-meetings.

Ever yours, H. H. KAVANAUGH.

INFIDELITY AND CHRISTIANITY.—In a grave-yard in England may be found the following, on a tombstone over four infants:

"Bold Infidelity, turn pale and die,
Beneath this stone four sleeping infants lie;
Say, are they lost or saved?
If death's by sin, they sinned, for they are here;
If heaven's by work, in heaven they can't appear.
Abr'aham, how depraved!
Revere the sacred page, the knot's untied—
They died, for Adam sinned; they live, for Jesus died."

If a sinner's thoughts be not changed by grace, they will be changed hereafter by experience.

J. E. EVANS AND THE BOOK AGENCY.

Dear Brother McTyeire:—Your notice of my resignation of the Book Agency, in the N. O. C. Advocate, September 20, does me an injustice, unintentionally, doubtless, which I am sure you will gladly permit me to correct through your columns.

Allow me to suggest that your readers would have been better prepared to have judged of the reason and motive governing me in this step, and therefore, whether or not, I was "trifling where such great interests are involved," as you allege, if you had given them the letter of resignation entire. Would it be asking too much to request its publication now? It will occupy but about a half column.

But the main point of complaint with me is the light in which you present me to the world in the following paragraph: "We hope, however, he will not preach such doctrine as the above extract. Do a thing and then determine to try to believe it right. Such casuistry would hardly stand the test of Prov. 20:25, and of Rom. 14:23. This yea and nay style looks like trifling where such great interests are involved."

You charge me with a violation of the Divine command, as recorded in these passages; and with "trifling where great interests are involved." To err is human, and I may have ignorantly run counter to the Divine precept, without guilt; but there is no apology for "trifling" with sacred things; and that you should think me capable of such an act is a matter of sincere mortification. This I feel the more sensibly, because I had informed you of my opposition to the appointment of Book Agent, and had urged you to present some suitable person to the committee for the place. I resisted all applications to me to take it; and I saw several of the Bishops in person, to whom I made known my convictions of duty to remain in the pastoral work; and requested them not to concur in my appointment. The Bishops refused to concur and informed the Book Committee that they did not think I ought to be removed from the pastoral work. The committee persisted in their nomination, and the Bishops finally yielded their concurrence. I declined the appointment. The Committee then requested me to allow them to submit to the Bishops the simple question, whether, under all the circumstances of the case, they believed it my duty to accept the appointment. The Bishops, after consultation, reported that they were unanimous in advising me to accept. Then it was that my convictions of duty, so clear before, as to the pastoral work, were turned into "doubts" in that direction; and still I "doubted" as to the Agency: turn which way I might, I was in "doubt." Think you that Prov. 20:25; or Rom. 14:23, was intended to condemn action in "doubt" like that? If so then the Book Committee and the Bishops had put me where I must be "damned," do as I may. For if I consented, to the Agency I did it in "doubt," and still I "doubted" my right to decline, with such a weight of opinion against me as to my duty. I therefore thought it safest to yield to the advice given, and try to believe it right. What else should I have done. It may be that Prov. 20:25, which says, "It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and and after vows to make inquiry," was designed to meet a case like mine; but I must confess, that I am unable to see the application. The Book Agency may be the thing "which is holy," but I am not aware that I have "devoured" it at all, much less before I considered the import of the act. But if I am mistaken as to the true intent of the passages alluded to, I still hope for mercy, as I did it ignorantly, and not wilfully in unbelief. For be you assured I was not trifling. In a conversation I had with you after my acceptance of the Agency, I think I gave you the substance of the history of my appointment as stated above.

Now your correspondent "Crotchet," must needs go out of his way to lug Dr. Stevenson (than whom there is not a truer-hearted, a more laborious, energetic and self-sacrificing Minister of the Gospel in the pale of the Church,) into "hide and seek" in this matter; as if he had any thing to do with Owens' or Evans' resignation: I say that he should regard the whole affair as child's play at "hide and seek," a "tempest in a teapot" is no matter of astonishment to me—small minds have small conceptions. But that you with a knowledge of the facts as just stated, should regard me as "trifling where such great interests are involved," is matter of unaffected regret. I am sure, were our positions reversed, I could not have found it in my heart to have believed for a moment that you were trifling in the case. Certainly you must have intended only to say that my course would "look like trifling" to those who knew not the facts, as they were known to you.

I presumed you did not intend your remarks to apply to my resignation of the Agency after my doubts as to duty were removed; therefore I have only referred to the circumstances connected with the appointment, in justification of my course. For however "Crotchet" might prefer that "conscience should not speak at all," or at least only at such times as might suit his motives—say "last spring or twelve months from next May," doubtless you as a conscientious Christian Minister, would prefer that the consciences of your ministerial Brethren should not be quite so accommodating as all that; and that we should obey their dictates whenever they are not contrary to the written dictates of the word of God.

I cannot of course be responsible for the resignation or re-appointment of Brother Owen. He presented reasons that satisfied the committee at the time of his resignation, and the committee thought it the best that could be done to reappoint him, and he has consented to serve. There certainly can be no one but "Crotchet" competent to think that there was any collusion in the matter between Brother Owen and myself. If there is, allow me to condescend to say to that one that it was the last of my thoughts when I presented my resignation that Brother Owen would be my successor. I think I am warranted in saying the same for him. His re-appointment was an after matter wholly, and to which he yielded from the purest of motives. I exceedingly regret that the manifest disposition of your correspondent "Crotchet," to speak disparagingly of some persons connected with the publishing house, has made it necessary for me to say thus much, to prevent false impressions that otherwise might be made. I have not the most distant idea who he is. He may be a very worthy Brother; but if so, he has fallen into gross error. Perhaps his concealment has betrayed him into what he would not have done over his proper name. I have treated him as "Crotchet" represents him to deserve.

I fully agree with you that the Book Agency is a work better suited to good business laymen than to the ministry; and I moreover believe, that once it is known that their services are needed for that responsible post, suitable men can be obtained. True, some of the best, wisest, the purest of our ministers have served the Church in the Book Agency, and that most efficiently. But who among them have not felt it to be a cross to leave the pastoral work to serve tables for the Church. It is asking too much at their hands, if the work can be done by laymen.

If I have trespassed upon your space, let a sacred jealousy for the cause of Methodism and for a reputation at least of conscious sincerity in all things be my apology.

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

J. E. EVANS.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are still unable to see wherein what appeared in the N. O. Christian Advocate—either from ourself or correspondent—touching Brother Evans' resignation, did him injustice. But as he thinks or feels otherwise, we give him the benefit of his statement. We object to his going out of his way to "lug" in Bros. Stevenson and Owen. We take the strictures of Crotchet as meant for him—and him only. Misery loves company, and our Brother is determined to have it.

All he says of Dr. S. we believe in, and can speak for Crotchet in that matter. It was fortunate, on Bro. Evans' resignation, that one already acquainted with the post, as F. A. Owen, was ready and willing to accept it. With his resignation we were satisfied; at his re-appointment gratified. Toward Brother Evans as a man and minister we entertain and could entertain none other than feelings of high and cordial esteem—of fraternal love. The Book Concern is a business affair—such sudden turns are damaging. A few more six months' trials of the Book Concern and quitting for conscience's sake, would sink that or any other concern below par. We allow his conscientiousness and admire it; but are sorry it was so hard for him to know his own mind.

According to the request we append the whole of his letter of resignation:

NASHVILLE, TENN., August 14, 1856.

To the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith resign my place as one of the Book Agents of the M. E. Church, South, to take effect the first day of October next.

It is due alike to you and the Church you represent, as well as to myself and those with whom I have been associated, in resigning the post to which I was so recently appointed, to assign the reason for this course.

Permit me to say that it is not in the least degree the result of anything personal to the brethren with whom I have been associated as Agent, or to Nashville and its community. My relations in these regards have been of the most pleasant and desirable character.

Nor has this step been induced because of the onerous and responsible duties of the Agency. These I have fully appreciated and determined to meet to the best of my ability before I accepted the place.—Indeed I have found it in this regard, a more pleasant berth than I had anticipated. And, so far as the flesh and the worldly comforts of a large family are concerned, the prospect of a settled home, and a competent support, possibly for a number of years together, presented a temptation to continue in the Agency. But all these "I—count not dear" where conscience and a clear conviction of duty are involved. It is upon this ground alone I am constrained to the step I now take.

It is known to you and the Bishops that my appointment was against my convictions and protestations—that I declined the appointment when confirmed, and only accepted upon the unanimous advice of the Bishops that I should do so. It was never clear to my mind that I was right in yielding to their advice; but fearing I might do wrong to resist the concurrent opinion of the Bishops and the Book Committee, I yielded. Having consented to the appointment, I determined to try to believe it my duty, and to remove everything out of my way that might act as a consideration to induce the abandonment of my new position. I purchased a comfortable home for my family, and tried to feel settled. But so far from relieving my doubts as to duty, they have ripened into a profound conviction that my appropriate place is in the regular pastoral work of the ministry. You may well imagine that I have passed a very trying ordeal in reaching the determination to resign my Agency. A fear of doing wrong to refuse the appointment, induced me to accept—a conviction that I shall be doing wrong to remain, constrains my resignation.

The great Head of the Church has workmen suited to, and designed for every station in the vineyard. And while I am satisfied that he has called me to preach the gospel, he has some one well suited to the most responsible station now resigned. I cannot, therefore, sympathize with any fear that the publishing interests of the Church may suffer in the least in the step I now take, or that it is important to that cause for me to continue beyond the time designated. Praying that you may be directed in your selection of my successor, and that the blessings of God may abide upon the publishing interests of the Church.

I remain as ever, yours in the bonds of the gospel of Christ.

J. E. EVANS.

CHILDREN IN HEAVEN.

BY EDMISTON.

"Who are they whose little feet,
Pacing life's dark journey through,
Now have reached that heavenly seat
They had ever kept in view?
'I from Greenland's frozen land;'
'I from India's sultry plain;'
'I from Afric's barren sand;'
'I from Islands of the main.'
'All, our earthly journey past,
Every tear and pain gone by,
Here together meet at last,
At the portals of the sky;
Each the welcome 'Come' awaits,
Conquerors over death and sin!'
Lift your heads, ye golden gates,
Let the little travelers in."

Duties of Masters to Servants.

This is the head of an excellent chapter in Dr. W. A. Smith's capital work on the "Philosophy and Practice of Slavery," just issued by Stevenson & Evans. This one chapter is worth the dollar which buys the book. We quote a paragraph or two, and advise everybody to get the volume:—[Nashville Christian Advocate.

"Slaves should be allowed reasonable time for rest. All animal natures require the refreshment derived from sleep.—The muscular and nervous system of man requires not less than seven hours in twenty-four to repair the wastes of a day of active labor. This is a general rule. Some do with less; a few require more. But in every case there is a limit beyond which we cannot habitually go, without the sacrifice of health or life. The constitutions of some laboring men can bear a great loss of sleep; but it is on the same principle that a few constitutions can, for a long time, resist the effects of the daily use of alcohol. But still dram-drinking will tell, and so will the loss of sleep.

"We unyoke the ox, we stable the horse, and the whole night is devoted to their repose. But this is often not the case with the weary slave, who toiled with them through the day. He is convenient to demands, and a great many extra jobs may be found for him before he reposes. I say 'reposes,' for sleep is not all that is required for rest. There is a time of leisure, a waking repose, which is as necessary as sleep. No reasonable man denies himself the benefit of this. The slave is entitled to the early part of the night for this. No one has a right to require of him to take all his rest with his eyes shut, and his senses locked up in sleep. There is the refreshment of mind resulting from a repose from ordinary pursuits, and occupation with things which may please the humor or minister to innocent gratification, by which, to a certain degree, the exhausted system is restored as much as by sleep. Indeed, without this, 'balmy sleep' is not a 'sweet restorer.' The man who works hard the six days of the week, does not require to sleep all Sunday, in order to restore his wasted system. There is a transition of mental pursuits from business to devotion, and there is to a virtuous mind the hallowed cheerfulness of that holy day, which contributes to restore the system, no less than cessation from labor and sleep. The slave, like his master, is entitled to the night. What if he do employ a reasonable part of it to turn a penny, and in arranging for his personal comfort? It gives repose to his mind; it ministers to his cheerfulness; along with sleep, it reinvigorates his whole system, and makes him a more valuable as well as a more happy servant. Who, then, shall deny him the boon? Surely not the economist, who calls him his 'money,' and who, by any other course, would be reducing the value of 'his money' below par!

"In Virginia—and we are not at liberty to think it is materially different in other Southern States—slaves are generally indulged with time for repose at their day meals, and with the whole night from early nightfall. A clear evidence of the economy of this system is afforded by the striking contrast which in some cases is to be found on plantations between slaves thus treated and masters of a certain description.—The slaves are fat, sleek, cheerful, and long-lived; spending their leisure time in cheerful conversation, in singing, or in those little personal offices which give elasticity to mind and body. But not so with some masters. They sleep as much—that is, lie down as much—as their slaves; but their sleep is disturbed by an incoherent tracing of anxious thought of the troubled day.—They are not refreshed. Both mind and body are worn down by excessive friction. They hasten to premature old age; and the weary wheels of life stand still long before the appointed time.—Some masters are personally very industrious and enterprising; they work side by side with their slaves. It is their boast that they require no more of their slaves than they do themselves. Yea, they do more than they, having the direction and care of all. Surely, say they, my slaves have no right to complain. But this reasoning is not always fair. It may be that the master overtasks himself. This does not give the right to overtask his slaves.—Withal, he brings to his task a physical system stimulated to a high degree by those mental activities which push him forward to enterprise great things. He labors to exhaustion, and enjoys his rest only the more for having done so. Not so with the slave who works by his side. When he yields to over fatigue, his thoughts administer no cordial to his weary limbs. It is well if he have not intelligence enough to make them a source of still further prostration.

"Again, the man-servant and the maid servant, as well as the least, are entitled to the rest of the Sabbath.—More than this, we are commanded to 'remember the Sabbath-day and keep it holy.' The head of the family should see that all the arrangements necessary to promote the due observance of the Sabbath are properly made, so that, whilst he requires the observance of the Sabbath, all the domestic arrangements invite its observance.

"There are certain individuals about many families whose offices are so difficult to be dispensed with, because they are so necessary to self-indulgence, that they are often deprived of the rest of the Sabbath. Of this class there are two humble but very important personages, which it is the neither beneath the subject nor the occasion to notice: namely, the cook and the carriage driver. To the carriage-driver of some families, all days are alike 'days of rest.' He is the most idle personage about the premises. It is well if a farm hand be not presently sold to support his idleness. But the carriage-driver of another family is himself also a farm hand. With him the case may be widely different. He may toil on the farm six days in the week, and then spend the day of rest in burnishing harness, and with carriage and horses. If he drive to church, the care of his horses is at least a pretext for neglecting the sermon and if he drive to spend the day with a neighbor, it is not a day of rest, and may not be a day of enjoyment. In either case, there is but little companionship, but few church privileges, and still less opportunity for rest. It may be no better with the cook, and is often not so well. Indeed, the Sabbath is seldom a day of rest with the cook. It is oftener a day of much closer confinement. Stewing, roasting, baking and broiling, the greater part of the day on Sabbath, afford but little time for the repose for which the fourth commandment provides. These are evils in the land. It lies on right-minded men to correct them. At the least, they can correct their own practices, and in doing this they will do much to reform the habits of society."

Are not they miserable, who if they had their wish, could not be happy?

The conversion of a sinner is a greater wonder than the creation of the world.

HAVANA, CALIFORNIA, CENTRAL AMERICA.

AUSTRALIA.

WASHINGTON AND OREGON TERRITORIES.

From Havana.

The United States Mail steamship Philadelphia, Jno. McGowne, commander, from New York via Havana, arrived here yesterday morning. The Philadelphia left New York on the 6th at 2 P. M.; arrived at Havana at 5 P. M. on the 12th; landed 55 passengers and $10,000 in specie; took on board a large number of passengers from that place and Aspinwall, and left the next morning for this port.

California Intelligence.

By the arrival yesterday morning of the steamship Philadelphia from Havana, with the California and Central American mails, we have received files from San Francisco, as late as the 20th ult. They contain but little intelligence of an interesting nature. From the summary of the news of the previous fortnight, which is published in the Alta California, of the 20th ult., we copy as follows:

THE STATE.—Since the sailing of the last steamer we have had a rain in various part of the State, very much to the edification of the miners.

On the 5th, a destructive fire broke out in Marysville, in which some forty buildings, mostly occupied by Mexicans and Chinese, were destroyed.

The town of Colusi was entirely destroyed by fire about the same time.

The settlers of Sacramento held a meeting on the 7th, to consider the recent decision of the Supreme Court of this State, declaring the right of claimants of Inchoate grants to eject settlers previous to a final confirmation by the United States Court. They passed resolutions to maintain their possession at all hazards until the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

The shock of an earthquake was recently felt at Monterey and Santa Cruz.

Gov. Foote and Dallio Peyton are addressing the American party throughout the State. Hon. M. S. Latham and Thomas J. Henley are stumping the State for the Democratic ticket. Col. E. D. Baker and F. P. Tracy are traveling among the Republicans.

The Supreme Court has decided that the Governor has no power to remove Notaries Public.

A grand political barbecue, at which the Democratic, American and Republican orators all made speeches, was held at San Jose on the 17th and 18th.

All of the parties in the State profess to be sanguine of success, and in the present position of political affairs, it is impossible to predict with certainty how the State will go.

The last trip of the Sea Bird, 4,200 boxes of grapes were brought from Los Angelos.

The Democratic State Convention met on the 9th at Sacramento, and after three days' session, completed the following nominations: For Congress, Jos. McKibben and Charles L. Scott; Clerk of the Supreme Court, Charles S. Fairfax; Presidential Electors, A. C. Bradford, P. Pio la Torre, Geo. Freaner and Augustin Olivera; Superintendent of Public Instruction, A. J. Moulder. The ticket is anti-Broderick throughout.

There has been a large number of arrivals from the Plains recently.

DR. E. P. Keene, formerly State Senator from El Dorado, was found dead in his bed, in Placerville—the result of paralysis.

A large and magnificent meteor, which was seen in many remote portions of the State, as well as in San Francisco, shot through the heavens on the 11th.

THE MINES.—From all portions of the mining region we hear the most favorable accounts. Extensive preparations are being made in anticipation of the rainy season, to work the dry gulches and ravines where there is no water. We continually hear of "rich strikes," and it is probable that there never were more favorable prospects in the mining region than there are at present. The Indians predict that there will be a great deal of rain this winter.

THE CITY.—After the storm has come the inevitable calm. San Francisco is as quiet and harmonious as a country village.

The "Piracy" suit in the U. S. Circuit Court terminated in favor of the defendants on the 11th inst. Some excitement existed during the trial, and after the prisoners were discharged, a procession was formed, and marched to all parts of the city, exhibiting much enthusiasm.

Those who have expended so many words and shed so little blood in "defence of the Constitution," were very confident that the "pirates" would be convicted, and, that they might sustain law and promote order, circulated a variety of frightful tales about "rescuing prisoners by the Vigilance Committee," but the attempt to bring the people in conflict with the Federal authorities failed completely.

On the 9th, the Society of California Pioneers celebrated the sixth anniversary of the State's admission into the general compact. All classes accepted the occasion as a holiday. The Military, Fire Department, and other associations, turned out; an oration and a poem were delivered, and not one unlawful demonstration occurred.

On the 8th, Madame Lola Montez's diamonds were sold at auction. They brought nearly $10,000. She intends devoting this money to the education of Mr. Folland's children in New York. He was her agent, and was drowned while coming from Australia recently.

The Grand Jury of the United States District Courts have rendered true bills for murder against Farnsworth and Forbes, officers of the Golden Gate. On one of their July trips they confined John Bowen, a seaman, so near the steam-pipe that he was suffocated.

The Young Men's Democratic Club will not admit any one to membership who belongs to, or endorses the Vigilance Committee. In several instances friends of the Committee have been ordered to leave the Club-rooms.

During the Committee's reign, a letter from the second in command, under the Governor of the State Army of Suppression, dated at Sacramento, and sent to this city, came into the hands of the Committee before it reached the one to whom it was directed. There was a great deal of talk about it, and the matter went before the United States Grand Jury, who, after examining many witnesses, dismissed the case, exonerating the Post-Office Department from blame. The letter contained items in regard to the Vigilance Committee.

During the night of the 10th, there were heavy showers of rain, attended by mournful thunder and faint lightning—all this being unusual at this period of the year.

A tunneling machine has been perfected by Mr. Sheen. It is propelled by cold air, will cut one foot of rock an hour, make a hole six feet in diameter, crawl into it of itself, is one of the most scientific inventions of the age, and is just what the miners want to enable them to get at those millions away in the mountains.

The County Treasurer's report for the month of August shows the amount of funds on hand to be as follows: City of San Francisco, $1,446 75; county of San Francisco, $15,391 14; State of California, $1,211 53; city and county, $6,741 87. Total, $29,800 45.

A flying machine is now on exhibition. It is made principally of gull's wings and bamboo; and having obtained the bird-wing motion, the inventor thinks he can "slide" out of the Union in a few minutes.

Herbert, a member of Congress, arrived by the last steamer, and is treated as though he were a suspicious stranger. The heavy petitions requesting him to resign, and abandon allection for this State, have been presented to him.

The Democratic and American parties are expected to hold conventions in a short time and when they shall have adjourned, there will be four tickets for the voters to consider.

Charles Doane, Chief Marshal of the Vigilance forces, has been nominated for Sheriff by the Reform party, and also by the Republicans. Several others of the Vigilance organization have been likewise selected.

The County Grand Jury are in session, and it is supposed that they will indict those who officiated at the execution of Hare and Hetherington, besides coming in with a full cargo of other bills.

The political aspect of the city is misty. All the parties have "enthusiastic meetings," torchlight processions and street discussion, but not a man can tell who will be President.

The Courts have no startling cases before them, the assessed property has been equalized, and the decision made by the Board of Supervisors, declaring the Sheriff and Coroner no longer entitled to hold their offices, has been referred to the Supreme Court. The governing apparatus moves on loosely, but without noise.

From Central America.

By the arrival yesterday morning of the steamship Philadelphia, we have received dates from Panama and Aspinwall to the 3d inst. They contain very little news of interest. Affairs on the Isthmus were beginning to assume a more settled aspect. The following article, which we extract from the Aspinwall Courier of the 3d inst., will give the reader an insight into the state of politics there at that date:

Bartolome Calvo, Governor elect of this State, was inaugurated at Panama on Wednesday last, and we understand that a considerable demonstration was made on the occasion. The military, police and the citizen volunteer corps were paraded, firing salutes, etc. Several speeches were made, and a general good feeling is said to have been manifested.

We have ever had faith in the integrity, tact and energy of Calvo. He is a mulatto, a native of Carthagena, a practical man, and a brother type; and was the most influential editor of the Isthmus for two years, during which we were laboring in the same field at Panama—like other New Granadians, he is exceedingly jealous of foreign influence, and as a politician, he is crafty and assuming; but we have always found him more honorable than others. If he cannot deliver the State from the slough into which it has fallen, no one will be secured whose services will avail.

The termination of the factional strife which has been carried on at Panama for several weeks, upon the Ultramarotal question, having been accomplished by the inauguration of the candidate elected, has to a considerable extent restored security to the minds of the natives and citizens of that city and vicinity; and everything wears a more settled aspect. Our local business will now revive, and we trust that the reaction from the state of lethargy into which all our business men had fallen, will induce a brisk time for some months to come.

We learn from the same paper that Mr. A. J. Center had arrived at that place and would take the place of Col. Totten as General Superintendent of the Panama Railroad Company, during that gentleman's absence from the Isthmus.

Col. Totten was to leave on the steamship George Law, for New York, it being his design to visit his friends in the States.

The Presidential contest was as yet undecided, but it was supposed that Gen. Mosquera would be the successful candidate, he being largely ahead at last accounts.

Later from Australia.

We extract from our California exchanges the following item of news from the South Pacific:

Our latest intelligence from this quarter is to June 21st. The news is barren of general interest. Further discoveries of gold fields continue to be made.

The Rocky River, Fingal and Deloraine Districts are all turning out very fair. In the latter, some claims have yielded largely. Hands hiring out in the mines get $20 per week, working 11 hours per day.

Miss Hayes had been singing at Melbourne and elsewhere, with success.

Measures were in contemplation for checking the rapidly increasing Chinese immigration. Immense numbers of them die on the passage from China.

A section of the Geelong and Melbourne railway had been completed.

The Queen's Theater, at Maitland, was burnt on the 10th of June.

A nugget of pure gold weighing fifty-four pounds, had been found at Geelong, being the largest ever found in the colony, except one.

The Panama Star, of the 3d last., has the following additional items:

We have received via Callao, files of the Melbourne Argus to the 30th of June.

New gold fields have been recently discovered in Tasmania, which are creating considerable excitement, and the reports from all parts of the colonies respecting this mineral are favorable.

The papers before us are filled with communications and editorials on farming, and other matters of no interest to our readers. Crime appears to be decreasing; at least the papers make less mention of murders and robberies than usual.

Later from Washington and Oregon.

The Alta California, of the 20th ult., has the following intelligence from these Territories:

OREGON.—Although there has been but little fighting since the battles at the Grande Ronde and Day's river, still the Indians of both Oregon and Washington Territories exhibit a sour and unfriendly disposition. In fact the great body of them remain hostile and defiant. A grand council was appointed to take place on the 15th August, but it was feared many of the tribes would not come in. About 5,000 Indians had been collected at the Dalles in charge of the agents, some being tribes previously friendly, and some hostile that have lately come in and given up their arms. A large supply train had been captured by the Indians, who made good their escape into the Blue Mountains.

The Indian troubles, by drawing away many persons from their ordinary pursuits, had somewhat diminished the wealth and agricultural products of the country, but with peace this will soon be remedied, leaving no serious traces behind.

The harvests, though late, owing to the advanced season of sowing, caused by the cold weather, are nearly completed. The crops are generally good, much better than was anticipated early in the season. The yield of apples, peaches and other fruits, has also been abundant. Mowers, reapers and other labor-saving machinery is being introduced, to the great benefit of the farmer.

The new fire engine ordered from New York had arrived out and gave general satisfaction, and a large sum had been raised for the purchase of another.

Telegraphic wires had been extended to Salem by way of the Dalle.

A party of miners under Vic Trevells, who had gone to the Spokan country had not been heard from, and it was feared they had been killed by the savages.

WASHINGTON.—The crops in this region, especially oats, have suffered much from the grasshoppers. The weather, however, had been very favorable for the harvest, and the remaining crops had been gathered in fine condition.

The U. S. brig Fanntleroy was engaged surveying the harbor of Port Townsend, Puget Sound.

EXTRAORDINARY REVELATIONS OF SADLEIRISM.—The Tablet of this day puts prominently forward the following information of a singular fact which has come to light within the last few days, the accuracy of which, in the main, is guaranteed by the informant. The story, however seemingly romantic, comes, nevertheless, within the range of probabilities. Amiable and accomplished as the late Earl of Shrewsbury was admitted to be, his Lordship, it is said by those who knew him intimately, had not the ordinary share of vulgar common sense which is often allotted to the less gifted and exalted:

A will has been discovered among the papers of the late Earl of Shrewsbury bequeathing his estates to the late John Sadleir absolutely and unconditionally. The existence of this will was unknown to Mr. Sergeant Bellasis and Mr. Hope Scott until within the last few days. It is of a date anterior to the will in favor of the infant son of the Duke of Norfolk, and is understood to have been made previous to the short stay of the Earl in London when he took his seat in the House of Lords. The subsequent will was not however, made in consequence of the public exposure which followed the suicide of John Sadleir; but before returning abroad the Earl was advised by a dignified ecclesiastic to place his affairs in the hands of Catholics of known probity and honor, and we believe the executors of the will were recommended to him. The Earl, however, never made these gentlemen acquainted with the disposition he had previously made of his property, and it is understood that he overruled the advice they tendered to him in many respects, and especially in not leaving anything to his nearest relatives. The intention of the Earl was that his property should be applied by John Sadleir to charitable and ecclesiastical uses; and no plausible reason can be alleged for his choice of the person of whom he confided the distribution of his property, except that his own solicitor and the solicitor of John Sadleir were one and the same person. It is, of course, not to be supposed that this gentleman was acquainted with the Sadleir frauds, or even with the fact of the speculations in which John Sadleir was involved. And it is probable that so astute a man as Sadleir would, so far as possible, keep from the knowledge of his Catholic solicitor everything which would tend to lower his opinion of him, and seek other and less scrupulous advisers to carry out the details of his frauds and speculations.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT.—We clip the following from the Baltimore Sun of the 14th inst.

Among the important improvements on exhibition at the U. S. Agricultural Fair in Philadelphia last week was a coal cart, invented by J. W. Martin, of Burlington, N. J., and deposited by Mr. Samuel H. Rothermel, of Philadelphia. This cart has a scale attached to it by which every consumer of coal or dealer in the article can ascertain the exact weight in the cart when brought to the door. The scale is fastened to a frame upon the axis, and by a lever the weight is put upon the scale at four points simultaneously. One of these carts has been in use for several months, and is found to answer the purpose well. The cart is not required to be level to get the weight of coal like ordinary scales. The extra weight to a cart by making this attachment is but trifling, and the cost is only about $20. If found to answer the purpose of the inventor, as it promises to do, it will be most generally adopted by all honest dealers, to the satisfaction of the consumers in all cities.

FROST IN BATON ROUGE.—The Comet of the 16th inst. says:

On Thursday night last, October the 16th instant, there was a frost here, and no mistake. It was our pleasure to be up until grey dawn of another Friday showed its face in the East, and we can testify to the fact with a merry host of other witnesses; all up together to observe the consummation of one of those pleasing little events properly acknowledged to be the most interesting institution of man's invention and discovery.

The N. O. Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1856.

The Book Agents.—They or their representatives will attend all the Conferences. Brethren who have bought books of the Concern should be ready for them. They cannot go forward in their work unless the amounts due are paid up. In beginning their business, getting under way, large outlays and liabilities had to be incurred. Besides, there are the quarterly payments for support of the Bishops. The Agents don't beg for money; they only ask for what is their own. Let them have it—have it all—have it promptly.

Harper's Magazine and Story Book.—These two come monthly—regularly, and fill up the reading circle of the house. The Magazine for November, as, as usual, crammed with matter. See the contents advertised in another column. The Story Book is a charmer. Mr. Abbott writes it, and the Harpers print and illustrate it. Talent and capital thus combined, must produce a thing unequalled. The Story Book and Magazine cost, for one year, $5. Jacob Abbott is equal to Peter Parley in pleasing narrative, and superior in the practical instruction and sound moral conveyed. He delights boys and girls, while teaching them to be grateful, kind, obedient to parents, industrious, &c. In his familiar style we detect a few provincialisms in language, which we would not have our little folks adopt, such as "I guess," "bad for him," &c.

Y. M. C. A.—This Association is already a moral power. The Young Men's Christian Associations are doing a good work in the North, by procuring and backing up open air preaching—from ministers of all denominations represented in their Union. If the Association were to commit itself to this movement alone, it would be a benefactor of the age.

Mr. R. G. Latting is the Secretary of the 6th District of the confederation formed by all these Associations in the United States and the British Provinces. Those wishing to organize and add strength to it should correspond with him here. We are obliged by a copy of his Circular.

Death of Rev. Robt. W. Spence.—This estimable minister, and member of the Alabama Conference, died in Kemper county, Mississippi 27th September.—Obituary next week.

Noxubee Camp-Meeting.—Rev. W. P. Harrison writes, October 16: "I have just returned from Noxubee camp-meeting, where our Macon Missionary subscription was carried up to $525. There were about twenty-five souls converted at the meeting."

That is noble for Macon Miss., with only 145 members. We understand this one village beats the whole surrounding and wealthy circuit, which up to latest dates had carried its missionary collection up to $350.

Methodism in California.—The letters of Bishop Kavanaugh are putting our readers in possession of his matured views, leisurely expressed. From other sources we learn that the Bishop is doing a good work there. Rev. A. M. Bailey, in a letter published in the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

"The Conference of the M. E. Church, North, has just closed. They had a pleasant time and seem determined to do something to make an impression in this land. They appointed a committee to attend our Conference, with a view of effecting a union between the two divisions of the Methodist Church in this State."

Talking in the Pulpit.—Some of our readers will bear the following remarks in mind for the good they will do them. There is more importance in deportment than some suppose. We extract it from Dr. Wayland's recently published articles in the Examiner:

"There is another practice to which I regret to refer. It is the habit of talking in the pulpit when two or more ministers occupy it together. We frequently see two or three ministers engaged in earnest and apparently trivial conversation before the services commence, and in the intervals of singing. They appear to be looking together over the audience and making remarks upon it, or upon some particular person or persons whom they discover in the midst of it. Or, it may be that after the sermon they are talking of the discourse. Now what a tempest of righteous indignation would it create in the bosom of a minister, if his people should act thus in the house of God. But I would ask, with all deference, what distinction is to be made here between the minister and his people? Is he not at least as strongly bound to show reverence in the house of God as those to whom he ministers? Is not the law for one precisely the law for the other? Nothing detracts more effectually from the impression of a sermon than any thing which betokens levity in the man who has delivered it.

Hatred is due to sin, compassion to the sinner.

Sinners are first driven, then drawn to God.

A CAMP-MEETING EXCURSION.

The progress of the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad daily increases social facilities between the city and a very pleasant country. We find our first enjoyment of them within the current week.

In company with a party of "devout women" whose account of another camp-meeting excursion was given in last week's Advocate, we left the depot at half past three P. M., Friday. This road has been unlucky of late. The account of disasters fresh and serious was not calculated to increase the feeling of safety. Out of seven engines, only three are in running order. The company's proposals are out for fencing the track, and much it needs it. Thousands of cattle pasture in the low grounds though which, for the first eighty miles, the road runs. After feeding in marshes by day they like a dry place to lie down on at night—and this is found on the road bed! Most of the accidents, have come of this.—Even in the day time they are much in the way. After a while the toot, toot of the Engineer's whistle has no effect on them. They trot along lazily, or stand still and face the music, chewing their cuds placidly, as only a cow can, on the verge of death. Generally they are knocked off. The owner, if he hears of it, comes and takes off the hide and makes the most he can of the fresh meat. The company have stood suit and damages cant be collected. But ever and anon a cow takes ample vengence on the company and damages them to the amount of thousands. Our downward train got a foul of a herd of seven and killed three. Mr. K., some months ago had seven mules killed, at a lick. An animal struck by an engine in motion, if not killed on the spot, seldom if ever recovers. We hope the fences will be up, on both sides, before we travel again, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad.

At the stations thrifty villages are growing up; and near them are many private dwellings of merchants and others of the city, who keep their families there the most of the year—with gardens and all country luxuries.—Those who were so knowing as to know where the stations would be, have made a fine spec, by taking up the pine land at government price ($1 25 per acre) and selling out at $10 and more. Near Magnolia—which is near the 100 mile post—we were shown a fifty acre piece; it cost the present owner, two years ago, $50. Now he refuses $1000 for it.

Right and left from the Railroad, after the first eighty miles, lies a plentiful, but not wealthy country, of good society, well supplied with schools and churches. The cars stop four miles above Magnolia. We borrowed a horse on Saturday and rode fourteen miles to Adams's camp-ground. It is in Amite county, Miss. Rev. T. C. Price, P. C., Rev. J. G. Jones, P. E.

They work Methodism four square—without taking off any of the corners. The preaching is at the people; and those that get happy shout as loud as they feel like and there is nothing to make them afraid! The groves are deep about and solemn in their autumn hues. They witness prayer and praise. The hospitable tenters have taken every pains to leave the members in attendance nothing to do or care for, but to get religion and grow in grace. May they themselves be blessed! The number of converts and additions to the church was not ascertained when we left on Monday evening; but doubtless will be reported. The subject of holiness—sanctification was deeply emphasized and insisted upon in the sermons of Bro. Jones and the exhortations of the venerable Father Clinton.

The Lord's Supper was administered half past three P. M., Sabbath to twenty ministers—local and travelling, and a large number of communicants. It was good to be there.

On that day special services were held for the colored people and the sacrament administered to them.

We never heard better camp-meeting singing; appropriate, inspiriting and with good voices. Pleasant Valley had its contingent of singers and workers at the altar there. We should like to see that Valley. It is fertile of preachers and clever people, and can pour out more than any other Valley on our map. It must be a very wide valley and a happy one. Why not hold an annual conference there?

Resolutions on Class-Meetings.

Believing as we do, that class-meetings promote vital piety, train the mind for devotional exercises, and bring into lively exercise the nobler and finer feelings of the heart, and are productive of great and good results, and render our Church a peculiar Church, distinctive in this feature from all other branches of the Christian Church, and one of the principal causes of our success, and if abandoned will result in consequences disastrous to our Church and to true Godliness, and furthermore, we believe in every instance where class-meetings have been neglected, that dull formality has to some extent followed in quick succession. Be it therefore Resolved, 1st, That class-meetings are essential to the prosperity of our Church, and should not be abandoned.

Resolved, 2d, That the foregoing preamble and resolution be published in the Nashville, Memphis and New Orleans Advocates. L. PEARCE, P. E.
H. P. Barnes, Sec'y.

There is a man who has such a good temper that he hired himself out in summer to keep the people cool.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.

This body is holding its triennial session in Philadelphia. The next is to be held in Richmond, Va.

From the published statistics we learn that the Protestant Episcopal Church has 1,743 clergy, and 107,942 communicants.

Some expectation has been awakened, in those who take an interest in its proceedings, of a liturgical change in the direction of relaxation and adaptation to the moral wants of the age. A Commission was appointed three years ago to suggest changes, etc. As yet, we have read of no postive action.

Much time and discussion has been taken up in fixing the mode of trying bishops. It has been determined that the diocesan and not the General Convention shall take the initative in their trials. Importance was attached to this, as calculated to preserve the union or unitonality of the P. E. church. Our neighbor, Bishop Polk, for instance, would not like to trust himself to the brotherly mercies of a house of Bishops made up mostly of New Englaud and Western and Northern men. They might call him to account for his sugar plantation and hands in Louisiana. The views of his diocese, are more in accordance with his own views and practice.

But, in this guarding against agitation on questions of local or political complexion, they leave open a wide gap for heresy. Bishop Doane may ripen into a bold Puseyite—and is safe, if he can inoculate the majority of his local convention with his own views. There is no connectional restraint.

A canon requiring bishops to visit the parishes within their diocese, at least once in three years, passed.

Also that only communicants are eligible to the Convention. Heretofore a considerable number of this their highest church indicatory, were not professors of religion! This is a step we are glad to see towards drawing a dividing line between the church and the world.

The Committee on Canons, to whom had been referred the resolutions of the General Convention of 1808, concerning persons engaged in duels, and concerning the marriage of persons divorced, reported that legislation on the subject of the second of these resolutions was inexpedient, and in regard to the first they reported the following proposed canon:

CANON RESPECTING THE USE OF THE BURIAL SERVICE.

No minister shall perform the burial service over the body of a person who shall die of any wound received in a duel, unless previous to his death he shall have exhibited satisfactory evidence of sincere repentance.

This gave rise to an earnest and protracted debate, the result of which was the rejection of the proposed canon, leaving every minister, as before, to act in such circumstances according to his discretion.

To Preachers and Others who have been acting as Colporteurs.

Brethren:—Please come to Conference prepared to make a full report and settlement? If books are unsold bring the number of volumes as well as the amount. We want to report to the General Secretary the number of volumes sold, the number given and the pages of tracts distributed.

If any monies are in your hands for our cause bring it, with the names of all who have given ten dollars or more, with directions for sending them the books due.

Those with whom I have left subscriptions will confer a favor by collecting for us the whole amount. And if monies have been collected by any of the Quarterly Conference Societies, please bring it to Conference with any directions as to special uses to be made.

Respectfully, H. H. MONTGOMERY.

Twelve Questions for a Wet Sunday.

1. If it were any other day, would I be kept at home by the weather?

2. Did I ever stay away from my business, from a party, from an amusement, for such a rain or snow as this?

3. If it were a public meeting for some other purpose than divine worship, would I think it too bad a day to go out?

4. Would I go to church if I could make or save a dollar by it, or gain a customer?

Infantile Conversion.

NO. 1.

Every age of the Church owes its share to the developement of the Christian doctrine. The history of Christianity will sufficiently show that all the truth has never been comprehended in a single age, much less by a single mind since the days of the Apostles. God has astonished the world from time to time, by a revelation of new truths which have indeed been contained in the Scriptures ever since they were written, but not as yet embraced or understood by believers in Scripture. And these truths appear sometimes to have been the most patent of all that are revealed in the Bible. That all-pervading doctrine for instance, of justification by faith, may be said to have been discovered first to Martin Luther when climbing the steps of St. Peter on his knees. The cognate doctrine of the direct witness of the Spirit, was first learned and preached by the immortal Wesley, though plainly set forth in Scripture, and fully asserted in the standards of the Church.

Two great effects followed the discovery and preaching of these truths. The first was a bigoted opposition on the part of those who had not received them. The second was a wide-spread and endless revival of religion, which has finally incorporated these truths into the faith and understanding of the Christian world. The same effect will follow every subsequent discovery of a similar kind.

All this doubtless arises from the fact that there are two separate and distinct senses in every scripture statement of truth available to the human mind. The one is the natural and ordinary sense, which appears to all readers alike, and which conforms to the state of their religious knowledge, and to the facts of their experience, in an unconverted state; the other is a new and spiritual understanding of the same truths, the capacity for which is doubtless given by the Spirit of God. This difference is set forth in the declaration of the Apostle, that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." The experience of Christians corroborates this statement. Bunyan says that sometimes the Bible appeared dry and unmeaning, and again every passage was filled with light. So with the whole body of Christians. From various causes an incapacity sometimes exists for receiving a truth, and then the contrary.

That there is a truth on the early capacity of the human heart for the reception of the converting grace of God, which the Church has never yet fully understood or appreciated, I think will be made evident in the following pages. And I may further add my conviction that the reception of it will produce, in time, a salutary revolution.

I could suggest the reasons why I think the Methodist Church has never as yet, evolved this point in her doctrine or her practice. It is simply because in older countries she has been called to labor among the adult population who have been left unconverted and outcast by other churches, and in this country that her work has been mostly to follow the tide of emigration and wrestle with the hardy pioneers of civilization. Hence she has hardly had time to adjust herself to the wants of those communities where the gospel has been planted long enough to direct the mind of the Church mostly to the rising generation as the hope of her future increase and accession. But we believe the time has now come, when this view must be taken, and we call upon the Church, in the name of God to prepare herself to meet it. And the truth which is to be considered at this practical crisis, we present without much variation of meaning, either juvenile or infantile conversion. We prefer the latter term as implying more clearly the anticipation of the developement of sin from within, and its inroads from without, upon the human mind. We mean by it the possibility, the practicability of a conversion so early as to preclude the experimental knowledge of sin before an experimental knowledge of religion.

But here I am met with the suggestion that the Methodist Church has always believed in this doctrine. I doubt. It is indeed true that there is nothing in her standards against it but as will be shown, to be consistent with herself, she must hold it; nevertheless, practically it is, if held at all, as much a dead letter as was the doctrine of the witness of the Spirit in the English Church at the time of John Wesley—and oh with what disastrous consequences it may still prevail, none but the eye of God can see.

I must ask, Mr. Editor, the candid perusal and consideration of the above by your readers, while I prepare to set forth in future numbers what I honestly believe the plan of salvation has done for infants, and what God requires of the Church in making that plan available to them. And yet some may call me a heretic. I ask you to insert the following just sentiment from Coleridge:

"Tolerate no belief that you judge false or injudicious, and arraign no believer. The man is more and other than his belief, and God only knows how small or how large a part of him the belief in question may be, for good or for evil. Resist every false doctrine and call no man heretic. The false doctrine does not necessarily make a man a heretic, but an evil heart will make any doctrine heretical."—[Aids to Reflection.

Needed and Desired.

Well, what's on the carpet now?

This: We need a depository of our books and tracts—a large amount of them too—in the city of New Orleans, in a central, convenient part of the city. A house, convenient and commodious, for this purpose, including room sufficient for the Advocate, is also needed, and very much desired.

If these were in New Orleans, much good could be effected by them, in placing within the reach of those who desired to purchase them, books of our publication, in having a central point for Methodism and Methodist influence in the city—a point where every Methodist visiting the city could call and feel at home, find papers to read, obtain books and tracts to read on his way home, and to distribute on steamboats and cars, a point where Sunday school books could be obtained readily for all the South Western portion of our church; where the tract societies of Louisiana, Mississippi, Ouchita, Arkansas and Texas Conferences could have a general depot, and from which they could radiate and supply the country, and the preachers of these Conferences could all receive their supplies of books and tracts.

Well, how do you expect to get this needed and desired depot, &c., &c.?

I propose that the officers and managers of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, and of as many other Conferences as can attend, with as many members of our church as may feel an interest in this enterprise, shall meet in Vicksburg, Miss., on Friday, the 21st day of November, 1856, and canvass the whole plan, scheme, &c., and agree, if they can, on some plan by which this work shall be done. Will you come, my brethren?

I am informed that a lot and suitable buildings for this will cost about $20,000—twenty thousand dollars! Can't this amount be raised in the territory mentioned above in one or two years, at most? I think it can if we agree and unite.

REVIVALS.

Geneva Circuit, Ala. Con., Oct 7, 1856.

The Lord has been on the giving hand this year on Geneva Circuit, despite the opposition with which we met during the early part of the year, produced by the influence of the "Great Iron Wheel." Our neighbors were astonished out of measure at the corruption of the Methodist Church—many of its members were dumb with silence, not knowing what to answer. But they did not wait long; soon Brownlow's "Examination" appeared for her defence. The Holy Ghost was wonderfully poured out upon the labors of her servants, and that "stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands," commenced rolling, hushed the storm, stilled the tempest, and the sound of the "great image" ("iron wheel") has died away in the distance, and we now enjoy a glorious calm. The church has been greatly blessed. We have had 250 accessions, a great many truly converted to God, and made to rejoice in hope of immortal life. We also have had a revival in the way of building meeting houses, which are very much needed in this section. At an appointment where, in the early part of the year we were without a shelter, and stood upon the naked earth to proclaim the glad sound of salvation, we now have a commodious and comfortable house erected, and three others on the way. In the meantime, we have not forgotten the missionary collection. We have nearly doubled the assessment for the circuit. The local brethren have nobly come up to the help of the Lord, and rendered efficient service.

"To God be all the glory."

L. PATTERSON.

Westville, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor:—Please say to the friends of Zion, that we have lately held two meetings on this circuit, of great religious interest. The first came off at Chapel on the 26th and 27th of September, and was signalized by a gracious revival of pure, heartfelt religion. The church was much refreshed and built up in the faith of the gospel. Many were awakened, sought, and, we trust, found the Lord precious—the number of conversions, however, we did not ascertain. Sixteen were added to the church, and it is believed that several others will yet come in as the fruits of that revival.

Our next meeting was held at Mount Zion, the place mentioned in our former communication, commencing on Saturday, the 4th inst., and continued four days. The Lord was present to wound and to heal, to kill and to make alive. O, it was good to be there. Sixteen were added to the Lord, and many others awakened.

Our Baptist brethren held an opposition meeting within two miles of us, but without injuring our cause in the least.

But here allow us to say that the number of conversions and accessions reported, bears but a small proportion to the power displayed in our revivals. The reasons are obvious, viz: First, this is a sparsely inhabited country, and secondly, there are three denominations of Christians patronized, and, of course, they each exert an influence in favor of their peculiar theories and tenets, so that the irreligious community is divided in sentiment, thus giving to each but a small dividend from the entire sum.

But from that proportion of the masses that favors Methodism, she has received a large per centage, and still the work goes on, and will, we trust, until the last sinner, redeemed by the blood of Jesus, shall be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, as it is in him.

H. B. WHITTINGTON.

Richbold, La., October 9, 1856.

Our camp meeting at Coushattie, Red River Circuit, closed last Tuesday morning. We had a most excellent time, though there was not as large an accession to the church as we looked for and had reason to expect. The pulpit efforts were good, and the altar services were conducted after the best style. Our gain, however, is considerable. Never have I seen the membership more refreshed. We left many seekers of religion, who expressed their determination never to give up, until they found peace in believing. Many of the backsliden and lukewarm were reclaimed and built up; Christians were greatly rejoiced. Altogether we had a happy time; there were eleven accessions to the church, and some sixteen conversions. Some of those converted were and had been probationers, for some time past. We think the work was well done, and fruit will appear hereafter. We have had three more accessions at Ringold. Our prospects are good for the future. Yours, &c.,

JAS. L. WRIGHT.

Jacksonville Circuit, Ala. Con., Oct. 14, 1856.

The Lord has most graciously revived his work at almost every appointment since the second Sunday in August. We have held two camp-meetings and four protracted meetings, at all of which we have had revivals—155 have been converted and 115 have joined the M. E. Church, South. Our meeting closed in this place on Thursday night last, but a meeting was commenced immediately in the Baptist Church and the revival is still going on, and there seems to be great unanimity of feeling between the membership of the two churches. All seem to be impressed with the necessity of a deep and sweeping revival. We are doing well in the missionary cause here and will send up twice the amount assessed to this circuit.

BENTON.

Walton Circuit, Ala. Con., Oct. 14, 1856.

A religious interest seems to be increasing in almost every society on the circuit, and at some places quite a revival influence has been felt.

I held a meeting on Shoal River, in Walton county, Fla., assisted by Brother S. Paul, commencing Saturday, 20th September, and continued four days, during which time many found peace in believing. Seventeen were received on probation, among whom was some of the best citizens of that county, and from the hoary head of three-score and ten years old to that of the youth. A great work it was.

J. V. REGISTER.

Lake Providence, La., Sept. 8, 1856.

Dear Brother McTyeire:—Our camp-meeting is over. The holy people and the careless ones likewise have gone to their homes. The recording angel may have written some sad lines. Perhaps every atom of nature is marred, but notwithstanding there are said to be spots upon the face of the sun we had during the meeting several fine fine days. We had twenty-six conversions, and with feelings of triumphant joy, such as the minister only experiences, the pastor recorded their names on the church book.

Our P. E. was with us in the spirit of the peaceful aggressiveness of the gospel. Brother Riley brought us a clever delegation from his circuit. Swan Lake was nobly represented.

Glory to God for camp-meetings.

"The Sum of all Villanies."

A correspondent—an excellent and prominent laymen of the M. E. Church, North, writes us under this caption. These words are made use of by almost every writer who says any thing against slavery. It is on the lips of every stump-speaker; and both speaker and writer allege that they are the words of the venerable Wesley, and utter against those who have slaves. You use it in your leader of the 4th, but you forget to give the reader the information that when Mr. Wesley made use of the term, he spoke of the slave trade, which is made piracy by the laws of the United I have some knowledge of Mr. Wesley's writings, and I have only the recollection of its use in his Journal, in which he says:

"Feb. 1772. Wednesday 12th. In returning, I read a book, published by an honest Quaker, on that execrable sum of all villanies, commonly called the slave trade."—Wesley's Works, 3d vol. folio 453. London Edition.—[Nashville Advocate.

A Very Polite Judge.

Governor Ford, of Illinois, tells a very rich anecdote of one of the early judges of that State, but Governor does not put upon record the name of the sensitive and considerate magistrate.

At the court over which this judge presided, a man by the name of Green was convicted of murder, and the judge was obliged to pass sentence of death upon the culprit. Calling on the prisoner to rise, the judge said to him—

"Mr. Green, the jury say you are guilty of murder, and the law says you are to be hung. I want you and all your friends down on Indian Creek to know that it is not I who condemn you; it is the jury and the law. Mr. Green, at what time, sir, would you like to be hung; the law allows you time for preparation."

The prisoner replied, "May it please your honor, I am ready at any time; those who kill the body have no power to kill the soul. My preparation is made and you can fix the time to suit yourself; it is all the same to me, sir."

"Mr. Green," returned the judge, "it is a very serious matter to be hung; it can't happen to a man but once in his life, unless the rope should break before his neck is broke, and you had better take the time you can get. Mr. Clerk, since it makes no difference to Mr. Green when he is hung, just look into the almanac, and see whether this day four weeks comes on Sunday."

The clerk looked as he was directed, and reported that that day four weeks came on Thursday.

"Then," said the judge, "Mr. Green, if you please you will be hung this day four weeks at two o'clock."

The attorney-general, James Turney, Esq., here interposed and said,

"May it please the court, on occasions of this sort it is usual for courts to pronounce a formal sentence to remind the prisoner of his perilous condition, to prove him for his guilt, and to warn him against the judgment in the world to come."

"Oh, Mr. Turney," said the judge, "Mr. Green understands the whole matter; he knows he has got to be hung. You understand it, Mr. Green, don't you?"

"Certainly," said the prisoner.

"Mr. Sheriff, adjourn the court."

Four weeks from that day Mr. Green was hung, if not so much to his own satisfaction as his appearance promised on the day of his conviction.

Another Challenge.—The Richmond Enquirer of the 11th, contains a correspondence, the first letter of which is a challenge to Hon. Jno. M. Botts, from Roger A. Pryor, Esq., in which the following language is used:

Determined to afford you no apology for evading the issue with myself, I consented to come down to your level with your son. Having disposed of him, I now confront you, and demand the satisfaction which gentlemen are always ready to render those upon whom they have inflicted wrong and insult.

This letter is dated the 11th inst., and on the following day Mr. Botts replied in a long communication peremptorily declining to meet Mr. Pryor. Mr. Botts reviews in detail the ground upon which the challenge is made; denies having influenced his son in seeking a conflict with Mr. Pryor, and states that on the contrary he took every possible means to prevent the occurrence; and among other reasons for his own determination not to engage in a duel, gives this conclusive one in the eyes of sensible men:

Your life could not be the value of a pin's point to me, and I am sure I should derive no comfort from making your wife a widow or your children fatherless—therefore, I have no desire to take it; while my own life is not only of value to me, but indispensable to the support and happiness of my family, and hope to make it useful to my country—therefore, I am not disposed to place it at your disposal.

Gems from Flavel.—Providence is like a curious piece of tapestry, made of a thousand shreds, which single, appear useless, but, put together they represent a beautiful history.

There is no reason to fear the ruin of that people who thrive by their losses and multiply by being diminished.

Be not too hasty to bury the church before she is dead; stay till Christ has tried his skill. Before you give her up for lost.

A very corpulent traveler was riding through the city of Padua, and several of the inhabitants, noted for their wit, asked him why he carried his baggage before him? He replied "'Tis my custom when I go to a town full of thieves."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Notice.—To the members of the Mississippi Conference—As the seat of our next Conference is in the bounds of my charge, I would make some suggestions for your convenience in traveling to the place. And first: Those who come via Vicksburg per railroad, to Canton, Madison county, will there take the stage for Koschusko. The stage leaves immediately on the arrival of the cars at Canton from Vicksburg. There will be a quarterly meeting at Sharon, Madison county, embracing the Sabbath before Conference, to which our brethren are invited, and the preachers are invited to share the hospitality of our people at Sharon, in their route to the Conference. Sharon is about forty miles south of Kosciusko, and directly on the route.

Ample accommodations can be had all the way from Sharon to Kosciusko.

The preachers on arriving at Kosciusko will call at the store of Messrs. Clark & Webb, south east of the public square and they will be conducted to their lodgings during the session of conference and it is earnestly desired that there should be a general attendance of the preachers. The people will be disappointed if the preachers do not come. They have made ample arrangements and will expect you, brethren.

Those who would bring their wives please inform me immediately at Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi.

Respectfully,

LATER FROM CENTRAL AMERICA.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP TEXAS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—The Texas, from San Juan del Norte, has arrived. She brought $150,000 in specie.

Walker's troops are concentrating at Granada. The invaders are advancing. A decisive battle was expected about the 20 inst. The enemy numbers about 2,000 men and are daily expecting more.

Walker had eight to nine hundred, but is reinforcing. The attack on San Jacinto was more important than previously reported. The Americans had 12 killed, including Colonels Cole, Hunt, Reed and Hutchins, and 10 wounded. The enemy's loss was very severe.

Walker has dispatched Maj. Heiss to exchange ratifications of the treaty with the United States, which was confirmed by the Senate.

Lieut. Estelle was shot for the murder of Lieut. Gordon.

Loss of the Brig Stephen Jay.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—The Brig Stephen Jay, of Philadelphia, for Charleston with coal and railroad iron, foundered on the 7th of Cape Hatteras.

The captain, his wife and child, and crew, have arrived here.

Kansas Affairs.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14.—Two hundred and forty emigrants from the Free States have been arrested near the Nebraska line, by Col. Cook's dragoons.

Later from Havana.

The U. S. steamship Cahawba, from New York via Havana, arrived here yesterday morning.

Purser Rodgers, of the Cahawba, has kindly furnished us the following memoranda of the trip:

The Cahawba left New York on the 13th inst., at noon, and arrived at Havana at 6 A. M. on the 18th inst. After discharging the mails and passengers, left at noon for New Orleans, experiencing strong head winds and seas to the bar. There is quite a dearth of news at Havana.

The health of the city had never been better. Sugar on hand, 165,000 boxes; prices unchanged. Exchange on London 5¼ prem; New York and Northern cities 6¼ to 7 per cent. discount; on New Orleans 4¼ discount. U. S. silver coin 25 and 50c, pieces 20 per cent. discount. Dimes and half dimes, at par. U. S. Gold 4¼ discount.

At the Passa l'Outre passed brig Azores bound out; also a foreign ship and barque in anchor. At 6 P. M. passed steamship Philadelphia bound south.

By this arrival we have received full files of Havana papers to the 18th inst., from which we glean the following items of interest:

A decree has been issued by the Captain General of great importance to the owners of vessels trading to Cuba. Vessels are to be hereafter charged dues by the amount of tons of cargo they have on board, not as heretofore by the amount of their register. Vessels will have to pay dues according to cargo, which is just.

One of the Havana papers publishes a letter from Spain in which it is stated that the home government is actively engaged in considering the necessity of increasing the fortifications of Havana, which had been advised by Concha.

The Captain General has issued a decree permitting the manufacture of salt from the salt marshes on the coasts of the island. The license is however loaded with several onerous restrictions, which will prevent much action in the premises.

Capt. Villar, of the steamship Ocean Bird, was attacked by footpads on the morning of the 12th inst., whilst on his way to the railway station. He knocked one of them down and called loudly for help when the other fled. A great many bandits were in the neighborhood of Havana. They have committed several outrages recently.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT ON THE MONTGOMERY AND WEST POINT RAILROAD.—We learn from the Montgomery Journal, of the 15th inst., that on the morning of the 13th the down train from West Point to that place ran off the track when within about two miles of the city, making a perfect wreck of the locomotive, tender and one of the baggage cars.

Two negro men, one belonging to Jackson Burch and the other to the estate of James Burch, deceased, were horribly mangled, having their legs badly crushed. No damage was done to the passenger train. The engineer remained on the engine, and when discovered, was at his post, putting out the fire. The accident was owing to the rails not meeting snugly together, one being found back of the other, and the wheel of the engine coming in contact with the projecting end, cut off a portion of it and bounded off the track. Heavy freight trains passing over the new portion of the road had caused the slipping of the bar.

EXTENSIVE FORGERIES AT BOSTON.—A dispatch dated Boston, 11th inst., states that no less than nine forged checks, for sums varying from $3,000 down to $700, were offered at the banks in that city on the 13th; and only one for $700 on the Atlas Bank was paid, to which the name of C. W. Forbush was forged. The bold operator in every instance escaped.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

In fulfillment of a promise we made some time ago, we present our readers with a list of the principal architectural improvements that have been added to New Orleans during the past year—those that are in progress, as well as those that are complete. The list speaks for itself, and we refer to it with pride. It will be a source of gratification to all who have the growth of our city at heart, and a surprise to that class in the North and elsewhere who keep up the ancient fiction that New Orleans is "going down."

General Remarks.

We do not offer the above as a complete list of the city improvements this year; but it comprises the bulk of them. We have omitted mention of many fine buildings that were commenced last year and finished early this year, as well as to buildings included in the above list that will not be finished till next year; so that our list may be taken as a fair exhibit of the amount of building done in New Orleans in one year.

A scarcity of workmen has considerably retarded operations; but for which, many buildings just finished would have been finished long ago, and many now in progress would be complete.

We may remark, that the plain fashion of building has almost entirely gone out of vogue. Not only the public buildings display the finest designs of the architect, but the residences and stores also are elegantly ornamented; the residences being put up in different styles of fanciful architecture, and the stores, for the most part, having brown stucco fronts, ornamental cornices and window-lintels, and elegant iron verandahs. We may be pardoned for speaking of some of these stores more particularly than we did in our list.

The Touro Buildings now lack only two stories of being complete; and when complete, they will be, by all odds, the finest range of buildings in the city. Year before last and last year, the four stores next Royal street were built at a cost of $43,000, and the three next Bourbon street at a cost of $34,000. This year three more stores were erected at a cost of $42,000, and extensions to three of the stores, built last year, costing $25,000. Next year, the old residence of Judah Touro will be torn down, and its place filled by two stores at a cost of $31,000. This will complete the row of twelve stores, at an aggregate cost of $178,000. The fixtures of the stores will swell their value far above $200,000. So far the stores are occupied by Hyde & Goodrich, dealers in silverware and jewelry; C. M. Shapson & Co., dry-goods; James Syme & Co., fancy dry-goods and trimmings; Todd & Gandolfi, carpetings; J. D. Dameron & Co., carpetings; P. & E. Reilly & Co., dry-goods; A. Barnard & Co., fancy goods and perfumeries; and J. Levois & Co., dry-goods. These stores already constitute the finest bazaar in the city; and when the row is complete, it will not be inferior to any in the United States. The elegance of the architecture and fine finish of the Touro Buildings reflect the greatest credit upon Mr. Murray, the architect and builder.

The Montgomery Buildings, on Royal street, are another splendid range, in which Mr. Reynolds, the architect, and Messrs. Jamison & McIntosh, the ulders, have joined their labors. The range consists of five stores, four-stories high; and will constitute a great furniture bazaar. The store on the corner of Bienville street will be occupied by Grosjean & Beneteau; the second by J. Dupre, dealer in mirrors and gilt work; the third by Shumway & Co.; the fourth by D. Kolhaus, and the fifth by C. Hoyo; all, excepting Mr. Dupre, dealers in furniture. Mr. Shumway and Mr. Hoye are already moved in and Mr. Dupre is moving in. The buildings are not quite finished.

As other fine pieces of commercial architecture, we may point to the stores on Common street, erected for Fellowes & Co., by Gallier, Turpin & Co.; the stores on New Levee street, erected for Paul Tulane, by Crozier & Wing; and the store on Carondelet street, erected for John Watt & Co., by Cook & Morehouse.

The Ruby Coffee-house, on Common street, and the City Brewery, at the corner of Magazine and Delord streets, are pieces of architecture that will repay a visit to anybody. Both were designed by Henry Howard—the Ruby being built by John Sewell and the Brewery by Joshua Peebles.

We ought to mention two buildings that are in progress, having been commenced long ago, and not near being finished yet. The church of the Christian Brothers, on Baronne street, commenced five years ago, is still progressing slowly; the dome and a part of the upper works being finished, externally, at least. There is no certain calculation when it will be finished; but it promises to be a building of extraordinary beauty—the architecture being Moresque. The St. Elizabeth Asylum for Orphans, at the corner of Magazine and Josephine streets, has for some time been finished in the rough, and occupied by orphans; the elder girls of the Camp street Asylum, who go there to learn the useful employments of womanhood. The rooms are being plastered, and other wise fitted up, at a slow rate. The building is large, well ventilated, and massive enough to stand through all time. It will, when complete, cost $80,000.

The Gaiety Theater, under the direction of Mr. Crisp, the lessee, has undergone an improvement that will enable it to seat two thousand auditors. The dress circle and second tier have been reconstructed, and a third tier, or gallery, of equal capacity, built above them; all being finished in very beautiful style. The stage has been shortened twelve feet, the space thus made being added to the auditory. There will be new and splendid decorations; and Mr. Boulet, the artist, is at work upon a new drop-curtain which represents Gaiety, the genius of the theater, in a very handsome manner—a group of a dozen or more males and females, engaged in music, flirtation and general merrymaking, amid a scene of sylvan and palatial beauty—the figures being painted life-size. Altogether, the internal improvements of the Gaiety will surprise and delight the patrons of that popular temple of the muses. The works are rapidly approaching completion.

The Pelican Theater has been gutted and reconstructed through its whole interior. It has been leased of Mr. Bidwell by Spalding, Rogers & Co. for the triple purpose of a theater, circus and museum; and is, altogether, a model of ingenuity in the way of economizing space. The museum occupies the front of the building—a large square room, over the entrance, for bulky curiosities and living wonders—giants, fat babies, bearded ladies, and the like—with a broad gallery all around for small curiosities. The collection will comprise the choicest selections from the famous museum at Albany, N. Y., belonging to Spalding, Rogers & Co. The auditorium occupies the middle of the building, and comprises a parquette, dress circle and second tier, of large capacity and elegant finish. As but one price will be charged for admission, the museum and dress circle are connected by a large doorway, so that the audience may amuse themselves amid the curiosities during the intervals in the theater. The amphitheater occupies the extreme rear of the building, and consists of a large arena, to be covered, when necessary, by a movable stage; the wings of the proscenium being made to swing back and forth like doors. After this, it would seem as if no accommodation had been made for actors and horses, when not performing; but the spare nooks and corners of the building have been adapted to this purpose with the greatest ingenuity. The ventilation of the building is very extensive; the roof being perforated in five places, and all the passages and doorways being broad and airy. The painting and decorations will all be elegant; and the Pelican, under whatever new name may be given it, will be an extremely popular resort. It will be complete in a short time.

The Orleans Theater has had a new and classic proscenium constructed, and four side-boxes, with saloons in their rear, over the stage; all which must prove very acceptable to the patrons of that renowned establishment. The building, however, needs a great many other improvements that have not been made; a verandah in front being especially necessary, in order to shield ladies in getting out of their carriages in rainy weather. But the building belongs to the McDonogh estate; and a blight rests over all the McDonogh property, so far as improvements are concerned. The improvements made must be laid to the energy of the lessee, Mr. Bomboushe, who has done all that he could, in justice to himself.

The New Orleans Canal and Navigation Company have been steadily at work, this year as well as last, in improving their channel of commerce between the city and the lake. They have put the Carondelet Canal in general repair, and dredged it to a depth of seven feet throughout its length. They are now engaged in dredging out the Bayou St. John, and in fortifying its mouth against the lake drift, by means of embankments extending into the lake, like those of the New Canal. The amount expended in these improvements, so far, will not fall far short of $70,000.

Municipal improvements have been in progress, on a comparatively small scale. The old building at the corner of St. Charles and Lafayette streets is being so changed inside that the Recorder's office may be shifted to its rear, as a protection from the vehicular noise of St. Charles street; the other court-houses, lockups, etc., are having small repairs made, and several of the school-houses have been repaired and painted. All of which, we should judge, will amount to a good round sum.

The Government works progress at the same old snail-like rate. The new Custom-House, though commenced eight years ago, and costing so far upwards of $5,000,000, is not much more than half finished. Some of the rooms in the north-east corner, however, are finished and filled with custom-house goods. The Branch Mint, at the foot of Esplanade street, has received a new coat of brown stucco and undergone other improvement, inside and out, the extent of which we have not taken the trouble to ascertain. The foundation of the U. S. Marine Hospital is being laid, on Common street. It will be a fine building, and will doubtless go up with Custom-House celerity.

Of the different churches and public buildings in progress, we shall speak more particularly as they approach completion.

Talk on 'Change—Business.

It was quiet yesterday on the streets, on 'Change, and in business circles generally. Although a large influx of strangers, visitors and returning citizens was observable on our great thoroughfares, yet unless the great contrarier of commerce, the staple of the South moves, there must be in some respects a corresponding apathy in trade.

The receipts of cotton since Saturday last have been to a fair extent; being by the steamboat item, from Carolina Landing, 2,030 bales; Judah Touro, from Memphis, 1,780; Linden, from Alexandria, 849; Alida, from Shreveport, 302; Louisiana, from Galveston, 261; Equinox, 301; Swamp Fox, from Grand Gulf, 1,767; Princess, from Vicksburg, 3,141; Capitol, from Bayou Sara, 1,201; Amanda, from Harrisonburg, 875; Sherman, from Grand Gulf, 1,414; J. C. Swan, from Memphis, 994; schr. Knudson, from Matagorda, 196; Laurel Hill, Bayou Sara, 842. The receipts for the 18th, 19th and 20th October last year, were 11,957 bales—being the three corresponding days. Good Middling cotton on the 20th Oct. last, was 9¼ to 9¾c.; our quotations at this time are 12¼ to 12½—a difference of three cents per pound. Middling cotton was selling in Liverpool on the 28th September last at 6d. Freights have given way and it was very difficult yesterday to obtain over 15-32d. for cotton to Liverpool. For the corresponding week last year, there were taken up twenty ships and barks for Europe—those for Liverpool, at ¾d; those for Havre, at 1c. for cotton, $1 10 for flour, and 35c. per bushel for grain; for Boston, ⅜c. for cotton, and 13c. for up the Straits Genoa, etc. Our advices from New York quote European freights dull and inactive—cotton being carried to Liverpool on the 28th inst. at ¼ to 5-32d; flour 2s. To Havre, cotton ⅜c. These low rates as compared with 1d. or 15-32d to Liverpool from this port.

There are many fine square-rigged and burden-some vessels on the way hither, and shippers in the West can send forward their produce with the strongest probability of its going forward at low rates of freight without detention, which is more than they can expect when they ship via Chicago and the lakes, and run the risk of being frozen up for about four months, or via railroad at fifty per cent. higher rates of freight. Great stress appears to be laid in some circles about two hundred bales of cotton being shipped from Memphis to New York via the Ohio river and railways. Our quondam friends cannot frighten us with the change of destination of 200 bales of cotton. We knew twelve years ago and more, of many parcels of 50 to 200 bales going up the Ohio river and over the mountains eastward, but still our good city continues to receive a good share of receipts, its factors making the best of sales, and growers paid the highest prices either a year in advance or on receipt of the crop; and any one willing to send cotton from Memphis or Mississippi to Northern cities, and sell it on four and six months' credit, can do so, for we are not ambitious of doing business on those terms in New Orleans.

One week later advices will be due from Liverpool to-night by the Arabia at Halifax, though the Bremen steamer from Southampton of the 8th might slip into port in advance. The Persia's mails undoubtedly will be received to-morrow; possibly a post may get through this morning. In the meantime, the Arabia's advices are looked for with considerable anxiety. They may report a trifling advance in cotton, but the dearness in England will operate against any speculative tendencies; in fact, we believe Mr. Bull will not "toss up" for the present, but prove as stubborn as usual.

Sugar and Cotton—General Items.

The most important feature in domestic matters yesterday, was the receipt of two hogsheads of sugar of this season's crop, from the plantation of Judge Huling, parish of Plaquemine; being the first received in this market this season. Last year the first receipt was on the 16th of October; in 1854, the 4th; 1853, the 6th; 1852, the 9th; 1851, the 19th; 1850, the 17th of October. The general opinion still prevails that the extent of this season's crop will not exceed 120,000 hogsheads, though some hold out for 130,000 hogsheads. The stocks of New Orleans sugar in New York on the 11th inst., was 10,665 hogsheads. The stocks in Louisville, Cincinnati and other places in the West, are very light, and the Western dealers will undoubtedly have an opportunity this season to learn whether sugar (in hogsheads) will bear transportation from New York or Boston over railroads, subject to some half dozen transhipments.

The European mails by the Persia came through yesterday. The private correspondence does not se Faith.

They said Jesus, but departed by Time,
An old woman knelt at her humble shrine,
And implored the Lord for food;
"Oh! give us this day our daily bread,
For I've not a morsel," the poor woman said;
"But teach me to be good."

In Heaven's high channel her prayer was heard,
And the boon the widow was not long deferred,
Being in mercy, quickly given.
Some boys were passing the lone one's door
And heard her prayer, and saw her implore
Help from Heaven.

Softly one crept to the top of the house,
Noiseless, breathless, aye, "still as a mouse,"
And threw down the loaf she craved.
"My prayers are answered," the poor woman said,
While eagerly she partook of the bread,
Which was down the chimney shaved.

The boys all laughed, and "granny" they said,
"Do you think the Lord could have sent that bread,
A tribute of Faith from Heaven?"
"We threw the loaf down the chimney fine,
When we heard the prayers that were uttered by you,
For a morsel of food to be given."

"The Lord did send it, my children," she said,
"If the devil bro't it, 'twas holy bread,
For the prayers of the righteous are heard;
And you, my children, the human means
Employed by the Lord are strange, it seems,
To fulfil his sacred word."

Success Alone Seen.

How know of life's beginnings—men behold
The gaul exhausted of the warrior, when his sword
Fruition red triumphant in the noonday sun;
The poet, when his lyre hangs on the palm
The statesman, when the crowd proclaim his voice,
And mould opinion on his gifted tongue;
They cannot see life's first steps, and never think
Upon the wretched miserable hours
When heart-sick'n'd was sickness to the heart.
They record not the battle and the march,
The toilsome privations of a wasted youth;
They see not the banner till unfurled,
They see not the solitary nights
When to them the solitary lamp,
Pour'd pale and noiseless by the sickly hand,
Till the young poet wins the world at last
To listen to the music long his own?—
The crowd attend the statesman's fiery mind
That makes their destiny; but they do not trace
The struggle, or its long expectancy.
Hard are life's early steps; and, but that youth
Is strongest, confidest, and strong in hope,
Men would behold its threshold and despair.

Brilliants.—To Autumn.

Hail, yellow Autumn! though thou art not now
As once, my favorite season. It requires
The buoyancy of soul which youth inspires,
To love to see the leaves drop from the bough,
The withered leaves; and the relentless plough
Turn over the sward; while ourlews whistling shrill,
Sing Nature's requiem on the mountain's brow,
And all the air is as blue marble, still.
It was a kind of triumph once to see
All Nature die, and find myself at ease
In youth that seemed an immortality;
But I am changed now, and feel with trees
A brotherhood, and in their obsequies [with me.
Think of my own. Thus time hath wrought

Louisiana Intelligence.

The Calcasieu Press, published at Lake Charles, in its issue of the 11th inst., says:

Jack Cross, alias Jack Morrison, alias the Texan Desperado, who has for several years resided at Madison, Orange county, Texas, and whose hands are stained with the murder of some half dozen human beings, including one William Southerland, in this parish, three years ago, was arrested by our sheriff last Tuesday on Bayou Nezpique, en route for parts unknown. He has been deposited in the parish prison, which being considered insecure, he will probably be transferred to the jail of the parish of St. Landry.

Pole Raising and Torch-Light Procession at Franklin.—The Franklin Journal, of the 16th inst., says:

The young Fillmoreites of Franklin are making arrangements to raise a liberty pole in this place on the day of the Barbecue, October 28th, 1856. We are also informed that arrangements are being made to have a grand torch-light procession on the night of the 28th. From every indication, we can assure our friends abroad, who may honor us with their presence on that occasion, that they will be amply repaid for a trip to Franklin. We hope to see a goodly number in attendance.

We learn from the Abbeville Pioneer that there was a row at Ransom's Hotel, Bayou des Allemands, a few days since, in which a resident of the neighborhood, named Lewis Chambers, was shot in the breast by Mr. Dijeau, of the hotel. The row was occasioned by Chambers interfering with a game of billiards which was peaceably going on by Mr. Dijeau and an employee of the railroad company. Chambers was not mortally hurt, though severely.

General Tomlinson's Father-in-Law.—A letter from Mauritius, published in the London Globe, says:

Yes, people knew the pretty story about Toddlen, the banker's daughter, and Hanf, a rich merchant of the name of Hanf, did not much like his daughter's marriage with the young cadet of Hussars, and fast caught the tidings which blotted out the Hussars, the colonel, and gave Hanf a general for a son-in-law. "Daughter, I love Toddlen for your sake, but not for the wealth merchant. Suddenly Hanf himself was created a baron by Nicholas, in consideration of the son-in-law's services. The new noble had a fine coach, on the door of which he removed his business (it had till then been carried on there;) the inscription ran thus: "House of the Baron Hanf." One day two officers called at Toddlehen's and asked "Was Madame at home?" entering before the maid-servant knew what to reply. The wife happened to be coming down stairs at the moment, the officers bowed low and one of them said, "Excuse our visit; it is to beg you to tell your husband that I, the Grand Duke Constantine, and my brother here, the Grand Duke Nicholas, could not leave the capital without offering our respects and congratulations to his wife." They then withdrew. When the father-in-law heard this, said he, "Daughter, I love you still better for the sake of Toddlen."

Revolutionary Sundry.—The Mobile Tribune in its Americus Ana, relates the following:

Among the most active and daring of Marion's men, were Robert Simons and William Withers. They had been sent together on some confidential expedition, and while resting at noon for refreshment, Withers, a practised shot, was examining his pistols to see if they were in good order, while Simons sat near him, either reading or in a reverie. "Bob," said Withers, "if you had sat that tump on the bridge of yunr nose, you would be a likely young fellow." "Do you think so?" said Simons, listlessly. "Yes," said Withers, "I think I can shoot off that ugly bump on your nose. Shall I shoot?" "Shoot!" said Simons, and crack went the pistol. The ball could not have been better aimed, it struck the projecting bridge, demolished it forever, and henceforth Simons was the ugliest man in the army.

Lamentable Death.—With more than ordinary regret we chronicle the demise of Mr. Robert B. Brashear, of the parish of St. Mary. He departed this life at his residence in Brashear City, on Monday last. We have no particulars, nothing but the mere announcement of the melancholy event. Mr. Brashear was one of our noblest citizens—was a true, high-minded and honorable gentleman in every relation of life, and in his untimely death the agricultural interest, society, and the State at large, have suffered an irreparable loss.

Commerce.—In our article yesterday, under the head of "City Improvements," we estimated the expense of building the Custom-House, up to the present moment, at too high a figure. A letter from the superintendent, G. T. Beauregard, Esq., gives us the precise facts, which we subjoin. The total cost of the new Custom-House, up to the 1st inst., including all contingent expenses and a large amount of valuable building material on hand, has been $1,859,639 62, and when finished, according to the calculation of Mr. B., it will cost $3,250,000. This estimate is much lower than that which obtains popular credence, and we take pleasure in spreading it before the public, as we do also that other fact that the offices of the collector's entire department are now in the new building. We intend to take advantage of the superintendent's invitation, and post ourselves in regard to the whole edifice. [Crescent.

Quarantine.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine for October contains an able article on the subject of quarantine, written by Dr. A. N. Bell, formerly a surgeon in the United States service. His view is that infectious diseases are propagated by things and not by persons; and he therefore argues against a quarantine as applied to the latter, who should be cleansed from infectious things and allowed their freedom. He recommends the erection of large warehouses at a sufficient distance from the city, where every infected ship should be unladen and then purified and allowed to proceed on its voyage, or go to sea again.

IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA!

GREAT BATTLES!

THE MAN OF DESTINY TRIUMPHANT!

NICARAGUA'S FUTURE SECURE!

The steamship Tennessee, Capt. C. Stoddart, from San Juan del Norte, with passengers, etc., consigned to Harris, Morgan & Co., arrived in port yesterday afternoon. She brings news of thrilling import. Her obliging purser, Mr. L. M. Beammon, has furnished us with the subjoined interesting memoranda:

The Tennessee arrived at San Juan from New York, on the 16th, and sailed the same day.

The steamship Orizaba, Capt. Tinklepangh, arrived at San Juan del Sur on the 8th, from New York via Straits of Magellan, making the run in the unprecedented time of fifty days and seven hours. The Orizaba would take the passengers of the Tennessee for San Francisco.

The news from Nicaragua is of the most interesting character, indicating the complete success and determination of Gen. Walker's Government.

The enemy having been for some time advancing towards Massaya, and evidently seeking to occupy that town, Gen. Walker withdrew the small force stationed there in order to encourage them to occupy the place, knowing it to be a much more favorable point to attack them than at Leon. After about ten days, the enemy had collected a force numbering 4000 men, and occupied the town. On the 11th October, Gen. Walker marched against them with 1000 men, leaving a small force at Granada. On the morning of the 12th, while approaching Massaya, the enemy sallied forth in full force and attacked them, but were immediately repulsed with immense loss and driven into the city, the Americans literally paving their way with the bodies of the dead as they advanced and entered the town.

The enemy occupied the four Plazas and the principal houses of the town. During the day, General Walker succeeded in driving them from all their points to the main Plaza, which he himself gained at about 11 P. M., cutting his way through the walls of the houses, carrying his howitzers along; and only waited for daylight to renew the attack, when a courier arrived from Granada with information that a force of about 1000 natives, principally Chamoristas, and 400 Guatamalans were besieging that place.

On receipt of this news, Gen. Walker marched his troops for Granada, where he arrived at about 10 o'clock on the 13th, and upon his arrival on the heights near the city, found it to be barricaded by the whole force of the invaders; whereupon he charged them and drove them from their posts, taking all their field-pieces and their commanders prisoners—entirely routing them from the town with great slaughter and strewing the streets and gutters with the killed and wounded, and following them from the city but not a vestige of the enemy remained.

The enemy lost at Granada four hundred killed, at Massaya four hundred killed and three hundred wounded, making in all eleven hundred men.

General Walker's loss in both engagements was sixteen killed and twenty-eight wounded—none of the wounded mortally.

It was reported that Gen. Mendes, the second in command of the enemy, was shot dead at Massaya.

At the time our informant left, Gen. Walker was to march on the following day for Massaya and Leon, his troops being in the most exalted spirits and eager for the march.

During the absence of Gen. Walker at Massaya, the citizens learning the enemy were advancing repaired to the Ordnance department and arming themselves, waited for the attack and fought with unequalled bravery and desperateness for twenty-two hours, defending the government buildings until the arrival of the army.

Mr. Lawless, Rev. D. H. Wheeler, and Mr. Fergusond and son, citizens of the United States, who had never taken any part in government affairs, were taken out of their houses and murdered in cold blood by the natives.

The Hon. J. H. Wheeler, U. S. Minister at Granada, is lying dangerously ill from an attack of apoplexy.

Left at San Juan 11. B. M. ships Orion, 90 guns; Imperieuse, 50; Arrogant, 50; Archer, 20; Victor, 6; Intrepid, 6; Cossack, 30 guns.

On Monday, the 13th, a sailing regatta of the boats in the harbor and those of the squadron came off. The Mosquito boat, "Lillia" sailed and owned by Mr. A. C. Hutchinson, of Williamsburgh, L. I., carried off the palm, beating everything in the race by a long distance.

Passengers by the Tennessee—Capt. R. L. Williams, Capt. P. A. Galtleburg, Nicaragua army; Capt. Miner, J. H. Laddy, Dr. John Galtenburgh, E. W. Kingland, Alhino Sue, wife and daughter, H. N. Carpenter, M. D. Mandly.

By this arrival we have received only one newspaper—the Nicaraguense, of the 27th September. There is but little of general interest in its columns, although one item—a few lines—filled us with inexpressible sadness, for it communicated the news of the death of one we have known long and well, and have ever regarded as a friend, true, tried and trusted—one of nature's noblemen in the best sense the term was ever used. Here is the item. It is as brief in words as it is melancholy in its comprehensiveness:

Collector of Customs.—Mr. J. W. Auston has been appointed Collector of Customs for the port of Granada, in place of Mr. Charles Callahan, so unfortunately killed at the fight of San Jacinto.

No particulars are given. We find confirmation of the sad event, however, in an advertisement of the Public Administrator, respecting claims against and debts due the estate of the lamented deceased.

The hour is late, and we are in no mood now to do justice to the memory of our deceased friend, Charles Callahan. In his untimely death the press of New Orleans has sustained a loss, the public have sustained a loss, and the cause of liberty in Central America has sustained a loss. Peace to his ashes and eternal rest to his soul.

In the Nicaraguense we find the following list of army promotions and appointments in the army:

Geo. W. Haller, appointed Second Lieutenant Co. D, Second Light Infantry.

First Lieutenant R. A. Johnstone, promoted Captain Co. A, First Rifles.

Second Lieutenant W. H. Matthews, promoted First Lieutenant Co. A, First Rifles.

Surgeon R. T. Royston, promoted Surgeon with rank of Major.

Charles A. Waters, appointed Captain Co. A, New York Volunteers.*

Chas. Ratkielewicz, appointed Captain Co. B, New York Volunteers.*

Lewis E. Grant, appointed Captain Co. C, New York Volunteers.*

Hiram Russell, appointed Captain Co. D, New York Volunteers.*

M. F. Nagle, appointed First Lieutenant Co. A, New York Volunteers.*

F. Lawton, appointed First Lieutenant Co. B, New York Volunteers.*

A. McK. Pittman, appointed First Lieutenant Co. C, New York Volunteers.*

A. Struller, appointed First Lieutenant Co. D, New York Volunteers.*

James S. Judge, appointed Second Lieutenant Co. A New York Volunteers.*

G. Von Hill, appointed Second Lieutenant Co. B, New York Volunteers.*

Wm. Northedge, appointed Second Lieutenant Co. C, New York Volunteers.*

Those marked with a (*) belong to the newly arrived recruits, and have not yet been assigned to any battalion.

Also the following resignations:

Capt. M. E. Bradley of the Isthmus Rangers has resigned.

Colonel John B. Markham resigned his position on the 20th September.

The steamship Virgin from New York, which arrived on the 22d ult., brought 205 recruits for Gen. Walker's army.

The Nicaraguense says:

Major Heiss, who went from this Republic some time since as bearer of dispatches from the American minister to his government, returned on the Virgin. He is in good health, and reports most favorably of our prospects in the east. The Rev. Israel S. Diehl, also came passenger on the steamer, and will remain in this State until the next steamer from California.

On the 25th ult., the Pioneer Theater was opened in Granada. The Nicaraguense, which by the way, is an ably edited and very interesting paper, speaks in high terms of the performances. The editor thus sets forth one of the prominent characteristics of the Anglo-Saxon race:

The most peculiar feature of the occasion was the trait it brought out in the American people. Thursday was an exciting day in the city, as reports were abroad that the enemy was already at Nindiri, seventeen miles from town, and a fight was expected at Massaya in the morning. But few could doubt these reports, and every preparation was made to send out reinforcements if any advantages were lost by our forces at Massaya. Despite all these circumstances, calculated to inspire every one with serious thought, a theater was organized, and the eager throng poured into it as if no apprehensions were felt in the garrison. It was the same, too, last October, when our forces attacked Fort San Carlos. While the firing was going on, some one entered the saloon of the steamer, where a ball was in progress, and informed the dancers that the firing had commenced. "That's their business," said the dancers, and the ball went off within sound of the battle.

From the Nicaraguense we clip the following items, and will close our account for the present:

Coffee Crop.—A large number of the estates confiscated in the Rivas Department are known to have considerable groves of coffee trees on them; but we are told that for the past two years, owing to the unsettled condition of the State, the coffee has not been gathered. At present the new crop is just beginning to ripen, and in a few weeks we shall see this market supplied with a good article of coffee of native growth. The coffee tree grows with but little cultivation, and blossoms in three years after being planted. A farm can be very easily extended by removing the plants which grow up round the roots of the first bearing tree, and one rancho we know of on which there is at present but one thousand trees, could in two years be made to grow fifty thousand. We have now no data on which to found an estimate of the quantity of coffee grown in this State; but we can safely say that Nicararagua, in two years, could be made to export the article.

Steamers.—The Lake steamer San Carlos, Capt. Errisson, arrived in this harbor last Monday. She left in a few hours for Virgin and returned again on the next day. The San Carlos is one of the most pleasant boats to travel on we have ever encountered, and her officers deserve the greatest credit for the cleanliness observable in everything on board.

Arrival of Coffee.—For a week or two this market has been almost without coffee, and the price rose as high as thirty-five cents per pound. A schooner arrived in San Juan last Monday with a large quantity on board, which will supply the want and reduce the price.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival on Saturday morning of the steamship Louisiana, we have received papers from Galveston to the 16th, and from the interior as late as due. We clip the annexed items from the Galveston News of the 16th instant:

From all accounts, the pecan crop this season will be equal if not greater than the yield of 1852. The exports of this crop the above year was enormous.

The rains mentioned in our last report have continued, accompanied by stormy weather, until the 14th, when the wind shifted to the North, and the temperature has been very low since. From the interior, we hear that similar weather prevailed, and roads had become impassable in the coast counties. Some damage had also been done to quantity and quality of cotton. There is much complaint that cotton has commenced sprouting anew, which prevents half-grown bolls from maturing, and picking made very poor progress for the past two weeks.

San Antonio Items.—The Ledger of the 11th has the following:

We are informed that several Indians were seen in Medina county last week, and that a skirmish took place between them and a small body of military, in which some of the former were wounded and had a number of horses taken from them.

Several horses and mules were stolen from Mr. Truehart's ranch, and the neighborhood, a few miles from here, on Thursday of last week. Suspicion having fallen on some parties who were seen in the vicinity that day, pursuit was made and a trail leading to the Rio Grande was found. It is to be hoped that the thieves may be overtaken and the stolen animals recaptured.

Since our last we have had several wet days in succession. Quite a large quantity of rain has fallen, and the result cannot fail to be most beneficial to the pasturage. We are happy to say that the health of the city is good.

The Texan, of the 0th, says:

Several Indians were seen in Medina county last week and were pursued by a small company of soldiers; they were overtaken, a large number of horses taken from them, and it is thought that several of the red-skins were wounded during the melee.

Duel near Seguin.—The Austin State Times, of the 11th, says:

Wm. Autrey, known as "Dock Autrey," and William Carson, fought a duel eight miles below Seguin last Saturday. They used double-barreled shot guns and six shooters, and commenced at a hundred and twenty paces apart, and continued advancing and firing until within six or eight feet, when Carson was shot through with a six shooter ball and died in two hours. Autrey was not hurt, but some buck shot struck him upon the first fire, too much spent to do any injury, and a pistol shot passed through his vest and shirt, just missing the skin.

Autrey immediately left and was pursued by the sheriff of Guadalupe county, and overtaken sixty miles from Seguin and brought back. We learn that several others were implicated as seconds.

Destructive Fire at Powder-Horn.—We learn from the Lavaca Herald, of the 11th, that the limo and cement for the court-house at Powder Horn, about one thousand barrels, took fire by spontaneous combustion, and destroyed all save about fifty barrels; the loss cannot be less than $2,500.

We learn, says the Central Texian, that the engineers are now engaged in reviewing and locating the third section of the Houston railroad, which will extend it to or above the Navisoto.

Crops in Brazoria.—The Planter, of the 14th inst., says they have recently had more rain there than during all the balance of the year, and adds:

Our cotton planters of course have suffered somewhat, but the rains have been without the wind which usually accompanies these long storms, and the damage to cotton is very trifling in consequence.

Sugar planters have nothing to regret from the rain. It has been just what they needed. Cane is now growing very rapidly, and if the frosts will hold off, some very good rains may yet be grown.

Enterprise in Brazoria.—The Planter further says:

At a called meeting of the county commissioners on Thursday and Friday of last week, the following appropriations were made. It was voted for the county to subscribe the amount recommended by the Bellerille Convention, viz: $3,125, or one-fourth of the amount necessary to be subscribed by the Brazos Valley, in order to secure the appropriation by the legislature. They also voted to subscribe $1250 for cleaning out the Bernard, and $1,000 for Oyster Creek. There was also appropriated $15,000 for building a bridge over the Bernard, to cost about $4,000, the balance of the cost to be made up by private subscription.

Later from Mexico.

By the arrival at Mobile of the revenue cutter McClellan, from Vera Cruz, we are in possession of files of Mexican papers to the 4th inst.

We extract from the Mexican Extraordinary of that date, the following items:

The sales of church property are proceeding with spirit. Up to the 1st inst., they had amounted to five millions of dollars. Four pieces of unadjudicated property were sold on the 20th in the city of Mexico, at public auction. The prices obtained were much better than had been anticipated.

Gen. Almonte, Minister to the Court of St. James, left Mexico on the 26th for Vera Cruz, to take the next British packet for England.

The examples set in Tampico, Puebla, etc., appear to be insufficient for the reactionists in some parts of the country. It is reported that the Conservadores are at work in Guanajuato, Queretaro, San Luis Potosi and Michoacan to get up a revolution.

Custrejon was in arms against the Government in the vicinity of Huitzuco. The Comandante General of Cuernavaca and Morelos states in a communication to the Government that the revolution of Custrejon is a very insignificant affair, and has no hold upon the people.

Baron Muller, who is traveling through Mexico with the purpose of making scientific examinations into the notes of the distinguished Baron Humboldt, had arrived at the city of Mexico. He had been received with great attention.

A society of Catholic Irish have addressed a petition to the Government of Mexico, through one of its consuls in the United States, asking permission to establish themselves in the territory of Mexico.

Great discoveries of gold are reported in different parts of Mexico. That it abounds in the State of Guerrero to considerable quantities there can be no doubt, and in various other sections indications and even rich specimens of pure gold have been found. On and near the mountain of Zempoltepec rich specimens have been discovered. Dr. R. C. Anderson has left Mexico for the United States, for the purpose of obtaining assistance for the companies already established to work the mines.

An earthquake was felt in the city of Mexico on the 26th ult.

The President having been made acquainted with the destitution which prevails at the South, has ordered four hundred fanegas of corn to be distributed amongst the poor of Guerrero.

Serious Accident at Patterson, N.J.—An accident occurred on the evening of the 13th inst., at the Catholic Orphan Asylum in Patterson, which caused the most intense excitement. They were holding a fair at the Asylum, for the benefit of the orphans, and the principal room of the building was crowded to excess, when the floor suddenly gave way, precipitating the whole assembly into the basement beneath. Happily no lives were lost, but a large number were seriously injured.

Accidental Death of an Estimable Gentleman. The Savannah Georgian of the 16th inst. has the following account of the death of Capt. Oliver S. Burroughs, of Tallahassee, Fa. Mr. Burroughs was well known to several of the citizens of New Orleans:

With sincere regret we announce the death of the above named gentleman, at Bel-Air, near Tallahassee, Fa., on the evening of Saturday, 11th inst. He was accidentally shot by the discharge of his own gun, while hunting on Friday, the 10th. In crossing a small water course near Munson's Lake, in company with other gentlemen, both barrels of his gun exploded, the charges entering the lower part of his right arm near the socket, tearing off a part of the shoulder bone, and leaving the wadding and eight shot in the wound. He was very soon carried home, where he lingered until about 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, in possession of his faculties to the last.

The man who has a right to do as he pleases, generally pleases to do wrong.

THE IDEA OF THE LIVING BODY BEING THE RECEPTACLE OF GREEDY WORMS, is sickening; and yet six out of every ten children are more or less affected with them. Why should this be the case when there are volumes of testimony to prove that a few doses of will eradicate the disease? Parents, make a note of this established fact, and remember that the medicine is free from all deleterious substances.

IT IS NOT A DYE!

GREY HAIRED, Bald or persons afflicted with diseases of the hair or scalp, read the following, and judge of Mrs. S. A. Allen's world's Hair Restorer:

A splendid building has been erected, inferior to none in the United States in architectural beauty. The University has been a year and a half established in this place, and closed with two sessions of highly successful operations. The health of the students has been remarkable, no serious cases of sickness having occurred. It will be seen that Rev. R. H. Erwin, a gentleman of the highest reputation as a scholar and teacher, of Nashville, and formerly of Clarksville, has been added to the faculty. Professor Dessoto, a graduate of Centre College, Kentucky, and recently of New Orleans, most highly recommended, has arrived, and will be ready to enter upon his duties as Professor of Modern Languages at the opening of the session.

Ample arrangements have been made for the board of students in private families. For further information see Catalogue at this office, or apply by letter to any member of the Faculty or Board of Trustees at Florence. o1

COVINGTON FEMALE SEMINARY.

LOCATED at Covington, Tipton county, twelve miles North of Sharon Depot, on the Memphis and Ohio Railroad.—The fourth session of this Institution will commence on the first Monday in August, 1856.

The present session our school numbered 100 pupils. During the summer vacation we shall make arrangements for the ample and satisfactory accommodation of all who may favor us with their patronage. We can speak confidently that our school offers superior inducements to parents seeking a quiet healthful home for their daughters during their term of study.

The decided healthfulness of Covington is a fact attested by all who have known our village from its earliest settlement.—From the commencement of our school there has not a single death occurred among our pupils. Our location removes us from exposure to those epidemics which so frequently and so fearfully prevail in towns situated farther South or on the river.

Our retired situation and healthful population are of the character to restrain habits of extravagance, and furnish that freedom from excitement which is most essential to successful study.

The different denomination have stated services in town every Sabbath. Sabbath Schools are well attended and are within the reach of all. We promise every effort on our part to inculcate habits of pure morality, and a profound respect for the Bible and Religion. While we would leave to the parent and preacher the instruction of sectarian dogmas, we deem it our prerogative and duty, day by day, to testify to the value of experimental religion.

Any information in regard to the plan of study, method of instruction or general regulations of the school can be gained by addressing the subscriber at Covington, or the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to whom a package of catalogues will be sent.

EXPENSES.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, $8 per month.

Tuition in the English branches, $10 and $15 per session of five months. The usual charges will be made for music on piano or guitar and the ornamental branches.

The institution is furnished with a large and excellent collection of maps, charts, diagrams, globes, etc.

The grounds of the Seminary have been enlarged and the entire premises tastefully enclosed.

UNIFORM.

The Trustees and Principal at a meeting lately held, adopted a uniform for the following reasons:

1st. To secure economy in dress. It is impracticable to secure it otherwise.

2d. That young ladies are of diverse pecuniary conditions, as is but to be expected where such a number are thrown together, and this diversity is published in the world by the different styles and quality of dress on all public occasions.

3d. On public occasions we have often, as well as the young ladies, been mortified to hear this diversity remarked.

4th. Without a uniform, there being no rule in the article of dress, the region of whim and caprice is left boundless, and the fruitful source of unedifying these endlessly diverse fancies in every article, is burdensome and annoying in the extreme. For the above and other good reasons, we have adopted a uniform, and commend it to our patrons and the public. It must be regarded as a law of the institution.

SHAVING.

Is it true that this is an age of progress and reform? I will not pretend to decide whether it is distinguished as such, but will leave every observer to judge for himself according to his knowledge of facts, and his belief as to what constitutes true progress and true reform. Of this I am certain that, with the light of multifarious history streamig upon the scene, and with the advantage of facilo intercourse and rapid locomotion, it ought to be a progressive and improving age. It therefore becomes every man to hold himself in readiness to accept the invitations of Reason and Philanthrophy, whenever they beckon him away from the opinions and customs of the times. I do not mean that he should be wanting in respect, or even attachment to those opinions and customs, until it can be shown that they do not conserve or advance the highest good of the race; but whenever this can be shown, they should be given up without a single sigh of regret, or a fear of consequences. Many a reform is retarded and belated in its advent among men, because those who perceive its importance are afraid they will suffer in the estimation of others. Men do not dare to do right and leave the results to God. They fear to follow the example of Jesus Christ, whenever that example contravenes the notions and prejudices of the ago, lest they shock the nerves of the present generation. The consequence is that when a custom once becomes engrafted upon a society, no matter how ridiculous or absurd it may be—how frivolous its origin or by what expenditure of time and money and health it is supported, yet its removal is next to an impossibility. Men of influence and high positions are afraid to violate custom lest they compromise themselves with their constituents, and their constituency dare not do it lest they lose the approbation of their leaders. Preachers shrink from taking the initiative for fear they will wound some of the weaker brethren of the laity; and the laity do not venture to lead off lest they wound the hearts of the clergy. Thus it is that year after year society finds itself still in possession of habits and usages that are well understood to be, in themselves, foolish and unprofitable.

It may, perhaps, be thought that in so grave a connection as this the practice of shaving the face is not worth mentioning, but I propose to run the risk of that opinion, and to offer this practice as a just exemplification of the foregoing reflections.

When Louis XIII ascended the throne of France, all the world wore long beards; but Louis was a youthful monarch, who could not by any amount of cultivation raise a beard. His courtiers sympathised with him, and not wishing, by their own well furnished chins, to remind him of his want of manly appearance, they shaved their faces, and as far as possible converted themselves into beardless boys. Of course all of Paris followed suit, and other countries, in obedience to the mandates of fashion, took up the razor, wondering meanwhile at the strangeness of the freak. But the world perhaps might have recovered its manhood from this assault, had not Louis XIII been succeded by another unfledged sovereign Lonis XIV, who set anew for Paris and the rest of mankind the fashion of a beardless face.

Men had been afflicted with this mania two or three times before in the days of the Greeks and Romans, but had recovered from it. This time however, it seems difficult to cure. Generation after generation rises up to do homage to the memory of the two baby kings of France. Little did the royal lads suspect that centuries after they were gone the world would celebrate their puerility by daily desecrations of their manhood. Little did they suspect that in succeeding years hundreds of thousands of barbers would be continually employed in whittling down men's faces to an effeminate similitude of their own. Yet so it is! And now Christian reader, let me ask you is there any sense in this custom? It certainly does not contribute any thing to the impressiveness of the human countenance—on the contrary it greatly detracts from it. The board belongs to the face as truly as the eyebrows and lashes, and to take away the one mars the just expression as certainly as to take away the others. Moreover, a long beard is a comfort both in summer and winter, and is unquestionably promotive of health. Then why shave at all? Do you offer custom as the reason? I answer that custom is divided, and that even were it not, no principle is more plain than that whenever any practice is evil and only evil, it ought to be abandoned. Do you suggest that you are a minister of the gospel, or the editor of a religious paper, or some other church functionary, and that it would be out of character for you to lay aside the razor entirely and wear a long beard? I answer, Christ and the Apostles wore long beards, and custom aside, it cannot be any more out of character for you than it was for them. Do you say that it is a harmless custom, and as there is a great prejudice against "whiskers" and "moustaches," therefore good men ought not to wear them? I answer in the first place that this prejudice is fast giving way; that it is an unjust and unfounded caprice, and ought not to govern our conduct. In the second place I answer that it is by no means a harmless custom. That surely cannot be thought harmless which squanders time and money at wholesale to no good purpose. Think of the many precious morning hours that have been cruelly murdered by the merciless razor. There is our common friend the Rev. Dr. B., a gifted man, whose moments are diamonds to the church, spends half an hour every morning in shaving. He says that "every other day" would do very well, but he has a heavy beard, and when two days old it is doubly difficult to cut, so that what he loses in time he gains in comfort by attending to it every day. To provide himself with the warm water, to sharpen the razor, to make the lather, to shave off the beard, to wash his face and to put the implements in proper plight again, all together consume a full half hour.—And he is but one among hundreds of thousands of similar cases. The church and the world need these half hours and ought to have them. Again, there are multitudes of laboring men who find their own time too precious to be wasted in the profitless business of shaving, and they therefore defer it until the Lord's good Sabbath comes, and then they desecrate a holy hour in this unnecessary labor.

Besides all this, think of the immense number of barbers that throng the cities and towns and villages of the earth! They do no good. They are worse than useless to the world! Think too of the multitudes of men and the vast number and amount of capital employed in the manufacture and sale of razors, razor strops, shaving soap, shaving cream, etc. Sum up the whole and then add to it the suffering inflicted by dull razors and unskillful hands—the haggled cheeks and mangled chins and bleeding lips—the cutaneous diseases contracted at the filthy tonstrina, and all the train of incidental evils, and what a tax do you find imposed upon poor fashion-ridden humanity by this barber-ous practice!

Come brethren, let us all give it up together? Just at this time fashion seems to be in a propitious humor. Already she has revoked the long-standing decree that every grave and dignified gentleman must wear upon his head "a section of a stove-pipe;" and now we see the ministers of all denominations and even the Doctors of Divinity and the Bishops treating their venerable brows to a more genial and pleasant covering. Let us improve the favorable moment! Let us gather up the whole shaving apparatus, put it in the "stove-pipe-hat" and place them carefully away in the library to be handed down to posterity as unique memorials of the singular customs of the nineteenth century. For one I am determined I shall give up shaving, though my wife objects and exclaims ridiculous, and my neighbors call me queer. I hope to have your company, Mr. Editor, and yours, gentle reader, because I am your true friend.

SINGING AND GIVING.—A woman in Jamaica was very fond of going to missionary meetings and singing with great apparent zeal and fervor,

"Fly abroad thou mighty gospel!"

But whenever the plates went around for contributions she always sung with her eyes fixed upon the ceiling. On one occasion however, a negro touched her with the plate, and said, "Sissy, it no use for you to sing, 'Fly 'broad mighty gospel,' with your eyes fixed on the corner of the ceiling; it no use to sing 'Fly abroad' at all, unless you give something to make it 'fly.'"

CHURCH PROPERTY IN MEXICO.—The City of Mexico Extraordinary of the 11th inst., says that "the reported sales of property belonging to civil and ecclesiastical corporations, in conformity to the law of the 25th June, were, in the different States and Territories on the 4th inst., as follows:

District of Mexico	$15,922 41
State of Vera Cruz	8,068 75

There have now been adjudicated, continues the Extraordinary, 1,571 estates, and the law has proved to be one of the great realities of the times.

Education of Preachers' Children.

Much has been said and written on this subject; and various schemes have been devised, to secure an object so desirable; but, all have proved wholly or partially abortive. While in some of our schools measures have been taken to secure the tuition of children free of expense to the father, still, the heavier expense of board, has fallen upon some wholly unable to bear it; and hence the schools under our entire control, afford fewer advantages to our itinerant preachers, than to other persons.—These schools have been built up by the labor and care, and money, of the church, and in which the traveling preachers have borne a liberal share; and many, nay, well nigh all the contributions made by the church were based on the expectation, that the children of her ministers should receive an education in these halls of learning.—Those expectations have been disappointed. The preachers children (a very few excepted) have not been educated—and we have repeated our calls upon a generous public, until patience is exhausted and confidence utterly destroyed. They ask, what have you done with the funds already collected? and we point to huge piles of brick and mortar! They enquire, how many students in that Seminary? we answer, from one to two hundred! And what are the fees for tuition? These of course, vary according to the branches included in the course of study. Say from $20 to $180. Well, two hundred students at an average of $100 each, will give a revenue of $20,000. Now, how is this money disposed of? To pay the professors! Are not these professors members of the conference, receiving their appointments from the Bishop, and of course considered as traveling preachers? The principals are, and so are many of the professors and teachers. There you possess the means of educating your children, if you will "keep your rules, and do not mend them." Your rule says "the allowance of a traveling preacher, shall be $150, with the same amount for his wife, and so much for each child." Why then do you depart from your discipline and secure to one preacher a certain salary of from two to four thousand dollars, while he remains at home, giving attention to secular interests, shielded from all the privations and hardships of an itinerant life, while another is sent out upon the circuit, exposed to the vicissitude of seasons, denied the comforts of home and fireside, and deprived of all secular advantages, with the uncertain remuneration of $150 for himself, and the equally uncertain allowance for wife and children. Why not let a judicious committee assess for the teacher a reasonable allowance, as in the case of other preachers, who are agents or editors, and take the surplus revenue from the schools to pay the board of your children. This would equalize matters and place all the preachers on a level. But at present there is no equality. Some live at ease, increasing in wealth, wielding a powerful influence over the destinies of others who drudge in poverty.

The very position occupied as President of a College or High School, gives influence which is not possessed by others of equally ripe age and matured judgment occupying a different position. It is needless to urge that such men have a severe mental tax imposed upon them for which they should be compensated, because he who labors to supply the pulpit with interesting and profitable matter every day, has his mental energies taxed to their utmost capacity. And while he is denied the opportunity of pursuing any secular calling, and is estranged from the endearments of home and fireside, the teacher lives in the bosom of his family and attends to his farm or workshop. And so far as pastoral relation to the church is concerned, he performs none of its duties, and feels none of its responsibilities, but still has a voice in its councils. In view of the peculiarities of Methodism, this is certainly wrong. It is in that branch of the church to which we belong, the itinerant ministry be the only acknowledged pastorate, and it be our boast that to bar all temptation to mercenary spirits entering upon the ministry, we have placed the preacher's allowance at the lowest possible mark, why should exceptions be made in favor of preachers who belong to the Conference, to allow them to be local, free from the toils and privations of the regular itinerants, growing rich from the revenue of the schools, while they control the destinies of their more laborious and less honored brethren?

I have no objection to a preacher taking charge of a school, if he can do so consistently with his ordination vows, but I am opposed to a member of the traveling connexion taking such a position when it serves to produce such inequality, and the more so when the local ranks and laity of the church can furnish men fully as competent. Again, if the appointment of a preacher to the superintendence of a school give him the right to all the proceeds of the school, then surely the appointment to an editorial chair should secure to him all the proceeds of the press which he controls; for each is in his respective department by the same authority—the appointment of a Bishop. And surely it will not be said that an Editor has an easy berth, and is therefore entitled to no compensation. These thoughts have been hastily thrown together, designed merely to set others to thinking, and to call out those who are better able to elucidate this subject than the writer of this.

Trust in God.

BY REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON.

We once visited a town for the first time to preach—and did preach. On the same day and at the same hour, as we were informed, a Hicksite Quaker, as he was called, and also a stranger, preached on the same text—and that rather an unusual one. "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him." Here, we presume, the coincidences closed. It is likely that the Friend employed the passage in some kind of discrimination between God and Christ. To us there is no God but in Christ. We understand and apply the passage thus: "My soul, wait thou only upon God—in Christ; upon God as Christ; upon God—savingly and satisfactorily through Christ, "in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead, bodily." Wait thou only upon Him—"for my expectation is from him"—him alone the Christian's God, God in Christ. "Let not your heart be troubled"—said the Lord Jesus:—"Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Ye believe in God, but that is not enough—ye must also believe in Me! Ye are Jews already; but that is not enough—ye must now become Christians! The world is full of trouble. If ye would keep your hearts free from it, or superior to it, ye must turn to Me; as the very embodiment of the Father, seeking your redemption, not only from trouble, but also, primarily and especially from the sin which causes trouble. I was in the form of God.—I thought it not robbery to be equal with God. But, seeing your sin and trouble, and knowing that you needed a visible, audible, brotherly God, I made myself of no reputation—emptied myself of the joys of heaven that I might be filled with the sorrows of earth. For your sakes I took upon me the form of servant. For your sakes I was found and am still found in fashion as a man. For your sakes, I humbled myself still further, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. I was in all points tempted as ye are, yet without sin. Though holy, harmless and undefiled, separate from sinners and made higher than the heavens. I am your sympathetic High-Priest still, full of memories of my low estate, and touched with a feeling of all your infirmities. I do not wonder at your doubts, at your fears, at your griefs.—How can I? Heaven is so different from earth—how can I wonder? Nay, verily ye have reason for trouble.—What a world you inhabit! What a contrast to what I intended it to be!—How full of sin, of sorrow and of death! And how long it has been so! What a mournful history! And your present condition—without Me, how helpless! And your future prospects without Me, how helpless! But—let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In Me, there is hope.—As surely as the Father is behind the veil, the Son is before the veil. I have come forth from the Holy of Holies. I have examined the Holy Place. I have traversed all the courts. I have gone out into the city. I have wandered through all the land. I have surveyed the whole world. I have made myself as one of the people. I have ate with them, drank with them, worked with them, rested with them, walked with them, talked with them, rejoiced with them, suffered with them, wept with them, groaned with them, bled, died, and been buried, revived and ascended from them, and now—from the Throne of my Grace and Glory—I say to all again: "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."

What do you want? Character?—You shall have it!

What do you want? Position? You shall have it!

What do you want?... Support? You shall have it!

What do you want? Usefulness?—You shall have it!

What do you want? Happiness?—You shall have it!

What do you want? Heaven! You shall have it!

Believe in Me! I made the world, and I will re-make it. The time is coming. The time is at hand. Vain is all human power. Wisdom, knowledge, genius, skill, art, wealth whether of persons or societies; States, churches, governments, administrations, enterprises, all are nothing, and less than nothing, all vanity in comparison with the work which has to be wrought.—But—not so with Me! I speak and it is done; I command and it stands fast! Behold! I make all things new! The hour—that is all—the hour is not wait, only wait. Say each to his soul, "My soul, wait you only upon God," upon God in Christ, upon the appointed and adequate Saviour and restorer—"for my expectation is from him;" and this "expectation shall not be cut off."

Surely there is nothing like it!

If He say—"Arise, let us go hence!" let us follow Him gladly.

If He say—"Stand still, and see the salvation of God"—let us stand patiently.

"Revellings."

In that catalogue of the works of the flesh, of which the apostle says, "They that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God," we find REVELLINGS, and that placed in near proximity to murder and drunkenness. But what are revellings? What did the mind of the spirit intend to express by them.—The English word imparts,—feasting with clamorous merriment. The Greek is more specific,—imparting a particular kind of revelry. It is as specific as is our word, ball, and expresses what comes as near to it, as two such things could come in states of society, so different. In Greek uso, the word komos, imported a revel by night, attended with dances and festive processions, conducted with invocations of merriment. See now how many things exist in common, between the modern ball and the ancient komos, or revel. In both, the revel must be by night; it must include the use of intoxicating drinks; it usually includes games; the stimulants of music are indispensable to both. Both include dances, or marches, and both demand the concurrences of females. So, the idea of the Greek revel and the modern ball fit each other with remarkable exactness. The word komos is of the same family with that which imports a village. And it may have grown from the fact of its being a collection of the young men of a whole village. And in that sense of the word public, it must import public revelry. And, in a very similar sense, our word ball, imports revelry. It is most often what may be called a village dance. In short, the Greek word komos, and our word ball, fit each other so far as to have, in common, all the elements which can give a vicious character to the amusement; so that if the one was a work of the flesh, inconsistent with salvation, the other must be. If we were to search in the Greek language for the most fit word to render our word ball into Greek, we could find none more pertinent than the word komos, and vice versa. The Greek word choreia, specially appropriated for dancing, expresses only one action of the ball, while this embraces essentially the whole. And if the sacred writer had had his eye on just this thing which we call a ball komos, hero rendered revelling, must have been his word to express it.

So we are justified in applying this word to the public dances or reveling, which go under the name of balls; and so including them among the works of the flesh, and saying they that do such things cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. This kind of reveling is more than once put by the sacred writers in the worst of company. Another Apostle says: "For the time past of our life may suffice to have worked the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries." Now the dancer must show that this is not the meaning of the word, or see that the Bible has put the ban upon his favorite amusement.—[Puritan Recorder.

AN INDEPENDENT WOMAN.—There is now living upon Bate's Island, in Casco Bay, off the coast of Maine, a woman of great hardihood. The island contains about five acres, the largest portion of which she has put under cultivation, raising handsome crops of potatoes and other vegetables yearly. The land never was ploughed, but has been thoroughly hoed over by her. The remaining portion she devotes to raising hay of a very superior quality, every crop of which she has mowed and cured with her own hand. The early part of the day she devotes to fishing, going through the breakers in a light skiff, rowing single-handed where many a strong man would hesitate. The results of her day's fielding she exchanges for money and groceries with dealers who visit the island from Portland.

LATER FROM HAVANA, CALIFORNIA, OREGON AND WASHINGTON TERRITORIES, SANDWICH ISLANDS, etc., etc.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP EMPIRE CITY.

Lator from Havana.

The steamship Empire City, from New York via Havana, arrived here Tuesday afternoon, bringing the U. S. mails from California and a large number of passengers and heavy freight.

Purser C. H. Denison, of the Empire City, has kindly furnished us with the following memoranda:

The Empire City, Capt. A. G. Gray, left New York on the 17th October, at 2 P. M., with ninety-seven passengers for Havana, and one hundred and fifteen for New Orleans, and anchored that evening under Sandy Hook, a heavy gale blowing outside from the south-east.

Proceeded to sea the next morning at 9 A. M., and arrived at Havana at sunrise on the 24th. Landed the Havana passengers and remained awaiting the arrival of the steamship Granada, which vessel entered the harbor at 10 A. M. the following morning, bringing the California mails and fifty-one passengers from San Francisco, Oct. 5, per Pacific mail steamship Golden Gate, which latter vessel arrived at Panama on the morning of the 20th, after a boisterous passage, bringing three hundred and eighty passengers and $2,153,000 in specie.

The Granada left Aspinwall for Havana on the 20th, at midnight, and in addition to the above brought to Havana eighty-six lamas for the Cuban authorities, under the charge of a French naturalist, Mr. Rohn; four others died on the passage. This is the first successful importation of these animals, (used in Peru as beasts of burthen,) into the Island, and it is believed entitles the gentleman in charge to a considerable reward offered by the authorities to the first who should succeed in their introduction.

Capt. Griffin was informed by Mr. Rohn that a party of Americans, en route to Quito, were waylaid by the Indians in the mountains between that city and Guayaquil, and robbed by them and left entirely destitute. They were doubtless Prof. Silliman's scientific party—co-laborers with Prof. Moore and Dr. Francis—who recently left New Orleans for that quarter on a tour of exploration.

The Empire City having received her passengers from the Granada, and thirteen others from Havana, after a transfer of captains between the two ships, left at 5 P. M. for New Orleans, under the command of Capt. S. P. Griffin, and arrived off the bar at 1 A. M., Tuesday morning.

By this arrival we have Havana papers to the 25th inst., which contain nothing of interest.

Later from the Isthmus.

DIFFICULTIES ANTICIPATED.—By the arrival of the Empire City, we have also received papers from Aspinwall as late as the 20th inst.

The Aspinwall Courier of that date has the following resume of the state of affairs on the Isthmus:

It appears, from our information from Panama and the Isthmus, that if a second bloody riot has not already taken place there, it may be expected at any day. It seems that parties are divided on grounds of color; that the whites outnumber and consequently outvote the blacks; and that the latter appeal from the ballot-box to the machette and revalvar. On the 15th ult. there would have been a riot and much bloodshed but for the United States Marines who pulled to the water line, and lay there in their boats, ready to interfere in case of disturbance.

At the time the steamer left Navy Bay, a rumor was current that blood had begun to flow at Panama. Our information, which is derived from several trustworthy sources, leads us to conclude that no reliance whatever can be placed either in the will or in the power of the Government of Panama, or of New Granada.

We are satisfied, therefore, that the lives and property of our fellow-countrymen who cross the Isthmus four times a month, are in the most imminent peril; and we believe that useless measures are taken to inaugurate a new order of things at Panama, the trade of the world will receive a notable check, and the interests of the whole Pacific be seriously injured.

Our government, after the occurrences of April, stationed vessels at either end of the railway to overawe the negro mob. At the time there was reason to believe that this precaution would have sufficed. We are now convinced that it will not. We have every reason to believe that a settled purpose exists among the half-breeds and negroes of Panama to inflict some severe injury on our people in revenge for supposed wrongs, and also to plunder the specie express on the first convenient opportunity. There is no ground for hoping that the deed will be attempted in an awkward or foolish or hopeless manner. On the contrary, it is likely that it will be performed with cunning and executed with bloodthirsty daring. The train will not be attacked under the guns of the frigates. But a few rails may be torn up at some twenty miles from [illegible], and in the confusion created by the sudden stoppage of the train, the specie car may be robbed, and an indiscriminate massacre at least commenced. In such a case our vessels of war would be utterly useless; they would not know of the mischief until it was past remedy, and we should have no other consolation than a sterile vengeance.

Under circumstances we revert to our original sentiment—which concurs in some respects with Mr. Corwine's report—that the Isthmus should, for the present be occupied by United States troops in the interest of the commerce of the world. When we last made this suggestion it aroused quite a clamor among various organs of opinion in Europe; it was viewed as a step towards the annexation of New Granada to the United States. * * * * *

But whether foreigners like it or not, it seems that it will have to be done. We cannot go on, risking five hundred valuable lives and a million and a half of treasury every week, either to satisfy the dignity of the imbecile Spaniards and ruffian negroes of Panama, or to defer to the jealous alarm of Europe. * * *

We see no reason why the United States should not garrison Panama, Aspinwall and the line of road; and we see many reasons why, if the precaution is neglected, we may hereafter rue the neglect.

The same paper says that Sr. Mariano Ospina is probably elected President of the Republic. He is an advocate of the Union of the Church and State, and owes his election to the influence of the Church.

Charles W. Ahy, 2d Lieutenant of the U. S. ship of war Saratoga, died of fever at Aspinwall on the 16th inst., after a few days illness. He was buried with military honors.

Later from California.

By the arrival of the steamship Empire City from Havana yesterday afternoon, we have received full California mails with dates up to the 6th inst., from San Francisco. They contain very little of an important nature.

We extract the following from the summary of the fortnight's news contained in the steamer edition of the Alta California:

THE STATE.—Since the sailing of the last steamer rains have fallen in various portions of the mining region.

About 15,000 head of cattle are recruiting in Carson Valley. These have all come across the plains this year, and it is estimated that 25,000 persons and 30,000 head of cattle will arrive during the season.

Three plants of green tea, from the seed last spring, are now in blossom at Santa Cruz, and about a foot high.

The total amount of treasure shipped from California, during the month of September, was $4,570,371 18.

Dr. John Marsh, for twenty-five years a resident of California, was found murdered a few days since, on his farm, near Martinez. A Mexican has been arrested, charged with the commission of the deed.

About $100,000 are being expended in Grass Valley, in the erection of quartz mills.

It is said that $10,000,000 a year is derived from the sale of water, for mining purposes, in Mariposa county.

A. H. Cohen, late receiver of Adams & Co., has been discharged from confinement by order of the Supreme Court.

Madam Lola Montez has been drawing crowded houses at Sacramento. It is understood she is about retiring from the stage.

THE CITY.—San Francisco is still reposing, but there are indications of an approaching restlessness, which will probably culminate at or about election day.

The Police Court has a constantly increasing docket, and some of the cases are of a shocking nature.

The streets are nightly becoming more noisy, and we believe that many are delighted with the adjournment of the Vigilance Committee.

It is thought that those who were frightened into the interior, and were always known for rowdyism, are all returning to again disturb and offend.

On the 23d a vessel was drawn up the United States marine railway, at Mare Island, to test the work. The experiment was perfectly satisfactory.

On the 20th a son was born to Mrs. Julia Dean Hayne, the celebrated actress. She will play another engagement at the Metropolitan Theater during October.

The schooner Curlew left this port on the 19th without her clearance papers. She was reported as having merchandise and passengers. After her departure the revenue cutter William L. Marcy was sent in pursuit, but could not overtake the absconding craft. She has very likely "gone to join Walker."

On the 22d a fleet of six clipper ships arrived from eastern ports; since then several others have come in, and the whole have occasioned great activity on the docks.

It is estimated that, since the 22d, merchandise to the value of three millions of dollars has reached this port.

On the 28th, a large cargo of nitrate of soda arrived from Iquique, for the U. S. Branch Mint, which has, for the want of this article, been but partially in operation for several weeks.

The steamer John L. Stephens, from Panama, arrived on the 29th. Below Monterey, during a heavy fog, she run down the schooner Francis Skiddy, of 179 tons, and the captain, Hugh Robertson, was drowned.

Senator Weller's course in regard to the Committee of Vigilance has subjected him to such pointed censure both from the press and the people, that he has thought it best to be a very humble individual.

Some how it happens that our public officers returning from abroad are not met with the slightest demonstration of welcome.

Ex-Governor John McDougal, who came by the last steamer, was arrested by a Constable for illegal voting in San Mateo county. He gave bail, and was very indignant.

People laughed heartily when they heard that the President and Secretary of War were belligerent and inclined to shoot into San Francisco. They had better not.

Tomorrow, 7th of October, all the fixtures in the Vigilance Committee Rooms, except the Executive Chamber, will be sold at auction.

City political matters are pretty much as they were at the sailing of the last steamer. The local nominations have not been completed.

The condition of business exhibits but little activity, yet there is no general complaint in the market. There have been some large sales of real estate, and rents hold to a high standard. Improvements of an elegant and substantial kind are going rapidly forward.

The British ship-of-the-line Monarch is now in the harbor. She arrived on the 3d from Vancouver's Island, and has over 700 marines aboard. She left the United States steamer Massachusetts in the Straits of Fuca, all well on board.

The health of the city is excellent; the Coroner has little labor to perform, and there is cheerfulness and gaiety in society.

Great quantities of grapes are brought every week from the Southern Coast, and from Oregon we have the finest and largest varieties of apples and pears. They sell for 50 and 75 cents each.

From the steamer edition of the San Francisco Bulletin, we extract the following items of city news:

On Monday, September 22d, six clipper ships with cargoes of assorted merchandise, arrived in port from New York and Boston. Two clipper ships also arrived the next day, besides other vessels from other quarters. There has consequently been considerable briskness about the wharves and warehouses. Business seems to be reviving. On the evening the National Circus opened at the Metropolitan Theater, which has temporarily been converted into a hippodrome, and been used as such during the fortnight.

On Tuesday, September 30th, the United States Circuit Court commenced the trial of Richard P. Hammond, Ex-Collector of the port of San Francisco, who had been indicted for embezzlement of public monies. The jury failed to agree, eight being for conviction and four for acquittal.

The John Adams, Commander Bostwell, had arrived at Honolulu, officers and hands all well.

Quite an extensive lumber trade has sprung up between Puget Sound and the Islands. A hazy atmosphere prevailed at Honolulu, indicative of volcanic action. A comfortable building had been completed for a sailor's home.

The first whaler of the season, the American ship Zenas Coffin, Capt. Rose, arrived on the 9th August, full and bound home. She is from the Kodiac grounds, and brings favorable news from the vessels left there. She arrives much earlier than usual.

Later from Oregon.

The San Francisco Alta Californian, of the 6th inst., has the following intelligence from these Territories:

Governor Stevens was at last accounts in the Walla-Walla country, endeavoring to treat with the Indians, but only the Nez Perzes showed a willingness to come to the council.

From the general demeanor of the savages, there does not seem to be a very good prospect of a speedy peace.

A telegraph is being constructed from Portland to Carvallis.

A woolen factory is being erected at Salem, and the growing of this staple is likely soon to be greatly increased in the Territory.

Capt. Bowman, of the U. S. A., had become insane, and escaped from his friends while they were taking him to the Dalles. His body was afterwards found nearly consumed by wild beasts.

Reliable information had been received from the Colville mines, stating that additional gold discoveries had been made; on the strength of which many were going in from the north to try their luck in those diggings.

The latest intelligence from Gov. Stevens was to the effect that he had held an interview with nearly all the hostile chiefs, that they were more friendly and disposed to enter into a general treaty of peace.

The manufacture of wool and the making of salt have both been commenced with good prospect of success.

Washington Territory.

The Indians about Puget Sound are quiet, but fears were entertained that they would become troublesome when the crops have matured.

The U. S. steamer Massachusetts was at Seattle, September 17th.

The hostile Indians who had come to Fort Steilacoom, had been sent to the reservation.

During the first part of September, the days had been clear and pleasant, with cool and frosty nights.

By the arrival of the British ship Monarch, on the 2d, we learn that among the Indians at Vancouver's there was a great hostility toward the whites.

The trouble was occasioned by the arrest, trial and execution of an Indian who had murdered another, in order to possess himself of a fascinating squaw.

Sandwich Islands, Australia and China.

By the arrival of the California mails, we have intelligence from the above named countries, the most important items of which we give below:

A steam-tug boat has been launched at Honolulu, named the "Pele."

The Steam Flour Mill Company have bought 3,215 bushels of wheat, in Maui, this season, and sent it to Oahu, at $1 per bushel. The flour made from it is said to be fine, white and sweet, and sells for $12 per barrel. The producers of Makawao and Koha will receive $12,000 this season for their wheat; and if the weather is favorable, and they manage well, they will receive more than double that sum next year. The culture of this cereal, it is urged, should be extended, as affording a kind of labor well adapted to the inhabitants, and likely to pay those engaged in it a large profit.

Australia.

Additional discoveries of gold continue to be made, and the business of gold digging appears to be everywhere remunerative, though not so much so as in California, at least so we should judge by comparing what is given in the papers as a fair average of the rates of wages paid in Australia, and what we know to be paid in this State for the same kind of service.

There is much said about devising some method for checking the large influx of Chinese into the Colonies.

Flour had improved, fine being worth £24 per ton; seconds, £22; wheat, 8s. 9d. per bushel.

China.

So far as anything definite can be learned in regard to the rebellion, success seems rather to incline to the side of the insurgents; but the whole country is in a miserable condition, with no very flattering prospect of early improvement; in fact, universal anarchy threatens to overrun the entire land, and become a permanent condition of the people, unless some new element shall be diffused into their affairs calculated to bring existing troubles to a decisive termination.

Notwithstanding internal disorders, the exports of tea for the past year are largely in excess of the preceding one.

In view of the disturbed state of affairs, the British population had petitioned Admiral Seymour for adequate protection, and had received assurance that they should be suitably defended from the attacks of the contending factions.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 1.

GOING OUT AND COMING IN.

The steamship Tennessee left Monday morning at 9 o'clock, with about 250 Walker men and over a dozen ladies. They will create a sensation when they march into the Plaza at Granada a week hence. Over a thousand persons were at the wharf to see them off on their adventurous way, among whom we noticed many prominent friends of the cause. All were in fine spirits. The passage expenses were paid by the Nicaraguan government.

In the course of the same day our population had an accession of immigrants—so that we closed the day with an advance in the census, notwithstanding the morning's drain of emigrants. There arrived at this port 1,059 immigrants, all Germans, of which the ship H. D. Wetzen, from Bremen, brought 418; ship O'Thyen, from do., brought 238; bark Stella, from do. brought 284, and ship Oregon, from Havre, 14.

THE PROBLEM SOLVED!

Zion's Herald (September 3d) has an editorial, formal, studied, and deliberate—the honestest thing we have yet seen on that side of the vexed question. The Gordian knot of emancipation is not untied, but cut. The editor goes in for amalgamation of schools, churches, society and blood. "Color," he says, is a "simple circumstance." Disband all colored churches, schools, etc. They originate "in a false sentiment of benevolence" and perpetuate "an odious distinction between the races."

We let him speak for himself:

"Let the colored youth by the aid of that charity be placed in our colleges amid our own children.—They need the intellectual energies of the Saxon mind—they need assimilate the spirit of culture and to become intwrought into the woof of our best society.

Such is the course we pursue with all other nations; the only course in accordance with the spirit of Christianity and the genius of our republican institutions. The German, French, Irish emigrants, so far as they understand our language, we endeavor to mould in these schools of democracy, and their children as a result melt away amid our population. Color, except these or four generations more of slavery shall bleach it all out, might still maintain a black line between the races; but obliterate all the other distinctions and this would be little noticed—would fade after a few generations to a mere imaginary line."

Will our Boston brother lead off the ball? Practice speaks louder than precept.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.—We had the pleasure yesterday, says the Jackson Times, of paying a visit to this flourishing Institution, north of this town. It commands a fine view of the surrounding country. The centre building when completed will add greatly to that already extensive Institution. The studies were resumed on Monday, the 6th inst., and we are prond to say that its pupils number already near two hundred, and still they are coming from every quarter.

BISHOP H. U. ONDERDONK.—The Episcopal Convention, in their late Session at Philadelphia, remitted, by a very decided majority, the sentence imposed twelve years ago on Bishop H. U. Onderdonk, of Pennsylvania, which suspended him from all clerical functions. The remission of his sentence will restore him to his ministerial functions, but not to his Bishopric, which is now filled by Bishop Potter.

TONGUE OF FIRE.—We are glad that our General Editor chalked down this book, and the Agents have brought out a neat and cheap edition of it. It is one of the moral forces of the times.

REV. F. M. GRACE has accepted the appointment of Principal of the Conference Female Institute, Talladega, Ala., subject to the appointment of the Bishop. It is an important educational interest there—and a more judicious selection than that of Mr. G. is not within our knowledge. It is the only educational institution under Methodist patronage and control, in a District which numbers 6,000 white members. It must prosper.

The Rev. R. M. Crawford has accepted the Professorship of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy in the University of Mississippi, and will enter upon its duties during the present month.

THE FORCE OF EXAMPLE.—No man can measure the amount of injury which has been inflicted upon the morals of the country by those disgraceful quarrels at Washington, during the sessions of Congress. The spirit of duelling which had almost died out even among the most hot headed of the South, has revived with three-fold vigor throughout the length and breath of the land. It pervades all classes and races. As an instance proving this fact, we copy the following paragraph from a California paper:

Two Digger Indians fought a duel, a few days since, at Volcano, with bows and arrows; both were slightly wounded.

Shade of Sir Josiah Harrington! Digger Indians on the field of honor! Has the code become so common that it is understood by these Hinds upon humanity? We should not be surprised if we should next hear that Ossang-Outangs were taking a bout with small swords.

THOUGHTS ABOUT PREACHING.

THE UNSEEN HEARERS.

Chrysostom, speaking on the composition of a sermon, says, as in a reverie: "I had a vision: I thought I saw the communion-rails crowded with angels listening to the sermon. When a man speaks as in the sight of God, with an open heaven—with Christ and angels before him—he catches the true prophetic fire; he offers a present salvation, from a present Saviour; the Spirit of glory and grace descends, and the flame communicants to his auditory, and accompanies them to their houses."

APPLICATION NEEDED.

Bishop Andrew, in a communication to the Nashville Advocate, has some very pertinent remarks on homo preaching. We give a paragraph: "The great truths by which men are saved are few, and it is on the proper, affectionate, earnest, patient, and reiterated application of these that the preacher must depend for the success of his work. We want, in short, the constant and earnest application of home truths.—This is the sort of preaching for the times; and the only sort that will be effectual in saving this untoward generation. Men must not only have the truth explained clearly and forcibly, but it must also be applied. We want a good deal of 'Thou art the man' sort of preaching. Men will hear you very patiently while you paint sin and sinners in general terms, but when you bring it home to them—when you take the candle of truth and begin to search in every nook and corner of the sinner's life—when you drag out into open daylight all his abominations, and show him his vileness, and tear away all his refuges of lies, and leave him no alternative but repentance or damnation, do not marvel if he resents it; you may look for it, for you have taken away his gods, and what has he left on which to lean? He may be angry—he may hate you, and curse you: do not regard it—rather take courage; it shows that truth is at work. Follow up your attacks, and never rest till the citadel is carried, and you can rejoice over another trophy to the power of saving grace."

POINTED ILLUSTRATIONS.

In one of the battles of Philip, King of Macedon, an arrow struck his eye and put it out. He picked it up and found it inscribed with the words: 'To Philip's eye.' An archer whose aim was so sure that he could mark his arrows with their destination with a certainity that they would reach it, had aimed it at the eye of the King, and his arrow had reached its point. Such should be the certain aim of the ministers of Christ. There are arrows in the quiver of the Almighty for every class of our race. The minister of the gospel should select and send them to their destination with the precision of the archer to the King's eye. When the bold blasphemer enters the house of God, a pointed arrow should reach him, dipt in the spirit of rebuke from the Almighty. So when the humblo penitent enters the sanctuary seeking peace, an arrow should be ready prepared by God's mercy, and dipt in the blood of Christ.

TOO MUCH CONCENTRATION.

In preparing for the pulpit the minister is tempted to desire that his sermon should be a good one, rather than that it should bring sinners to Christ. The artistic finish and arrangement may too much fill his eye, and souls be sacrificed to the subject in hand. "It is always in order to save a soul," says Manvers: Even by making a clincher on the conscience before the peroration is reached. The thought may not be in the sketch—or the skeleton may not call for the telling appeal just there. But it is always in order to make a saving point and leave the plan to save the man.

"The idea of skeletonizing," says Stevens, "and thus of methodizing and concentrating a discourse, may be good enough in some special, polemical, or otherwise difficult cases. But in a popular discourse there may be too much concentration; it would ruin all the excellence of social conversation to restrict it to the severe rules of literary criticism, such as are applicable to a book or printed essay, for instance; digression, expansion, repetition, even, are real excellences in conversation; they give it that modulation, emphasis, brevity, and ease which form the very idiomatic felicities of colloquial style. Preaching though requiring a somewhat different style, is perverted to the opposite extreme. An aged Lutheran minister frequently went to hear Mr. Bramwell preach, when the latter was stationed at Hull, England. A friend one day said to him: "Mr. Tribner, how do you like Mr. Bramwell's preaching?" and possibly anticipating an objection, added, "does he not wander from his subject?" "Yes," replied the venerable old man, "he does wander most delightfully from the subject to the heart."

PRETTY SERMONS.

Robert Hall said: "I like to see a pretty child, pretty flowor, but in a sermon prettiness is out of place. To my ear it would be anything but commendable, should it be said to me, 'You have given us a pretty sermon.' If I were upon trial for life, and my advocate should amuse the jury with his tropes and figures, burying his argument beneath a profusion of flowers of rhetoric, I would say to him, 'Tut, man, you care more for your vanity than for my hanging. Put yourself in my place, speak in view of the gallows, and you will tell your story plainly and earnestly.' I have no objections to a lady's winding a sword with ribbons, and studding it with roses, when she presents it to her hero lover; but in the day of battle he will tear away the ornaments, and use the naked edge against the enemy."

The Bond of Union.

DONT COME ANY CLOSER!

The Northern Methodists feel evidently elated at their "relations," with English Methodists. They are not a little snobbish about it. We, of the Church, South, (so they publish abroad,) are not "recognized" by Brother Bull. They are! Much good may their "relations" do them. Southerners are not adepts at ecclesiastical flunkyism. Our friends get cold cuts occasionally, but persevero in their "relations."

Rev. Mr. Arthur, had the D. D., conferred by Dickenson College, Pa. The English brother declines the honor, and in reply to one who addressed him as Doctor, on the strength of the Dickenson Diploma curtly said—"I am no doctor."

The correspondent of Zion's Herald, "Another Englishman" tells us that the reports carried back by Drs. Hannah and Jobson were very flattering to American Methodism (North.) But hear, hear:

"Our Conference was so carried away along the tide of enthusiasm, in favor of America, and especially American Methodism, that Dr. Bunting felt it necessary to say, that while thankful for the bond of union which existed between British and American Methodism, he did not wish to draw it any closer.—He did not admire everything in American Methodism—the insinuations of some of their American brethren against the Methodist class-meeting, and their lame apologies for slavery."

Will they pocket that and go on boasting of their "relations", with the kin abroad, while the Church, South, is not recognized? They are welcome.

"Dont wish the bond of Union drawn any closer"—says Jabez Bunting—the Nestor of the body. Stand right there American brethren—you are close enough!

Dayton Camp-Meeting.

DAYTON, Ala. October 15, 1856.

Our camp-meeting near this place commenced on the 3d inst. and closed on the 13th. We were blessed with fine weather, good attendance and ample accommodations. But better than all, the presence of the Lord was among his people, and many of them were wonderfully blessed and built up in the faith. There were about forty converts among the whites, and a few professed the blessing of sanctification. There were some converts also among the negroes, who had preaching separate from the whites at a place prepared for them.

We took up our missionary collection on the second Sunday of our meeting, and received in good subscription and cash $644,65, and turned over to the preachers of different charges around, all subscribed by their members. In this station we expect fully to meet our part of the $30,000, which we hope to see forthcoming at Conference; and also our full proportion of the Conference collection.

Rev. C. C. Calloway, agent for the Southern University, was with us, preaching in the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost. He secured during the meeting, in good notes, about $9,000 for the College. Let me here thank him and other good brethren who so faithfully preached to our people. This Brother M'c. was a good meeting. Don't you wish you had come?

Yours truly, JOSHUA T. HEARD.

Linden Camp Meeting.

Bro. McTyeire: Since I wrote you last, our Linden Camp Meeting has come off, at which about thirty-five souls were converted, and about as many joined the church. We had a gracious time; and hope the ground will over be consecrated to the Lord. I should have stated in my former notice of the new appointment taken in, where so much good was effected, that much of the result of that meeting is to be attributed to the efficient labors of Bro. J. B. Stanford, a local preacher on this work. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

The year is nearly at a close, and I can say, notwithstanding it has been one of severe and trying affliction to myself and family, the Lord has been with us, and sustained us thus far. I have attended to some of our collections and report as follows: For the missionary cause, $425,00. Conference Collections, $90, (our apportionment.) Ministerial aid Society, over $20. And I presume the most, if not all the circuit claims will be met, by the the close of the Conference year.

If Bro. A. V. LeVert knew Linden Circuit as well as I know Pickens Circuit, he would think, I have no doubt, that we have done a good business, especially when he is informed that I have had an afflicted family nearly the entire year, and no one to help me. But "The Lord is my light and my salvation."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. ROBERT W. SPENCE.

This excellent member of the Alabama Conference was born in Abbeville District, S. C., 11th May, 1824, and died at the house of his sorrowing and bereaved mother, in Kemper county, Miss., 27th of last month. He was in his youth a member of the Presbyterian Church as were also his parents. In 1849, while Theophilus Moody was in charge of this circuit (DeKalb,) Brother Spence together with most of his father's family united with our church, and in the latter part of the same year he was licensed to preach, and recommended to the Alabama Conference for reception into the traveling connection, and was received by that body at its next meeting. He traveled his first year as junior preacher under one of our oldest and best men, Elisha Calloway, upon Warsaw Circuit; his second he was in charge of the Tallapoosa Circuit I think; his third and fourth in charge of the Green Circuit; his fifth and sixth of Buttahatchie Circuit; his seventh and last year he was stationed in Marion, Lauderdale county, Mississippi, where in the early part of the year his health completely failed, and he was compelled, very reluctantly on his own part, and to the regret of his charge, entirely to desist from preaching. He came up to his mother's in the bounds of my circuit, where he continued to linger and grow worse until he finished his course upon the 27th ult., in holy peace and triumph. Brother Spence's early educational advantages were not very good, but he was studious and teachable and anxious to learn, especially after his mind was directed to his high and responsible calling.—His improvement after entering the Conference was rapid and surprising, particularly to those who had known his start and heard him essaying at an early period to preach the gospel. He had made himself, by God's blessing, a very acceptable and useful minister. The rough block from the quarry was assuming a smooth, polished and symmetrical form, and commanded the mingled love and admiration of saint and sinner. He was remarkable for his prudence, his Christian and ministerial consistency and dignity, while he was a most cheerful and agreeable companion, seeming to enjoy social intercourse in the highest degree, and in the society of his intimate friends opening his heart in the freest manner. Yet I never knew him that I now remember, to to do or say any thing that I thought unchristianlike or unministerial. This prudence and consistency secured for him the confidence of all who knew him. I never heard of any one suspecting his integrity. Would it were so with all of us. There was apparent in him a certain nobility of soul, lifting him above all flexibility and vascilation in the path of duty, above all low and groveling aims, and above all servility to the opinions and customs of others. He bore the ills and disappointments of life, the privations and hardships of his itinerant career, and the gloom and sufferings of his last lingering sickness with a manly Christian fortitude. I knew him well and intimately, and was often with him in his last sickness, but never heard him once murmur or in any way manifest insubmission to his Heavenly Father's will. He said to me about two weeks before he died, that "He felt from the beginning that as God had called him to suffer it was his duty patiently to endure it."

He was a calm, deliberate preacher, with a clear engaging sonorous voice, carrying his audience along the chain of thought which he had chosen step by step, until the sacred track begun to glow and brighten in the light of divine truth; then when his heart and mind were warmed and stirred with his subject, his hearers generally were moved with him, and tears flowed and good was done. He was not one of your flighty, dazzling pulpit orators, but a faithful, working and successful preacher. The pleasure of the Lord prospered in his hands, and many were the seals of his ministry. His Presiding Elder for three successive years, Brother G. Shaeffer, says of him: "I have ever regarded him as one of the best of men. He lives in the hearts of those among whom he has ministered, and a glorious reward awaits him in the skies."

The Sabbath before the last he spent upon earth, I was with him in the afternoon and during the night, and had a most free and full expression from him in a lengthy conversation in regard to his religious state and his prospects beyond the grave. A more satisfactory and profitable interview I never have enjoyed, nor do I ever expect to enjoy with a friend or brother in this world. His religious comforts were strong, his faith unwavering. He quoted this passage: "These light afflictions work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." His utterance became choked with emotions of joy before he finished the sentence, and with his sepulchral voice he shouted "glory to God."

He died in his 33d year, in the vigor of his manhood, while standing to all human appearance just on the threshhold of an active life of usefulness.—His disease was hemorhage of the lungs, doubtless brought on by his excessive labors in protracted camp-meetings.—Thus he died, as I think, a martyr to the work he loved so well.

He was never married. He leaves no widowed wife and orphaned children to be a charge upon the church, but he has left a widowed mother and orphaned sisters in weeds of mourning, who with their own tender hands ministered to his wants during six long tedious months of pain and sickness. He has fought the good fight of faith, and has finished his course, and is now wearing the glorious crown of righteousness.—Methodist Preachers still die well! May we all die the death of the righteous! Amen.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

OAKMULGHE MISSION, Alabama Conference.

I send you my report for the third and fourth quarters for this mission.—The mission is in a prosperous condition. I have received on trial, since my last report, 87 members; baptized 53 children and 16 adults. The owers and overseers at all the appointments appear to be favorable to the missionary operations, and promise a liberal contribution to the support of the mission. There seems to be a fine state of religious feeling among the blacks generally, and about forty have professed saving faith in Christ in the last two months. I have administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at most of the appointments, and on one of these occasions where we had about thirty communicants, we witnessed a scene which would have caused some of our misguided Northern brethren to have wondered with astonishment, to see the pious master and mistress bowing around the same table partaking of the the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and then rising from their knees rejoicing in God their Saviour; and when the mourners were requested to kneel before God to ask an interest in the prayers of God's people for a blessing upon their poor souls, to see those same Christian owners go to their kneeling, weeping servants, with hearts warm with the love of God, and anxious for the salvation of the servants, and endeavor to point them to the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Under these circumstances the mission cannot but be successful. At another appointment where they have had the missionary's labors since last February, they have gone entirely through our Catechism No. 1, including the Lord's Prayer and Ten Commandments, without missing hardly a single question. The Catechism is considered the most important part of our work, because it embraces all, and is understood by all, both young and old.

USUS LOCI.

"A CIRCUMSTANCE ALTERS THE CASE."

Mr. Editor:—"Who may marry" is a "query" that appears in a late number of the Advocate. The answer which you gave to this inquiry, if it be of universal application, renders some of us in these ends of the earth "liable to severe censure;" for, according to it, several of us that I wot of, have been marrying wrong. One young brother, before he was ordained, for marrying one couple, took in a perquisite of $70. Would that more of the marrying people were as liberal! I have not yet been ordained and have twice performed the ceremony—the first time not indeed without some misgiving, but the second time, having had some conversation with my Presiding Elder on the subject, I went into the affair with alacrity. Where is our authority? In the Alabama Code there is a clause authorizing "any licensed minister of the gospel" to solemnize the rite of matrimony. Now ours is a case which you perhaps did not take into the account in making up your verdict. Are we not excusable under a kind of usus loci plea? Or do you still hold that we are liable to censure? But we must confess nevertheless, that our position is rather paradoxical,—right, and yet not right—Ecclesiastically not right, but right civilly. Will you not after such a showing, grant us a new hearing, or at least a change of venue?

ALABAMA.

NOTE BY EDITOR.—We turn this fast Brother over to his Annual Conference, soon to meet in Tuskegee.

THE WAY TO SECURE EARLY NEWS OF THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—The people will look for the result of the Presidential election on the 5th of November. To enable the newspapers of the Union to declare the result on the following morning, it will be necessary for the Inspectors of Election throughout the United States to aid the telegraph operators and editors in every town, village and city, and for the editors and reporters to aid each other. This can be done by confining their labors on the night of the election to the President's vote alone. Let the Inspectors everywhere count the electoral vote first. Let the telegraph transmit that vote only on the night of the election. This plan will enable the press to announce the result the morning after election, even if the contest be a close one. We hope this plan will simplify the labor, make it easier, save time and satisfy the people—country and city. Editors will promote the object in view by publishing it in their editorial columns.

On Reading the Scriptures in the Public Congregation.

In our Book of Discipline, p. 77, under the section relating to Public Worship, the question is asked, "What directions shall be given for the establishment of uniformity in public worship among us on the Lord's day? Ans. 1. Let the morning service consist of singing, prayer, the reading of a chapter out of the Old Testament and another out of the New, and preaching. 2d. Let the afternoon service consist of singing, prayer and the reading of one or two chapters out of the Bible, and preaching." And is it necessary to call the attention of ministers to a rule at once so plain and so obviously reasonable as this? Did those men of age and piety and experience, who prescribed this rule, act idly or unmeaningly in so doing? And is it not expressly enjoined upon us all that we should "keep the rules of the Discipline and not try to mend them." This direction I humbly conceive no one can mend. It is reasonable. It is moreover in perfect accordance with the rules laid down for the regulation of public worship in both Testaments. Yet with shame it must be told, this rule, enacted by heaven itself, is by multitudes of ministers either wholly or in part overlooked or practically contemned.—Even some of our leading men are not guiltless in reference to it. I have known Bishops and Doctors of Divinity to conduct religious services without any regard to this rule whatever. This has at least the appearance of presumption. "What's the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord of hosts." The word of God—not that of man—is the "Sword of the Spirit." Of it it is affirmed that "it is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword," etc. To the reading of this word, in fine, many and illustrious promises are made by the author of it. Under the Mosaic dispensation the public recitation of the law was expressly commanded. And after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity we find Ezra the priest reading out of the Law of Moses, in the presence of all the people, great and small, male and female, every day during the seven days continuance of the feast. And this measure resulted in a great and marked reformation of the people. That this practice was kept up in our Saviour's time is evident from many passages in the gospels.—He himself, according to the custom of the Jews, read the Scriptures in their synagogues. In the address of St. James, in the council at Jerusalem, we have a passage proving that it was the universal practice to read the Sacred writings in their public religious assemblies. "For Moses of old hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." Here too, be it noted, reading the Scriptures is, designated preaching. Nor was this practice discontinued in the early Christian Church. Tertullian, in the second century, expressly informs us that in their public worship the following order was observed: "Scriptura legantur, psalmi canuntur, allocutiones proferuntur, petitiones delegantur—i. e. "The Scriptures are read, psalms sung, sermons preached and prayers presented." Some of the primitive writers of the Church inform us that as many as four lessons were frequently recited, and that the sermon was usually an exposition and application of the last of those lessons, assigning as a reason that it was the freshest in the minds of the hearers. St. Paul again and again concludes his Epistles with a solemn charge that they be read "to all the holy brethren." When he says to Timothy, "Give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," it is reading aloud and in public that he enjoins. So the word he here employs signifies. It was of course the Scriptures he was thus to read. Observe too the order of the exercises—"read, exhort, instruct." Can we wonder that churches neglecting this excellent, this Divine precept, have fallen into gross and pernicious errors? In the services of the Romish Church indeed the Sacred Writings are read, but to no profit to the mass of hearers, being in an unknown tongue. Many Protestant Churches too, it would be easy to show, have relapsed into grievous errors from the neglect of this rule. Consider for a moment the great benefit that must result from reading large portions of the word of God in our Churches. Here the people have the truth and nothing but the truth. The sermon that follows may contain false doctrine, or it may be a dry, barren, uninstructive address.—Still the people have had food—solid, substantial food. They have had the "sincere milk of the word." We may be sincere, and yet err and cause others to err. But "the law of Lord is perfect, converting the soul—the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple; the statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." I might multiply quotations to the same effect, but let these suffice.

Very much depends on the manner in which the Scriptures are read. They may be read in such a cold, listless, unimpressive way as to do little or no good. The minister should read them as though he felt and appreciated the truths he pronounces. In order to this he should never fail, if possible, to peruse and study in private the chapters he intends reading in the sacred desk. By this practice he will not only be much benefitted himself by what he reads, and can therefore hardly fail to affect his hearers. The choice of the portions to be recited being left to himself, he will, of course select such as will bear upon his text. His hymns too, being selected with the same view, there will be a unity of purpose, a harmony in the services that fall not to strike and profit the worshipers. Thus will all things be done decently and in order, and to the manifest edification of boty minister and people. Thus will the man of God both profit himself and those that hear him.

Dancing and Scripture.

The New York Churchman in a recent issue said:

"Dancing in itself is an innocent recreation, and as healthful as it is graceful. God is not dishonored by it; on the contrary the Psalmist says: 'Let them Praise His name in the dance.' And so they may—all the Puritanism in the world to the contrary notwithstanding."

Whereupon the Southern Churchman thus rejoins:

"Our contemporary quotes Scripture to sustain dancing. We do not know that this is altogether to be wondered at, when so very wicked a person as Satan was guilty of the same impropriety. Not of course, by any manner of means would we be understood of classing our respected contemporary with so evil an existence. We only allude to this that it may be seen how Scripture may be abused. Here for instance are certain persons being taught a worldly amusement, not at all for 'recreation.' Our contemporary will bear with us when we tell him this is all cant. There are many kinds of cant. There is an Evangelical cant, a High-church cant, a Romish cant and a Worldly cant. Dr. Johnson's advice therefore is to be addressed to the Churchman—My Dear Sir, free your mind of cant. It is all cant saying that children are taught to dance on account of the recreation. They are taught to dance at school, only that they may be able to dance at balls and parties, and when they go into company. And to advise people to learn to dance that they may mix with the most worldly people under circumstances when everything combines to chill all devotional feeling, where there is the world and nothing else; and then to apologize for all this by saying the Psalmist says, "Let them praise His name in the dance." Oh Mr. Churchman we cannot but again think of Satan quoting Scripture to our blessed Lord. "Let them praise His name in the dance." So say we. And therefore let there be no dancing whatever in which the name of God is not praised. With this rule there would be an entire abolition of dancing, except that kind practiced among our Shaker friends. Now can it be that we have misunderstood our contemporary, and that after all what he means is that we should turn Shakers, and to conduct our religious services so that we may be able to have little dances interspersed therein? Can it be that the Churchman means this? Surely his well-known orthodoxy forbids such an interpretation. We therefore must fall back upon our original interpretation, and condemn our contemporary with the 'adage' of Scripture for misapplying the inspired record."

LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.

Bishop Early passed through Nashville last week en route from the Louisville to the Memphis Conference. He was in fine health and spirits. He gives us a cheering account of the prospects of Methodism in Kentucky. The session of the Louisville Conference in Elizabethtown, which began October 1st and ended October 6th, was exceedingly bright and profitable. The Bishop's morning prayer-meetings have a fine effect upon ministers and upon the community in which his Conferences are held. A number of persons have been converted and joined the church at those occasions. We have long desired to have more of the spiritual elements incorporated with the business concerns of our annual convocations. The Baptist, Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal churches in Elizabethtown were courteously opened to the ministers; and the pastors of the last two mentioned communions attended the Conference and took great interest in the proceedings. The sessions were held in the Baptist church. The hospitality of all classes was unbounded. Such exhibitions of catholic feeling in these days of rebuke and bigotry are truly refreshing. We feel very sure that Bishop Early, and indeed all of our Bishops, will not fail to encourage and reciprocate those kindly Christian courtesies. There was a considerable increase in the membership within the bounds of the Louisville Conference—nine preachers were admitted on trial, and seven into full connection—$4608,85 was collected for missions and $838,05 for tracts. The minutes show a net increase of a little over eleven hundred members; and the missionary collections have increased some two thousand dollars over last year. All the financial interests are prospering. The education interests too, are becoming better. Drs. Sehon and Hamilton were present, advocating the interests which they respectively have in charge. They have returned with the Bishop, and make encouraging reports from Western Virginia and Kentucky.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Columbian, of last Saturday, says:

"This favorite institution commenced its fall term on Wednesday last, the 1st instnnt, with the most flattering prospect of success. About seventy young ladies were in attendance at the openieg, and the faculty were all promptly at their posts. Mr. Thweatt is in his element again, and every thing is going on with the regularity of clockwork. One or two changes we believe have been made in the professorships, which we shall notice more at length next week."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Notice—To the members of the Alabama Conference. The brethren who intend to bring their wives to the Conference will please inform me immediately, that due preparation may be made for them... E. J. HAMILL.

P. S.—Our College has 186 pupils in attendance. E. J. H.

Notice—To the Preachers of Mississippi Annual Conference. Those of you who expect to come by public conveyance and through Canton, should come on the cars Saturday evening or Sunday evening. The stage leaves here Sunday evening after supper; Tuesday evening do.; and I have made arrangements for an extra coach to leave here on Monday morning. Two hacks can also be had.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

Notice.—To the members of the Mississippi Conference—As the seat of our next Conference is in the bounds of my charge, I would make some suggestions for your convenience in traveling to the place. And first: Those who come via Vicksburg per railroad, to Canton, Madison county, will there take the stage for Kosciusko. The stage leaves immediately on the arrival of the cars at Canton from Vicksburg. There will be a quarterly meeting at Sharon, Madison county, embracing the Sabbath before Conference, to which our brethren are invited, and the preachers are invited to share the hospitality of our people at Sharon, in their route to the Conference. Sharon is about forty miles south of Kosciusko, and directly on the route.

Ample accommodations can be had all the way from Sharon to Kosciusko.

The preachers on arriving at Kosciusko will call at the store of Messrs. Clark & Webb, south east of the public square, and they will be conducted to their lodgings during the session of conference and it is earnestly desired that there should be a general attendance of the preachers. The people will be disappointed if the preachers do not come. They have made ample arrangements and will expect you, Brethren.

Those who would bring their wives please inform me immediately at Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi.

Respectfully,
H. J. HARRIS, P. E.

Notice—To the Members of the Alabama Conference. An arrangement has been made by which the preachers attending the Alabama Conference, at Tuskegee will pay only half price, to the Mobile and Ohio Rail Road Company and to steamers to Montgomery.

Those coming to Mobile by Rail, will pay full fare down, and by calling at the office of the company here they will receive free tickets up, on their return from Conference. K.

☞Readers of this paper are requested to read advertisement headed "It is not a Dye," and judge if the preparations are not worthy of trial by those who are bald, grey or afflicted with diseases of hair or scalp.

☞A Word to a Candid Public—Scarcely four years have elapsed since the presentation of our new celebrated Shamrock Bitters was made to you. You have tested its efficacy, and have manifested your appreciation by your generous patronage, from the fact that they have invariably accomplished all they purported to do, and if there is still among you any who from predisposition have included our preparation in their general prejudice against medicine, we would earnestly refer them to any of the leading physicians in the land, who now invariably prescribe it in all cases of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Flatulency, Constipation, Loss of Appetite, etc., etc. It does not profess to cure all things, but we hold for the above diseases, it is the only speedy and reliable remedy. We would seriously caution you against the spurious articles gotten up and palmed off as the genuine "Hostetter," and it is due to yourselves to acquaint us with all parties engaged therein. We have at present several in different sections of the Union under bonds, but hereafter we intend prosecuting to the fullest extent of the law.

☞For the benefit of the invalid portion of our community, we extract the following from the Almanac of Dr. C. M. Jackson, proprietor of HOOFLANDICS OERMAN BITTERS, hoping it may induce a trial of them:

J. C. ELLES says: SHEFFIELD, Ill., March 19, 1855.

I expect to sell great quantities of your Bitters this year. Many of my customers speak very highly of its good qualities, having proved itself most an excellent Fever, and Ague preventative, a great purifier of the blood, and the very best thing on record to aid digestion and create a good natural appetite. In short, I am sure it is one of the very best medicines known for family use; being safe and pleasant for any one to take.

C. L. H. CROCKWELL says:

AMARGA, Iowa, May 1, 1854.

The Bitters give unbounded satisfaction to all that have used them, and I do and can always recommend them to all that are afflicted. They have cured many, cases of Dyspepsia, some of them where hundreds of dollars have been spent for remedies which afforded no relief, and were considered incurable until they used the Bitters. See advertisement. o27 1m ☞Few are aware how frequently publishers are compelled to insert among their advertisements statements which they can neither sanction or believe. A pleasant exception to this disagreeable necessity are the advertisements of DR. J. C. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL and PILLS, which will be found in our columns. We have published for him before, and always with the feeling that in so doing we in no wise lend ourselves to deceive or mislead the public, for we have had indisputable proof that his words are strictly true, with abundant reasons to believe that his medicines will do all they promise, and all that can be reasonably expected from any medicine. His Cherry Pectoral is so well known in this community to need any commendation from us, and the Pills, we are credibly informed, are not inferior to his Pectoral.—[Providence (R. I.) Mirror.

THE REVOLUTION IN ACTIVE PROGRESS.

We learn from the Corpus Christi Nueces Valley, of the 18th inst., that two citizens of that place had arrived at home from the Rio Grande, bringing intelligence from there up to the 11th. We condense the following from the reports of these gentlemen, as published in the Valley:

Vidaurri, at the head of three thousand troops, marched from Monterey upon Mier, and entered the town without any resistance being offered by Gen. Garza, the commander of the Government forces, who retired to Camargo and fortified himself there. This place is situated about three miles above Rio Grande City, on the opposite side of the river. Garza has here about thirteen hundred men.

Being in possesion of Mier, Vidaurri was enabled to raise the money necessary for carrying on the campaign, by collecting the duties on the goods imported into the country. He then, at the head of his army, marched on Camargo. Arriving before this place on the 9th, he sent a dispatch to Gen Garza, informing him that unless he surrendered the town immediately he would commence to bombard it.

He was abundantly able to execute the threat, as he was well provided with mortars, field pieces and howitzers under the direction of Col. Jordae, the officer who mainly contributed to the victory over Santa Anna's forces at Saltillo, a year ago last March. Garza seat back word to him that he might go ahead, and immediately proceeded to take measures in defence

GOD

The following sublime ode to the Deity is from the Russian mythology, and was written by the celebrated Derzhaven. This poem is said to have been translated into Japanese by order of the Emperor, and is hung up embroidered in gold in the temple of Jedo. It has also been translated into the Chinese and Tartar languages, written on a piece of rich silk and suspended in the Imperial Palace at Pekin. It was translated into English, as follows, by Dr. Bowring, and is said to have lost much of its original beauty in the translation. It is a noble composition, and should be preserved, and committed to memory by every reader:

O Thou! Eternal One! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy, all motion guide
Unchanged through time's all devastating flight
Thou only God! There is no God beside!
Being above all beings! mighty one!
Whom none can comprehend and none explore
Who fill'st existence with Thyself alone
Embracing all, supporting, ruling o'er
Being whom we call God—and know no more!

In its sublime research, philosophy
May measure out the ocean deep—may count
The sands or the sea-shore; may mete the air,
And weigh the earth; but there is no weight
There is no measure, no comparison
These but suggest a power unknown to us
Unknown to us? unknown! and what are we?
Though knowledge, wisdom, power, sum total all
To trace Thy counsels infinite and vast,
And thought is lost in thought and soul in soul,
Even like plus multiplied into itself.

Thou from primeval nothingness didst call
First, chaos, then existence; Lord on Thee
Eternity laid its foundations down
Sprang forth from Thee of life and joy the boundless sea
Sole origin—all life all beings Thine.
Thy word created all, and doth create
Thy splendor fills all space with rays divine
Thou art, and wert, and shall be! Glorious! Great!
Life giving, life sustaining Potentate!

Thy chains the harmonies of Universe surround
Upheld by Thee, by Thee inspired with breath
Thou the harmonic wise and perfect bound.
And beautifully mingled life and death!
As sparks mount upwards from the fiery blaze
So elfins air born, so worlds spring forth from Thee
And as the spangles in the sunny rays
Shine round the silver snow, the pageantry
Of heaven's bright army glitters in Thy praise.

A million torches lighted by Thy hand
Wander in mazes through the depths of space
They own Thy power, accomplish Thy command
All gay with life, all eloquent with bliss.
What shall we call them? Pillars of crystal light
A glorious company of golden streams
Lamps of celestial ether burning bright
Suns lighting systems with their joyous beams?
But thou to these art as the noon to night!

Yet as a drop of water in the sea
All this magnificence in Thee is lost
What are ten thousand worlds compared to Thee
And what am I, then? Heaven's unnumbered host
Though multiplied by myriads, and arrayed
In all the glory of sublimest thought,
Is but an atom in the balance weighed
Against Thy greatness, is a cipher brought Against Infinity. What am I, then? Nought!

Nought! But the effluence of Thy light divine,
Pervading worlds hath touched my bosom too
Yes in my spirit doth Thy spirit shine
As shines the sunbeam in a drop of dew.
Nought! but I live, and on hope's pinions fly
Eager towards Thy presence; for in Thee
I live, and breathe, and walk, and move and have My being; and Thou only God—art "I am."

Thou art! directing, guiding all Thou art!
Direct my understanding then to Thee;
Control my spirit, guide my wandering heart:
Though but an atom 'midst immensity,
Still I am something, fashioned by Thy hand!
I hold a middle rank 'twixt heaven and earth.
On the last verge of mortal being stand
Close to the realms where angels have their birth
Just on the boundary of the spirit land!

The chain of being is complete in me
In me is matter's last gradation lost,
And the next step is spirit—Deity!
I can command the lightning, and am dust!
A monarch and a slave; a worm, a God!
Whence came I here? and how so marvelously
Constructed and conceived? unknown! This clod
Lives, thinks, reasons, knows, feels, and knows it not!
For from itself alone it could not be.

Creator! Yes, thy wisdom and thy word
Created me! Thou source of life and good!
Thou spirit of thy spirit, and my Lord!
Thy light, thy love, their bright reflex impart
Fill me with an immortal soul to spring
Over the abyss of death, and bear it wear
The garments of eternal day, and wing
Its heavenward flight beyond the starry sphere
Even to its source, to Thee, its author, there.

O thought ineffable! O vision blest!
Though worthless our conception all of thee;
Yet shall Thy shadowed image fill our breast,
And with its homage to the Deity,
God! this above my lowly thoughts can soar;
Thine seek Thy presence, Being wise and good;
Midst Thy vast works, admire, obey, adore;
And when the tongue is eloquent no more,
The soul shall speak in tears of gratitude.

The Dance of Life.

A TRANSLATION BY A. C. HILLS.

Forever strange and changing and capricious
Thou art a crazy dance, O human life!
Whose changes are the many fates that touch us
Their brief experiences of peace and strife.

The world around us is the noisy Hall
The orchestra whose notes fantastic move
To pleasure now, and now to mourning call
To bitter hatred or to rapturous love.

Now passions dark the human soul pervade—
Now gentle Mercy pleads in mortal's defence
Now outraged Truth calls down the avenging blade,
And Crime usurps the rule of Justice even.

Upon a lofty throne of gratified power
The haughty monarch sits secure today
But ere the morrow's sun has run its hour,
His splendor and dominion swept away!

These are figures of this crazy dance;
And right and left, or circling round and round,
We seem to obey the mystic Voice and chance
For the great cause is hidden and profound.

Blest are the dancers who through all this scene
Have in their souls the consciousness of right
Their pathway leadeth to a land serene,
Of softer music and immortal light.

MEADOW SAFFRON—NO FEAR OF OUR AGE.

Lament who will in fruitless tears
The speed with which our moments sly
Is gift not ever vanished years
But watch the years that hasten by
Why expect that time is ever slow
The winter age of mankind be
As days should ever go
To see the blissful morning come. [Bryant

Mr. Jack, on hearing a lecture on the immortality of the soul, remarked that he cared very little for such matters, as he was not a soldier, or sailor.

Speaking of family discipline, we once heard a remark that Mr. Pepper was the most successful disciplinarian of the age. He was continually keeping them in order, for they were always boarders.

If five and-a-half yard will make a coat, how many will make a pair of breeches?

"I don't like to put you to the trouble of a hangman," said the culprit. "Oh! never mind," was the reply, "I will manage myself in private."

HALF PENCE AND FARTHINGS.—In the reign of King Edward I. the English penny was ordered to be divided that it might easily be broken into halves or quarters, or into two parts these were called halfpence, or into four these were called farthings.

A lady leaving home, was thus addressed by her little boy: "Mamma, will you remember to buy me a penny whistle, and be sure to get one with a loud sound?"

There is a vast deal of sound philosophy in the far distance—
Different men have different views
Some like books and some like women.

The chap who took to the streets now pays the rent of a house, has a mortgage on his wife's property, and pawns his watch.

A geology philologist says that the letter W enters into the composition of words in all creation. He says Virgin Wax, Wool and Wick.

"Never be cruel to the other world," was the remark of an old Irish peer remarkable for his benevolence. "The only way to treat the fairies is to let them alone, and they'll never trouble you."

One of the strongest traits in the peculiar character of human nature ever on record was displayed in the case of the rich man refusing to give the poor man a bone, while the dog took pity upon him and licked his sores.

THE PROFIT OF AFFLICTIONS.

This is a hard way, but God often appoints it as the best way. It is hard to suffer, but a blessed advantage may come from it. That utterance of an ancient disciple, has met with a full response in the experience of all who have come after; "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." Afflictions have an instructive efficacy. Indeed, the most common figure under which they are spoken of, is that of a school. God, then, is the schoolmaster, and so we come under a divine tutelage.

In this school, the Bible becomes a chief book. We are drawn to it as we are not at other times; no book like God's to the filial heart when it is filled with sorrow. Then Providence interprets, and the precious meaning heaves up and flows out; and the promises unlock and discharge something of their ocean-fullness, until the peace of that soul, bowed down on this rugged bank, becomes as a river, and its righteousness as the waves of the sea.

In this school, we come to understand our frailty; how slight our hold on life, and the life of those dear to us. Here too comes home the lesson of sinfulness; we learn the evil of sin, as we taste the bitter fruits of it in pain, sickness, decay, death—all the work of sin. The soul's worth, the greatness of its interests, the importance that the mighty treasure be made eternally safe, is another of the lessons which comes home to the heart in this school. At such a time, is there any thing to compare with the soul? Is it not the vastest thing that has being and a dwelling here below? We are taught so as to feel the greatness and the weight of responsibility in regard to it—the value, the unprized preciousness of the opportunities to guide and save it. By the side of this greatness pertaining to the soul, the world falls back into its proper littleness, taking in this school, as it ought, the lowest bench. We are taught to look away from the world; to regard eternity; to realize it as near—a step, and we are there. We are taught, and can no more doubt it, that substance is there; heaven is there. And there the treasure must be, or we have no treasure; if no home there, miserably homeless, eternal exiles, outcast wanderers, and the blackness and darkness for ever.

Affliction is God's school—he putting us there to learn; himself there to teach. Of course, he comes, at such a time, very near to us; we feel his hand touching us; get, as it were, a look at the very heart of God. We gain a perception of his ways, and a clearer knowledge of all his attributes. And where we feared most, we find deliverance. What we had read or heard, we find true in fact, that wisdom and goodness mark all his procedings.

Another department of the profit from affliction lies in their subduing and corrective efficacy. And this comes in part from the peculiar force of the teachings. The truth now, is not a matter said, but done. The doctrine and the example are wrought together, and come with combined strength not to the intellect only, but to the conscience and the sensibilities. The things of God we now set down as great, because we have begun to experience them. God has entered, and with his own hand lodged them within; and there they are deeply and undoubtedly demonstrated; and there to abide and work out their legitimate results. Afflictions profit, not by a direct action, but only through the truth.—Through this medium, what do they?—What are the graces they peculiarly foster and strengthen? We answer: There is more faith in God after the painful process; simply because we have had a near experience of God. We have been taken into his hand, and he has dealt with us; has removed, perhaps, some cherished possession; has greatly altered our circumstances. Now, when this close, intimate work of God is done, if there is any faith in Him, there will be an increase of faith, because that whole proceeding and issue, so far as it unfolds, is all so admirable, so worthy of God. If there is anything dark, submission is exercised; and thus the afflicted Christian, in this school of trials, grows to be a submissive Christian; so that when greater trials come, and even the greatest, the grace of submission is so ascendent, that there is but one sentiment, and that fills the heart—"not my will, but thine be done."

A kindred quality in the character is patience. This, too, gathers vigor and perpetuity; not, as before, soon fainting, but coming quietly to bear all that God may impose; deeming the burthen not heavy, because laid on by the Divine hand; privileged and pleased even to serve God by suffering, and to honor his grace by showing to the world the patience of the saints. The spirituality of the mind is also advanced; its interest in spiritual things, its sensibility to spiritual motives, and in the same proportion, the happiness of the spirit, grows. As affliction brings the heart more in sympathy with God and heaven, it gives to it a greater, deeper, purer joy. There is sorrow; there are tears; perhaps regrets. But there is a sweetness in the very sorrow, and a pearly treasure to the tears. The happiness of prayer, at such a time, is peculiar. The world is out of the way; there is a very near access; a deep feeling of need; a full flowing out of desire; a felt preciousness in the promise; the commingling of a divine fellowship. One hour thus spent, outweighs, in the scale of true enjoyment, a life of gay and brilliant fluttering.—Independent.

God allows us anything but sin.

THE GREATEST SINNERS NOT MOST LIKELY TO BE SAVED.

It is said that God can as easily convert a hardened profligate as the most correct moralist; nay that the former will much more probably be awakened from his security than the latter, because the very enormities of his sins serve as an alarm-bell to shake his sleepy conscience, or as the sting of scorpions to rack him with fierce pains of intolerable remorse; and hence we hear it sometimes incautiously asserted that the man of sober, respectable character is in more danger of final perdition, than the abandoned, confirmed libertine;—What is the direct tendency of such a belief? Why to establish the dangerous paradox, that the more a man sins, the better for himself—it will quicken his conscience and arm it with mighty energy to drive him from his evil courses; and thus his chance of salvation will be increased the deeper and deeper he plunges into iniquity. What an awful license such a belief must give to vicious propensities, what an additional impulse it must lend to the already imperious rage of appetite, may easily be conceived. And yet nothing is more certain, if we are to believe our text and the facts occurring to our daily observation, that the more a man sins the harder he grows, that every new sin stupifies and indurates the conscience, renders a man's retreat more difficult and improbable, and his final ruin more fatally certain. We may illustrate the two cases thus. Heaping sin after sin upon the conscience, may be compared to heaping green wood upon a few coals. The more you throw on the more you crush the coals, and the greater danger of putting out the fire altogether. If, however, the feeble heat should not expire under this incumbent weight, but should by great good fortune once ignite the wood contiguous to it, then all the oppressive heap serves as so much aliment to feed the flame, and to increase the greatness and heat of the fire. So a profligate's conscience has the almost certain prospect of being seared in final obduracy. But if by one of those astonishing act of God's special mercy which it pleases him sometimes to work for the display of his power and goodness, that profligate's conscience is awakened it will be apt to operate more powerfully upon him—apt to produce more awful agonies of fear, more convulsive struggles to effect an escape, deeper humiliation, and if he obtains pardon, more ecstatic gratitude, that such an enormous transgressor has been spared and purified and blessed. He has had much forgiven, he will therefore love much.—But let every man beware how he tries the dreadful experiment of sinning in order to furnish himself with materials for repentance. Enough of these the most blameless will find who study the holy laws of God, and compare it with the evil that is in their hearts. That delicacy of conscience which is the fruit and reward of a moral life, will by the aid of God's spirit, enable you to have a quicker and livelier feeling, of what is evil, and to find as copious a source of godly sorrow and humiliation in the secret sins of your heart, as the gross transgressor finds in the recollection of his scarlet and crimson sins. Never have I heard from the lips, never have I read in the secret diary of any penitent prodigal, such deep, heart-touching confessions of inward depravity and self-loathing, as appears in the journals of Edwards and Brainerd and Martyn and Payson, men who were preserved comparatively pure and free of vicious habits from tender years. The profligate may escape; but he will have reason to remember all his lifetime, that he has escaped as by fire. Like one of Milton's infernal potentates, he bears on his marred visage the signals of his unrighteous battle with Heaven.

Deportment in the Pulpit.

"Roger Williams," alias Dr. Wayland, has some very good remarks on irreverence in the pulpit.

"A want of reverence in the preacher's deportment before commencing service, during singing, &c., is particularly remarked upon. We have sometimes seen ministers that seemed to need a gentle rebuke in this regard. They appear to feel their concern with the hymn is at an end when they have given it out.—During the singing they "find the place" in the Bible, or look for the next hymn, or over their manuscripts. Singers are sometimes admonished of the sacredness of their duty, and reproved for lightness of behavior, often not without much provocation on their part. But they have eyes as well as others. A worthy deacon and chorister once remarked to us, after attending one of our great anniversary meetings, that he thought the conduct of many ministers was scandalous. During the singing before an annual sermon, he said, he could see them by dozens, talking, reading, moving about, apparently without the least notion that an act of worship was in progress. He wondered how they could expect their people to show proper respect for public religious services, while they themselves so openly disregard their sacredness. There may be more ground for such censure than many would imagine. We do not easily "see ourselves as others see us." But there is ONE of whose presence and unerring notice every Christian, especially when engaged in devotional exercises, should be profoundly conscious."

"MEET ME IN HEAVEN."

Is it not strange how long a tone of the voice, or a glance from the eye, will remain fresh in the memory? and how, when long years, with their accumulations of joys and sorrows, shall have passed, a few words from the lips of the dying will linger in our ears, and even be, as it were, the guardians of our destiny? Wherever we may wander, amidst whatever scenes we may mingle—be the circumstances which surround us what they may, however truant we may prove to the soul's highest and dearest interests, these little oracles will force themselves upon and claim our attention. We may have many rubies in the casket of memory whose memory, whose beauty and purity are sources of ceaseless joy; but what heart will not acknowledge this little string of pearls—"Meet me in Heaven"—to possess a charm superior to them all? They may have come from the cold lips of that sainted being who watched our infant years, and who first taught us to bend our knees in humble prayer before the Throne of Grace, and ask that God would deliver us from the temptations of the world; that He would give us strength in the future to preserve untarnished the integrity of our hearts, and that, when the fierce battle of time shall have been fought, we may be found with the conqueror's wreath upon our brows. A darling sister may have uttered them just before her spirit winged its flight to the better shore; and while we think of her many acts of kindness—the gentle manner in which she would reprove us for our faults, and how, with tearful eyes, she would plead with us to turn from the error of our ways—do we not frequently say to ourselves that we will endeavor to lead a new life—try to meet her? A father may have spoken them, even while the last sand was passing from the hour-glass of existence, and though every thought associated with him recalls the memory of a sternness which always quelled the gushing forth of the young heart's pure emotions, still he was our father, and "Meet me in Heaven," as it faintly comes from his lips, falls upon our hearts with a peculiar mournfulness, and bears away all unkindly feelings.

If we would harken more to these little sad, but holy verbal mementoes of the past, and permit them to have their way, they would create a well spring of happiness within us, whose glad waters would not only give life and vigor to our own enjoyments, but would also extend their virtues to all around us. Oh! yes, we should ever keep them in our minds, and constantly dwell upon the love that gave them utterance. They will prove sweet and powerful counteractants of this world's sellishness; they will pour within our hearts a continual stream of Christian sympathy for each others misfortunes—a sympathy which will bless the giver as much as the receiver. And this is not all; they will fortify us amidst the trials and sorrows of life, and will tell us, in pleasant tones, of the good time that is coming, when our hearts shall be no longer weary.

"Meet me in Heaven." We should never try to drive that little note from our ears—never strive to raise its soothing influence from our hearts; we know not what a moral power it may wield; we should place it ever as a beacon-light upon the watch-tower of our hearts, and permit its glad beams to extend far ont upon the ocean of life, and though we be tossed about by rough gales, our way shall be made clear. And thus this little oracle will follow us until the period shall came for us to journey hence, and as we turn our backs upon time, and our eyes towards eternity, if we will listen, we may hear the spirit-voices of the household band calling us up to their own beautiful home, while our own glad hearts can send the cheering answer to them, that we are coming—coming to "meet you in Heaven!"—Home Magazine.

Three Rules for Borrowers.

While at least one half of the world live by borrowing, or the credit system, and while thousands of treatises have been made on honesty, and honor, and kindness, all that we now recollect on this theme, vital to a utilitarian, and which includes them all, may be comprised under three heads:

1. The Iron Rule.—Never borrow a paper, book, umbrella, horse or any thing else whatever, if you can possibly do without it, nor then either, unless with consent of the owner.

2. The Silver Rule.—Do not use the article borrowed as carefully as if it was your own, but much more so for it is not your own; nor retain it beyond the time agreed upon, without the owner's verbal or written consent.

3. The Golden Rule.—As soon as ever you have done using the thing borrowed, return it with thanks, until you can return the favor.

The Seconds of Eternity.

Prof. Mitchel, in one of his recent lectures, describing the gradual tendency of the earth's orbit to assume a circular form, used the following magnificent illustration: "Its short diameter was gradually lengthening, and would continue so to expand until it should become perfectly circular, when it would again contract to its original shape and dimensions. And so the earth would vibrate periodically, and these periods were measured by millions upon millions of years. 'Thus,' said Prof. M., 'the earth will continue to swing back and forth, and to and fro in the heavens, like a great pendulum beating the seconds of eternity."

A PIOUS OVERSEER.

On a plantation in Alabama there resides an overseer who is regarded by his neighbors as a model for the profession. Everything about the premises is in perfect order, and his house is the home of neatness and piety. The servants love and respect him; and, after a recent absence, ran to greet him with a singular warmth of affection. The proprietor lives in another State, and has retained the present manager for about ten years, leaving everything in his care. I understand the plantation, for its size and quality, is quite productive and profitable.

But the best quality of our friend is his piety. Through his influence a number of the servants have become religious, and nearly all of them orderly and moral. They have weekly meetings, well attended. Two years ago he employed a minister, to preach to them, at his own expense; but has been compelled by the owner to abandon it. He was also requested to suspend the prayer-meetings; but this he refused to do.—He requires the leaders, however, to keep good order. A few nights since they became very boisterous; next morning he called the offending party, and said to him: "Joe, you are a good boy; but you have done wrong, and I must correct you. Understand now, I do not punish you for praying, but for disobeying my orders." Joe acknowledged his fault, received a light punishment, and thanked his master, promising to do so no more. The influence of such a man for good, in his sphere, is incalculable. I may add, he is a member of the Methodist Church South, and a subscriber to the N. O. Chris. Advocate.

PASTOR.

REST.

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to its sphere.

'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife,
Fleeting to ocean,
After its life.

'Tis loving and serving,
The highest and best.
'Tis onwards unswerving,
And that is true rest.

Christian Circumspection.

Teach me, with mind unmuffled and serene,
To meet the hourly accidents of life;
And let the tones of gentle patience lend
Their soft sweet music to my lightest word.
O! may I bear in mind, that from the roots
Of withered and neglected duties spring
The rankest sin-weeds that infest the heart;
That wisdom infinite has placed me here
To work Thy will, watched o'er by angels' eyes,
Cherished and cared for, not alone by those Whom thou hast given to tread life's path with me,
But with a love beyond all human ken,
By Thee on whom my hopes of heaven depend,
My Lord, my God, my Savior, and my Friend."

—Calvert's "Wife's Manual."

Eloquence of Feeling.

The eloquence of feeling will often produce more important and glorious results than the most elaborate and overpowering arguments.

An irreligious young man heard Mr. Whitefield without interest, until the preacher suddenly paused, then burst into a flood of tears, lifted up his hands and eyes, and exclaimed, "O, my hearers, the wrath to come!"—"Those words (said the young man) sank deep into my heart, like lead in the waters. I wept, and when the sermon was ended, retired alone. For days and weeks I could think of little else. Those awful words would follow me wherever I went. 'The wrath to come—to come!'" The result was, that the young man soon after made a public profession of religion, and became an eminent preacher.

I Have Thought of It.

So said a young lady who had been reminded by a pious mother of a neglected duty. "Ah, but thinking of it does not do it," said her mother. "True," answered the daughter, "I have found that it does not," and as soon as the opportunity occurred, the neglected duty was performed.

"I have thought of it." Ah, how many stop there, in the holy purpose of doing good!

A church member sees a brother go astray: "Have you conversed with your erring brother?" "No—I have thought of it."

"Do you know the state of mind of that young neighbor who is so constant at the prayer meeting? Have you had any serious conversation with him?"

"No, I have thought of it," is the chilling reply.

No doubt that erring brother has thought of reforming, and that impenitent neighbor has thought of repenting; but of what avail will it be, if their action do not correspond?

DEFECTIVE RELIGION.—A religion that never suffices to govern a man, will never suffice to save him; that which does not sufficiently distinguish one from a wicket world, will never distinguish him from a perishing world.—Howe.

Let not your hearts flatter you, nor the world comfort you, when God threatens you.

LIFE-GIVING TEXTS.

Suppose that each were to make in golden letters the text which has been to him the gate of heaven; the text through whose open lattice a reconciled God has looked forth on him, or through whose telescope he first has glimpsed the cross. The Ethiopian chamberlain would mark the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; for it was when reading about the Lamb led to the slaughter, that his eyes were directed to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, and he went on his way rejoicing.

The English martyr, Bilney, would indicate the faithful saying, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the chief;" for it was in sight of these words that the burden fell from his back which fasts and penances rendered only more weighty.—There was a stricken deer who had long been panting for the water brooks, but he had yet found no comfort; when one day, listlessly taking up a Testament, it opened at the words, "Whom God has sent forth a propitiation, through faith, in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the sins that are past;" and instantly realized the sufficiency of the atonement, and embraced the Gospel. And doubtless He bard of Olney would signalize, by the most brilliant memorial, the spot where Sun of Righteousness first shone into his soul. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever; amen." These were the words which instantly converted into a living temple the calm and stately mind of Jonathan Edwards; and we may be sure that—like Jacob, who at Luz—would always see the light of the ladder lingering—every time he turned to the passage, even in his most cursory persal, the devout theologian would receive a surviving trace of that manifestation which into his vacant, wistful soul brought "the only wise God," and in glorifying that God, give him an object worthy the vastest powers and the longest existence.—James Hamilton, D. D.

Three Score Years and Ten!

We notice in a late number of the Western Christian Advocate an announcement on the death of Mrs. REBECCA KEYSER, at Zanesville, Ohio, formerly of Baltimore, Md. She had reached the ripe old age of eighty-five years, seventy of which, she had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Having united with the church at the early age of fifteen. Thus God, through "three score years and ten," had preserved and comforted his handmaid, who trusted Him. "Her life was truly exemplary—her death tranquil." What a large range of years to look back upon, spent in the service of her master; and what an encouragement to the young to start early in the Christian life.

A Lesson for the Self-Righteous.

It is no uncommon thing for men to flatter themselves that God cannot be displeased with them because they have omitted to do a great many bad deeds, which they would have done, had they not been restrained by the fear of the law or of public opinion. The soundness of such morality is very well exhibited in Lessing's parable of "The wolf on his death bed."

"A wolf lay at his last gasp, and was reviewing his past life. "It is true," said he, "I am a sinner, but yet, I hope not one of the greatest. I have done evil but I have also done much good. Once, I remember, a bleating lamb that had strayed from the flock, came so near me, that I might easily have throttled it; but I did it no harm.

"I can testify to all that," said his friend, the fox, who was helping him prepare for death. "I remember perfectly all the circumstances. It was just at the time when you were so dreadfully choked with that bone in your throat."

THE COMMANDMENTS.

The late Dr. Lockart, of the College Church, Glasgow, when travelling in England, was sojourning in an inn when the Sabbath came round. On entering the public room, and about to set out to church, he found twe gentlemen preparing for a game of chess. He addressed them in words to this effect:

"Gentlemen, have you locked up your portmanteans carefully?" "No. What! are there thieves in this house?"

Answer: "I did not say that, only I was thinking that if the waiter comes in and finds you making free with the fourth Commandment, he may think of making free with the eighth Commandment."

Upon this, the gentlemen said, "There is something in that," and so laid aside their game.

GOD COUNTS.

A brother and sister were playing in the dining-room, when their mother set a basket of cakes on the tea-table and went out.

"How nice they look," said the boy, reaching to take one. His sister earnestly objected, and even drew back his hand, repeating that it was against their mother's direction.

"She did not count them," said he.

"But perhaps God did," answered the sister.

So he withdrew from the temptation, and sitting down, seemed to meditate. "You are right," replied he, looking at her with a cheerful, yet serious air, "God does count. For the Bible says, the "hairs of our head, are all numbered."—S. S. Advocate.

SATAN A FISHERMAN.

I was sometime since walking upon the wharf where a fishing boat lay, and as I was passing and re-passing, the master was uttering tremendous oaths. At length I turned to him and, standing beside his boat said:

"Sir, I am unacquainted with your business. What kind of fish are these?"

"They are codfish," replied he.

"How long are you usually out in order to obtain your load?"

"Two or three weeks," he answered.

"At what price do you sell them?"

He informed me.

"Well, have you had hard work to obtain a living in this way?"

"Yes, hard work," said he.

"With what do you bait these fish?"

"With clams.

"Did you ever catch mackerel?"

"Yes."

"Well, now did you ever catch a fish without bait?"

"Yes," said he, "I was out last year, and one day when I was fixin' my line the bare hook fell into the water, and the fool took hold of it, and I drew him in."

"Now sir," said I, "I have often thought that Satan was very much like a fisherman. He always baits his hook with that kind of bait which different sorts of sinners like best, but when he would catch a profain swearer, he does not take the trouble to put on bait at all, for the fool will always bite at the bare hook."

He was silent. His countenance was solemn; and after a pause, as I turned to go away, I heard him say to one standing by him—

"I guess that's a minister."—People's Organ.

VALUE OF TIME.

Few men place a proper value on time. "I have lost a day," was the sad lamentation of a Roman emperor. Had the Austrians known the value of five minutes, said Napoleon, he would never have gained the splendid victory of Rivoli. In every thing is time squandered, but in nothing is the loss so great as in religion. The great moral victories and defeats of the world, says a writer, often turn upon minutes.

"Crises come, the seizing of which is victory, the neglect of which is ruin.—Men may loiter, but time flies, and life flies on the wings of time, and all the great interests of life are speeding on with the sure and silent tread of destiny. The road to hell "is paved with good intentions." Did we but do to-day the good which we purpose to do to-morrow, how changed would be the face of the world! What groanings and wailings over sin would instantly beat on our startled ears! What splendid schemes of benevolence would instantly start into consummation! But to-morrow comes, and finds us even more unprepared for the purposed reformation than yesterday; and "thus on till wisdom is pushed out of life." Seize the present; do to-day the possible good of to-day, and then to-morrow will bring both a large field of action, and a richer moral preparation, and life will advance on a perpetually ascending scale of beneficence and happiness.

THE CHILD'S FAITH.

We had a long, cold ride, and I was very tired. After a short interview with the friends to whom our visit was paid, we retired to our chamber. Our little son, a lively, restless child, not yet three years old, was with us, and not at all inclined to sleep. At length I said to him:

"Charley, mother is sick and tired, and cannot talk to-night."

"Ma," said the little fellow, "God can make you well, can't he? Shall I ask him?"

"Yes, my son," I replied. Then the little fellow started up in the cold room, and kneeling down on the bedclothes, folded his little hands and prayed, "O, good heavenly Father, please to make dear mother well by morning, for Jesus' sake." After this, he crept back into his bed, and in a few moments he was fast asleep.

Next morning he woke with the earliest light; and, waking me, said, "Are you well, this morning, mother?"

"Yes, my son, I feel very well, indeed, this morning."

"O, I know you would," said he, clapping his hands for joy. "I knew you would, for I prayed to God to make you well, and Jesus always hears little children when they pray."

Often have I recalled my little boy's faith, and wished that the same child-like confidence in the promise of God were mine.

A Child Beaten to Death by a Priest.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Herald, of the 20th inst., states that a German child named Barbara Forman had died from the effects of a severe beating, received at the hands of her teacher in the St. Mary's (Roman Catholic) parish school, who is also a Priest. An inquest had been held and the following verdict returned:

"That the deceased came to her death in consequence of whipping and beating received from and by the hands of Frederick Baner, on or about the 31st of September, A. D., 1856. The said whipping and beating having been done with a stick or other weapon."

The sole cause of the offence against the poor child was having attended the Protestant Ragged Sunday School.

THE GOSPEL IS ALL.

Rev. Thos. H. Stockton, on a late visit to Philadelphia, stood between two of its churches—and moralizes:—

"There stand the two churches, each one bearing an honored name—St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church and the Hedding Methodist Episcopal Church! the latter costing about $50,000, the latter about $350,000! the cheaper one handsome and comfortable enough, and the other more artistic, comprehensive and complete, in its principals and adjuncts, than we can attempt to describe. May the pure Gospel be so preached in both of them, that it may prove to be the power of God, through faith, unto the salvation of all who hear it! Stone is nothing, wood is nothing, glass is nothing, paint is nothing, and all manner of drapery is nothing—the Gospel of Christ, of God, of the Spirit, and of salvation, this is all. This turns a barn into the Holy of Holies, and makes many a tented grove like the New Jerusalem in the midst of heaven."

Horrible State of Affairs in Africa.

The Rev. Mr. Beachman, a member of the London Wesleyan Mission, has recently returned from a visit to Africa, and in a sketch of the negroes inhabiting the Gold Coast and its vicinity, which we find in the Honolulu Religious Journal, he furnishes a picture exceeding in horrors anything we had yet believed of beings wearing the human form. Who can read without a shudder of such bloody deeds and Pandemonium customs as those which he records:

"Scarce any one of their bloody customs has been abandoned since they first became known to Europeans. They will even pave their court-yards, palaces and even streets or market places of their villages or towns with the skulls of those butchered in the wars, at feasts, funerals, or as sacrifices to Bossom. When Adahanzen died, two hundred and eighty of his wives were butchered before the arrival of his successor, which put a stop to it, only to increase the flow of blood and the number of deaths in other ways. The remaining living wives were buried alive, amid dancing, singing, and bewailing, the noise of muskets, horns, yells, groans and screeches. The victims were marched along with large knives passed through their cheeks. The The executioners struggle for the bloody office, while the victims look on and endure with apathy.

"Upon the death of a king's brother, four thousand lives were thus sacrificed. Upon the death of a king of Ashantee, a general massacre takes place, and there can be no computation of the number of victims. At their Tam-customs, Mr. Bowditch, (another Englishman) witnessed a horrible sight. Every executioner, or noble, sacrificed a slave as he entered the gate. Heads and skulls formed the ornaments in their possession. The blood of the victims is collected and quaffed as a delicious beverage. The King of Dahomey paves the approaches to his palace and the battlements of his castles with the skulls of his victims, and the great Fetiche Tree at Bodagra, has its wide-spread branches laden with human carcasses and limbs."

Attempt to Print a Perfect Book.

"Whether such a miracle as an immaculate edition of a classical author does exist," says one, "I have never learnt; but an attempt has been made to obtain this glorious singularity, and was as nearly realized as is perhaps possible—the magnificent edition of Os Lusiadas of Camoens by Don Jose Sousa in 1817. This amateur spared no prodigality of cost and labor, and flattered himself that, by the assistance of Didot, not a single typographical error should be found in that splendid volume.

"But an error was afterwards discovered in some of the copies, occasioned by one of the letters in the word Lusitano having got misplaced during the working of one of the sheets. It must be confessed that this was an accident or misfortune rather than an error."

The celebrated Foulises, of Glasgow, attempted to print a work, which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. Every precaution was taken to secure the decided result. Six experienced proof-readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page; and after it was thought to be perfect, it was posted up in the hall of the university, with a notification that a reward of fifty pounds would be paid to any person who could discover an error. Each page was suffered to remain two weeks in the place where it had been posted, before the work was printed, and the printers thought they had attained the object for which they had been striving. When the work was issued, it was discovered that several errors had been committed, one of which was in the first line of the first page. The Foulis editions of classical works are still much prized by scholars and collectors.

SIN.—Sin is the sickness of the soul, and CHRIST the only physician that can cure it of the leprosy of profaneness, the fever of concupiscence, the dropsy of covetousness, the frenzy of pride, the lethargy of [illegible], the fever of [illegible], and the palsy of unbelief.

God tells you, if you repent you shall find mercy; and will you not believe him? Because thou hast been a sinner, will thou make God a liar?

If you would not go to hell, you must know that you have deserved it.

Do not think to begin to live, when thou art ready to die.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

[illegible]

Thank God, the Church has not lost the last six months. Notwithstanding gloomy predictions, that the political campaign would swallow up every other thought, the religious campaign has been persistently and gloriously maintained. A more general, genuine religious interest than has pervaded our churches, throughout summer and fall, we have never known. Our own Revival columns and those of contemporary Advocates, have told cheeringly.

The waning fires on many campgrounds throughout the South, have been kindled afresh. Thousands of precious souls have professed converting grace and been added to the Church.

Those Christians who have kept their party zeal in check—been moderate in politics and had time to attend to religion—have taken just as good care of the country as their neighbors who suffered themselves to be carried away by excitement. Now the Presidential election is over, some of these must have rebuking feelings for past immoderation.

But, let bygones be bygones, brethren. If you have allowed yourself to feel coldly, suspiciously, unkindly to any, hasten to be reconciled. Brush away the cobwebs from the chamber of your hearts. Much friction and chafing of spirits has occurred the last few months. The sooner we do away with all traces of it in church and community, the better. It were a sad, unjust reflection on our political blessings to say that a faithful, vigilant, American citizen could not be an exemplary Christian too.

Let your moderation be known to all men. No business, or duty, or calling, ever suffered by this apostolic rule being observed.

The Lord is at hand. The places that know us now, will soon know us no more. The fleeting interests and jarring strifes of time will fade away into eternity. Let us chasten our earthly moods by looking to the things not seen.

OUR CITY CHURCHES.

The protracted meeting in Carondelet-st. Methodist Church having concluded with good results, similar exercises are held at Morean-st. and Felicity-st. Churches. Several souls have been converted at both. The pastors and members are much encouraged. Congregations are good, and so is the state of religious feeling in the community.

We have never known the Methodist Churches in New Orleans—American, German, and Colored—in a more prosperous condition; pastors and people enjoy excellent harmony, and work together. The Word of God is regularly and faithfully dispensed every Sabbath, in this City, from ten Methodist pulpits.

When brethren and friends from the country visit the city this season, as thousands do, we remind them that, in all these churches, seats are free. Not only in the public congregations are they at home, but the class-meetings and prayer-meetings through the week are open to their fellowship.

And if any come to reside, even for a few months, bring your church letters, and don't forget to hand them in.

O, that the Church resident here could have the support and alliance of the Church visitant! The moral power would tell.

An Outrage.—Dr. Scott, whilom of this city, is not in good odor with the friends of the Vigilance Committee, in San Francisco. Dr. Scott's letter against the Vigilance Committee, was published in Philadelphia. When it reached California, the Committee had accomplished its work and disbanded in honor. The San Francisco Herald says: "On yesterday morning—the morning of Good Holy Day—was perpetrated in the streets of this city, an outrage so damnable and disgraceful that as Californians we are pained and humiliated to be compelled to record it. The Reverend Doctor Scott, a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, was hung in effigy from a lamp-post opposite the church of which he is the reverend pastor, on Bush street, near Montgomery. The deed was committed before daylight, and about 6 o'clock the effigy was cut down."

Death of Dr. Watson.—Rev. James V. Watson, Editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, is no more. He died at his residence in Chicago, on the 7th ult. The assistant editor, in announcing the mournful intelligence of his death, says: "The disease from which he suffered so long and so much—the asthma—some month since assumed the form of chronic bronchitis, then of pulmonary consumption, and for the last eight weeks he suffered from a sympathetic chronic diarrhœa.

IT PAYS.

Education, conducted under the auspices and patronage of the Church seems to answer the demand of this utilitarian age—It pays. Prof. Lane, at the last Commencement of Wesleyan University, gave some of the results. We hope, in time, to reckon like results, in the history of our Southern institutions:

As I have looked over the catalogue of more than 600 names of those who have gone forth from our halls, and have noted the posts of honor and places of usefulness that they are occupying, I have felt proud to be a son of the Wesleyan.—We are still young; it is only 23 years since the first small band of 6 left these classic shades, and already our brethren are found in almost every State and Territory of this great republic, doing good service in the cause of religion, of education, and of freedom. If time permitted, it would be a pleasure to take our triennial catalogue and trace the fortunes of the successive classes. But it is not my intention on this festive occasion to consume much of your time. I shall only furnish you with a few statistics, which may serve as text to some who may follow me.

The university has already furnished 10 Presidents of colleges; one of whom has deceased, and three have retired upon their laurels, and 36 professors of colleges, of whom 25 are now in active service;—35 academies and classical schools are at the present time supplied with principals from our body, and more than 140 are now employed as teachers in our various institutions;—35 are members of the bar, and about 20 are disciples of Esculapius; 179 are ministers of the Gospel, of whom 130 are members of Conference, and 19 are of other denominations.

The members of Conference are distributed as follows:—

New England Conferences,	43
New York and New York East,	23
Troy and Black River,	11
Conferences in Western New York,	16
Baltimore, Ohio and Philadelphia,	7
Southern Conferences,	7
Western Conferences,	17
California, Liberia and China,	6

We have, therefore, in the New England Conferences, 43; New York patronizing Conferences, 36; other Conferences, 45; Foreign, 6.

The alumni of all the different professions are, as far as we have been able to ascertain, located as follows:—

Connecticut,	64
Massachusetts,	60
Other New England States,	37
In New England,	161
New York,	135
Other Middle States,	31
In Middle States,	166

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

This body held its last Session in Huntsville, Ala., Bishop Andrew presiding.—Bishop Soule was also present. Action on a Biblical Institute, laid over, as our readers have been informed, from last year, was taken formally. We quote from the Nashville C. Advocate:—

This day having been set apart for the consideration of the report on Ministerial Education, made last year by the Committee on Education, the following substitute was offered by the Rev. Dr. Rivers, President of the Florence Wesleyan University, and, after a protracted discussion, was adopted by a large majority, viz:

"Whereas, The General Conference of 1854 recommended to the colleges and schools under our care, the establishment of a department of Biblical Literature and Ecclesiastical History, as a part of the regular course of study:

"Resolved, That the Tennessee Annual Conference cordially approve the recommendation, as being in conformity with the course pursued by Mr. Wesley, Bishops Coke and Asbury, and in harmony with the usage of the primitive Church from the apostolic age and as being calculated to produce a well-indoctrinated and stable membership, and an intelligent and useful ministry; and will cooperate in an endeavor to establish one or more such departments of instruction.

"Resolved, That such departments of sacred learning should be so endowed that no charge shall be made for the instructions therein imparted, either to regular course students, or irregulars, who may receive instruction in those departments only.

"Resolved, That an agent be appointed to secure the necessary endowment fund, under the direction of a committee of five, who shall have power to regulate the agent's compensation and general mode of action, and to determine the location and connection of the proposed chair or department, and, in connection with the trustees of such institution as they may select, to appoint a professor; and to put the department into operation when they may deem it expedient to do so.

"Resolved, That it is not intended by this action to favor, either directly or indirectly, the establishment of a theological school, nor to make the course of biblical literature exclusive, but to have it a part of the regular course."

On motion of Dr Rivers, the following brethren, A. [illegible] Green, J. B. West, G. D. Taylor, J. W. Hann[illegible] and J. W. Allen, were appointed as the committee contemplated in the resolutions in reference to the establishment of a Department of Biblical Literature and Ecclesiastical History. Upon inquiry made of Dr. Rivers, he stated that the Florence Wesleyan University was modelled as far as practicable after the Virginia University, and that a student can pursue a regular course and be graduated in any department, without reference to attendance on the others. It may be added here, the commitee stated informally that they had determined to connect the proposed department with the Florence Wesleyan University.

At the missionary Anniversary $1200 were raised; at the Tract, $300. There has been a decrease in membership on the whole—though an increase of whites.

REVIVALS.

Homer, La., Oct. 12, 1856.

Religion is gaining ground in the Circuit. Bro. Watkins, with the local preachers, has been laboring hard, and with great success. Since the last statement I made you, many have been added to the church. We have had a very interesting Camp-Meeting, at which about fifteen were converted. Considerable interest is felt upon the subject of politics, but there is no confliction between that and religion. The general determination seems to be, to vote for the strongest Southern man.

Armageddon is creating a good deal of interest in the prophecies. It appears to be in general favor. At any rate the opinion is, that if his interpretations are correct, his arguments are hard to refute. Brownlow is at work, and with his tremendous sledge, is smashing away at that "Wheel." In our town where the "Iron wheel" was extensively circulated, a proposition has been made to withdraw them all from the public, if the Methodists will but agree to lock up Brownlow.

The weather is now very warm, and appearance of rain. I hear of very little sickness.

Court has been in session nearly two months. The great Clements case, growing out of a runaway match, has occupied most of its time.

SILVICOLA.

Carthage Circuit,
Miss. Conference, Oct. 25, 1856.

In connection with the local brethren, we have received into the church forty-nine; we trust "such as shall be saved." Bro's Fryer, S. Wells, and Father Isaac Wells, have been among the most efficient, especially the latter, whose history and that of Methodism are about commensurate in this region; he has by "reason of strength" neared four-score, and has faithfully during the past summer, "borne the heat and burden of the day," as he loves all, and by all greatly beloved. When raised to the church triumphant he will be missed, but "his works will follow him." The reception of members into full connection, the sacrament, and the adjustment of several church difficulties, have received attention. Our P. E., Bro. Harris, has been with us regularly, spent five days on his last visit, and is generally beloved.

JNO. J. CLARK.

Bastrop, La. Con., Sept. 22, 1856.

We have held four protracted meetings at different points on the Circuit, including in all 24 days. Some 20 accessions and several happy conversions, with the church much revived. We had some precious times—blessings right from the Lord,

J. PIPES.

Plaquemine, La., Oct. 31, 1856.

We have just closed a protracted meeting on Bayou Poydras, where we were greatly blessed, and a church established. Our second quarterly meeting was held there in June, and we received six into the church; we were assisted by Bro. Crenshaw of Baton Rouge. Bro's Keener and Susat were with us at this last, and did good work. We received nineteen whites and eight colored, on probation, giving at that place twenty-five whites; and we believe a more steady and promising community cannot be found. We believe there were some seven or eight converted. To God be all the glory.

H. AVERY.

New Iberia Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

The third quarterly meeting for the New Iberia Circuit, came off on the 4th and 5th inst. at Perry's Bridge. The P. E. was present, in the spirit of his work, and in addition to his services, we had with us Bro. Alexander of Opelousas, and Dr. Fontain of AuLarge Mission. The meeting was commenced in good earnest and continued in the same spirit until Tuesday evening, during which time, twenty persons professed conversion, and an accession of fourteen to the church, the other six belonging to the church previously. The last evening of the meeting was truly a glorious time. The congregation was small, it having rained all the evening. When mourners were invited to the altar, every sinner in the house, amounting to eight, came forward, and in less than two hours, the last of the number was converted.

During the meeting, we received in subscription and cash, $147 35. The best collection I ever saw, all things considered.

J. W. WATERS.

California.

The California Christian Advocate contains the following:

A camp-meeting was held by Rev. Mr. Fulton, of the M. E. Church, South, in Buckner's neighborhood, on the upper Stockton road, some 14 miles south of Sacramento city.

The meeting commenced on the 22 ult., and continued two weeks. The attendance was not large, but those who came behaved well and listened most attentively to the ministry of the word. As the result of the meeting, ten souls experienced the blessing of pardon. The members of the church present sought earnestly for a deeper work of grace, and were greatly blessed and strengthened of the Lord.

A tent, fifteen feet wide and sixty feet in length, was pitched upon the ground and used as a preaching place at night. Meals were furnished free to all in attendance, to meet the expense of which a collection was taken up at the meeting.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South:

Gaston Colored Mission, Ala. Conf.

I now send you the report of the state of this Mission for the third quarter of the current year. I have on the Mission 6 appointments, all filled on Sabbath, 75 members in full connection; 30 probationary members; 175 children catechised; baptised 35 children and 12 adults. I preach to some ten or twelve hundred persons, several have professed faith in Christ. There is work enough in this region of country to employ several Missionaries, if owners of negroes only felt, as they should, their responsibility to God. Much more might be accomplished by the Missionary now in this field of labor, if he could have the hearty co-operation of the patrons; but alas, there is a fearful amount of discord where there should be a united effort upon the part of all. Some of the planters are highly pleased, and will do all they can to sustain the Mission. The sons of Ham, fully appreciate the worth of the Gospel to themselves and families; and I do think if their owners withhold it from them, they will be guilty before God. This Mission ought to succeed. It is interesting and doing well. But will the patrons sustain the Missionary? Here is the point. "You may preach to, and catechise my negroes, but I will not pay any thing for it." I have received $22 50 all told. Some will do their duty, others will not. Well, they must settle that account with God.

T. Y. ARMSTRONG.

Pickens County, Alabama Conference.

We have had good times on the Sipsey Mission this year. The Lord has revived his work at every appointment but one, and we have an appointment out for a protracted meeting at that, and expect a good work. At Shilo, we had a good meeting, 25 professed religion 29 accessions, and about 20 got a home. The other meetings were good, and many professed and were added to the church. 25 children baptized this quarter, and many adults; and thank God I have not had to go into Jordan this year, notwithstanding John's folk's are all round me, and armed with Grave's iron wheel, or more correctly speaking, his lying wheel. I think when he published that work the devil shot breech foremost.

JULIUS N. GLOVER.

Putting the System Together.

"I am a Universalist," said a boasting fellow, "and you orthodox are not fair in saying that our system is inconsistent with reason," as he addressed one who held an opposite system. "But I will prove the irrationality of your system," said his friend. "You believe that Christ died for all men?" "Yes." "You don't believe there is a hell?" "No." "No punishment hereafter?" "No; men are punished for their sins in this life."

"Now, put your 'rational' system together, if you can. It is just this, that Christ died to save all men from nothing at all! Not from hell, because there is none; not from punishment in the future state of being, for he receives his whole punishment in this life. Yours is the maniac effort of seeing a man on dry land, in no danger of being drowned, and at an immense expense, throwing to him ropes and life preservers. What glaring absurdity! Your boasted religion is stark infidelity! If you believed the Bible, you would believe as I do."

Peter's and Paul's Tears.—Many extol Peter's tears; give me Paul's. Peter's tears were of penitence; Paul's were of kindness. Peter's tears were good; Paul's better. Peter's were shed for his own sin and misery; Paul's for the sin and misery of others. Peter's were the tears of a sinner; Paul's those of a saint—the same as Christ's tears were when he beheld Jerusalem—such tears as God puts in his bottle. Oh, to be daily such a weeper!

Dr. Bell's Opinion of Hostetter's Bitters.—Shawneetown, Ill., April 4th, 1856.—Some months since, while recovering from an attack of Remittent fever, I was requested to try Hostetter's Bitters, as an article peculiarly suited to the condition of convalescents from fever. It is but simple justice to say that it restored the powers of my digestive organs, and at the same time kept my bowels gently open. I have no hesitancy in saying, that hitherto, in using it in my practice, it has in every case where I have ordered it, acted like a charm. In thus speaking freely of it, I far, from puff a patent medicine, an article ill by no means claims to be.

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia and Piles.—Philadelphia, March 1, 1853.—Dr. C. M. Jackson.—Dear Sir: For the past two years I have been severely afflicted with the Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia and Piles, suffering constantly the pains and inconvenience attendant upon such complaints, without energy, being scarcely able to attend to my business. I used a great deal of medicine, with no apparent change, until I used your "Hoofland's German Bitters." They have entirely cured me. I am now entirely free from pain and ache of any kind, and feel like a new man in every respect, and unhesitatingly recommend your Bitters to all invalids. Yours, respectfully,

JOHN R. CORY, 12 Lagrange Place.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE WORK OF GOD IN FAYETTE DIST., MISS. CONF.

VARIOUS CIRCUITS—MEETINGS—SINGING MEN AND WOMEN—EFFECT OF PREACHING HOLINESS IN PROMOTING REVIVALS.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—I have now completed my fourth round on this District for the cutent year, except attending the quarterly meetings on Georgetown and Bayou Pierre Circuits, and present reports from the Brethren in charge of those Circuits, enable me to give an encouraging account of the work there. Brother Ercanbrock reports that between eighty and one hundred have been added to the Church on the Georgetown Circuit; about one hundred and twelve converted or reclaimed, and several have obtained the blessing of entire sanctification, while many others are earnestly seeking to be "cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," that they may "perfect holiness in the fear of God."

Brother Johnson, of Bayou Pierre Circuit, reports up to the 17th inst., that, during the previous eight weeks, over seventy whites had been converted, and a sufficient number of blacks to bring the aggregate number up to one hundred; about thirty-five widles, and as many colored members had been admitted on probation; several well marked cases of sanctification had occurred, which had encouraged many others to seek that higher state of gospel holiness.

We held the fourth quarterly meeting on Coles Creek Circuit at Bettegrove which continued four days, and was made a great blessing to the more spiritual members of the church, but I regret to say, we have had no special revival on this Circuit the present year.

Bro. A. B. Nicholson gives a good report of several churches on Scotland Circuit, especially Sweet water, where they were enjoying a good revival some weeks ago. We had our fourth quarterly meeting for this Circuit at Bethesda, which was protracted through the week, and was a profitable time to the membership, but the nett proceeds did not come up to our anticipations.

At the Otoposa Camp-Meeting on Pearl River Circuit, we had a time of spiritual joy and holy triumph. God was with his people of a truth. Including some reclamations about forty were converted, ten or twelve professed to be "cleansed from all sin," and to be "filled with all the fullness of God." Thirty-five whites, and eighteen colored members were admitted on trial.

My next quarterly meeting was at Darlington, on Helena Circuit, and lasted four days. It was a seasons of high religious enjoyment to the faithful few. The congregation was very attentive to the word preached, and on several occasions there was a general feeling of tenderness, and several earnest seekers appeared again and again at the altar, but none professed to find peace in believing, that I am aware of. The most encouraging of the meeting was a manifest determination among the members to seek after more personal holiness, and a more universal conformity of heart and life to the precepts of the gospel. I felt such unction and faith in preaching at that meeting, I cannot believe our labor was in vain. Some will yet rise up to bless God that they were there.

I left Darlington on the 14th inst. and discoursed to an attentive little congregation in Liberty that evening. My next and last appointment was at Adam's Camp-Meeting on Amite Circuit. We commenced on Friday evening the 17th inst., and the meeting increased in interest and spiritual triumphs to the last. The deep solemnity and tender emotions which pervaded the congregation while you were preaching on Monday, more fully appeared during the afternoon and night services in the form of many clearly marked conversions. The last report from the altar on Monday night, and what I saw on Tuesday morning, satisfied me that most, if not all the "mourners in Zion" had already obtained "beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning." That sort of material appearing scarce, at eleven o'clock, an additional sermon was preached to the Church, on the doctrine of sanctification, and the experimental phase of the subject was presented to the believer's view. God sanctioned his own saving and sanctifying truth, and seeing that many in the congregation were all a thirst for full redemption in the blood of Jesus, they were invited to kneel in the altar and unitedly seek it. The altar was soon crowded, and great earnestness was manifested by many to obtain at once this higher state of redeeming grace. Several brethren and sisters who already enjoyed the blessing of perfect love, now came into the altar, and by their songs, prayers, and exhortations, encouraged this new class of seekers to believe, and enter at once into the rich inheritance of salvation from all sin, and the bliss of loving God with all the heart. The earnest struggle became more intense, until many were prostrated in the altar like men slain in battle, and the rigid muscles, the icy hand, and pallied countenance, told that the work of the sanctifying Spirit was powerful within. The glorious result was that many professed to be cleansed from all in-bred sin, and to realize "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

I would be glad to relate many thrilling incidents connected with our revivals, illustrative of the awakening, converting, and sanctifying grace of God, but neither my time, nor your space will permit it at present.

There is one feature in our revivals this year in this District, that excites our gratitude to God, and renews our confidence in the stability and future success of our branch of the general church. I refer to the reappearance, not only in the pulpit, but also in the hearts of the people, of the truly evangelical doctrine of Christian perfection, as set forth by our standard authors, and heretofore verified in the experience of so many of our most trustworthy members. Let the church be as holy in her ministry and membership as the Bible requires her to be, and her glorious and triumphant march will be onward to the "perfect day."

In some portions of our Zion we have a pretty fair supply of preachers, but very few laborers. This however, with but few exceptions, is not the case on this District. Most of our preachers both traveling and local, as well as our licensed exhorters, are willing and successful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Many also of our lay members, both male and female, have been of great service in our revivals, especially about the altar, and in select prayermeetings in the woods and elsewhere. Honorable mention should also be made of our "singing men and women." Such is the excellence and usefullness in this department, that I cannot doubt their Divine call to the work, and I trust they will never be disobedient to the heavenly calling. It is a relief greatly appreciated by the weary preacher, when he "brings the battle to the gate," to have the singing taken off his hands by such sweet singers in Israel as we had at our late Camp-Meetings. To hear them late at night after we had retired to rest, as they struck up some heavenly chorus over some newly converted soul, was well calculated to lanke one—

"Sink in blissful dreams away,
And visions of eternity day."

Yours affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, AGAIN.

Mr. Editor: During a brief visit to Jackson, La., on the 9th inst., I made sundry observations and inquiries relative to the prospects of Centenary College, and respectfully ask space enough in the Advocate, to call the attention of our friends generally to a few interesting facts.

1st. The College never opened with more flattering prospects as to the number of students. I was there the fourth day of the Session, and President Miller informed me that there were as many students then on the ground as they had on the 1st of January, last Session. Professor A. G. Miller also told me that he had already an addition of thirty new students from abroad, in the Preparatory Department.

2nd. I have heard several who have graduated in the earlier days of the College, regret that the course of study was not more extensive and thorough than it then was. I am happy in saying that this evil, then perhaps unavoidable, is now remedied, and there is a determination on the part of the Faculty to make good scholars of all who pass the graduating point. If any are found who will not apply themselves so as to stand a respectable examination in all their studies, they must content themselves to be kept back, or quietly return to their homes. Let this resolution be faithfully carried out, and hereafter every one who can show a Diploma from Centenary College, will thereby exhibit prima facie evidence of good scholarship.

3rd. I was gratified to learn that the number of students from the French population of Louisiana was steadily increasing. Their parents and guardians, seeing that the Anglo-Saxon language and literature are predominant in our country, have determined to enlarge the social pleasure and usefulness of their sons and wards, by giving them an education suitable to the age and country in in which they are to figure in after life.

4th. I was delighted to see how rapidly the great Centre Building had advanced during vacation. The workmen were getting quite up with the third story, and the whole superstructure looked about as substantial as good brick and mortar well put together could make it.

And now, Brother McTyeire, I have got to the concluding point, upon which I wish to emphatize a little. President Miller informed me, that, in addition to money and subscriptions already obtained, we would need need thirteen thousand dollars more to complete the building. In view of this our friends everywhere are affectionately requested to help us with any amount they may feel willing to give. Any member of the Joint Board of Trustees, or any one of our itinerant preachers will receive it at their hands, and transmit it to the Treasurer. Or perhaps the better and more expeditious way of contributing to this noble enterprise, would be for the donor to draw a draft on his merchant made payable to J. C. Miller, Treasurer of Centenary College, or his order, and send the same to him by mail or otherwise at Jackson, La.

The Building committee will have a heavy installment to pay to the Contractors the first of January next, and to raise the required sum, they are dependant on our friends who have subscribed, and others who may have the means and feel willing to aid in advancing the educational interest of our beloved country.

I hope our friends who may see this notice will be liberal and prompt in this time of need. J. G. JONES.

ALABAMA BONDS.

We observe (says the Columbus Inquirer) "in the commercial and financial advices by the Arabia, that the bonds of the State of Alabama are quoted at 81 a 83 in the London market. There must be some mistake about this, as the State of Alabama has been in the market, by her agents, endeavoring to buy up these bonds for redemption before the time of their maturity, and has been willing to pay considerably more for them than the above quotations, without being able to buy them in. The State, too, has never failed to meet the interest promptly as it fell due, and has always utterly repudiated any thought of repudiation. Her means of redeeming the bonds are ample and already provided for, and she is desirous of purchasing them before maturity.

Several of our State securities are quoted higher than the British consols in the English markets, and the bonds of the United States are quoted as high as 104 a 105. The American securities of least value in this table are Pennsylvania 5s at 74 a 76. We remember that at one time during the late war with Russia, Russian bonds were quoted higher than British consols in London, and 'Uncle Sam' as usual, was at the head of the securities.

The Queen and the Minister.—There is a piece of gossip in England to the effect that Lord Palmerston, without consulting the Queen, appointed Rev. Mr. Trench, the author of a book of poems and translations from Calderon, to the Bishopric of Durham, but the Queen, on reading the appointment in the papers, sent for Palmerston, "snubbed" him soundly, and canceled the appointment. The Queen has since appointed Mr. Trench Dean of Westminister, as successor to the late Dr. Buckland.

The reported seizure of Galatz by 4,000 Austrians, was not true. Affairs in the Turkish settlement are progressing slowly, but, on the whole satisfactorily.

OTHER CHURCHES.

M. E. church, North.—Itineracy and Methodist Episcopacy, work well:

Bishop Simpson, in a sermon before the Rock River Conference, said: That, during four years and a half in which he had exercised episcopal functions, he had, after counseling with his official advisers, stationed nearly four thousand preachers; and, though many of these were sent to places in which they were subjected to great privations as well as labor, and some even to violence from mobs, only one had refused to go to his appointment; and this under circumstances that the bishop could not in his heart censure him. This shows most strikingly the pervading spirit of the Methodist itineracy.

Presbyterian.—The New School Presbyterian Synod of Virginia.—The Synod of Virginia, embracing the States of Maryland and Virginia and the District of Columbia, met last week at Shepherdstown, Va. A large number of ministers were present, and among other business transacted, they recommended the 20th of November as a day of Thanksgiving. They also named the city of Washington, D. C., and the third Wednesday of October, 1857, as the time and place of their next assembly.

In response to an address from the Synod of Mississippi and the Presbytery of Hanover they adopted a report, of which the following extract furnishes the substance:

"The Synod of Virginia agrees in sentiment with their brethren of the Synod of Mississippi, that the agitation of the subject of slavery in the Church—and it may be added in the State—has been productive of much evil. In our judgment this agitation is not only calculated to alienate the North from the South, but it also interferes, to some extent, with the Southern ministry in the discharge of their duties to the colored population.

"We have reason to believe that one result of this discussion in our branch of the church has been a general concurrence in the opinion that slaveholding is not a sin per se—a principle that lies at the foundation of the extremes of Northern Abolitionists. Our General Assembly, in its action on the subject of slavery, has virtually repudiated the idea that slaveholding is essentially sinful."

The following resolution was also adopted on the subject:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of the Synod, no necessity exists, in the present state of the church, for further action on the part of the Southern Synod.

The report and resolution were adopted with unanimity, and the Synod and the body adjourned.

It is now twenty-one years (says the Witness,) since the O. S. Synod of Mississippi held its first meeting, which took place in the city of Natchez. It then embraced the States of Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, and was composed of twenty ministers, numbering in these three States less than 1000 church members. The territory which the Synod then embraced has now 122 ministers and over 10,000 church members. In this estimate we do not count those who have died, nor those who have removed to some other portion of the church. Nor do we count any but those who are in full membership.

Congregationalists.—The College versus the Pulpit.—The Congregationalist complains of the draft which is making upon the ranks of the ministry by the election of several of the most effective and useful pastors to chairs in Theological schools, colleges, etc., saying that "Andover has three professors who would be the special joy of any pulpit which could win their services. Harvard has lately subsidized one of the very foremost pulpit orators of the North. Amherst has taken Dr. Stearns from Cambridge, and Prof. Haven from Brookline. Bangor has taken Mr. Harris from Pittsfield, and the Theological Seminary at New York has taken Prof. Hitchcock, whose announcement here will fill the largest house in the city uncomfortably full. And now we see that the College in Iowa has elected the Rev Dr. Palmer, of Albany, to its highest chair, and the college in California has invited Dr. Bushnell to be its President; while we suppose it is no longer a secret that the Theological Seminary at Chicago is preparing to make a serious draft upon the pulpits of both East and West, in order to set up its own tabernacle of instruction."

Protestant Episcopal.—At the triennial meeting of the "General Protestant Episcopal Sunday School Union," held last week in Philadelphia, the present condition and needs of the Union were fully made known and discussed; and the members of the Society, both bishops, clergy, and laity, resolved to give it effectual aid toward carrying on its most important work. Nearly $15,000 were subscribed at the time, with a promise of additional aid in the city of Philadelphia. By advice of the bishops, it was determined to hold public meetings in the Society's behalf in the cities, so as to place the affairs of the Union on a secure basis for the future.

The Back Track.—The Hamburg news contains a letter from Berlin, which gives the following rather improbable piece of intelligence: "Some of the Minutes of the General Conference of the Lutheran communities, which took place in May last, have just been published. It results from them that the Conference was of opinion that auricular confession should be re-established, and that the clergymen should be invested with the power of pronouncing excommunications."

Gen. D'Orgoni (a Frenchman) is in Paris with a suite, as special envoy from the King of Ava to the Emperor Napoleon.

Petition against the Unlading of Vessels and Steamboats on the Sabbath.—A petition signed by a very large number of our most influential mercantile firms, by the lessee of one of our wharves, several steamboat Captains, quite a number of our Councilmen and other citizens has been presented to our Council. The petition will elicit considerable opposition, through it is sustained by the most cogent reasons. It is alleged that the discharges on Sunday are generally made under the supervision of the Harbor master, and in the business season, the passage ways left open on Sunday are entirely blocked up on the Sabbath, so that there is difficulty Monday, for Merchants to approach boats with freight or reach their own consignments; that produce, to its serious detriment, has been compelled to lie for days upon the wharf; and that the capacity of our draymen is not sufficient to do mere that haul away what is discharged in six days.

On the other hand, it is said that the change proposed would vitiate the contract with the lessee of the wharves, and induce law suits in which the City would be involved.

There are other issues involved in this question, which will present themselves to the reader that are of great weight.

Sad Occurrence.—The Coroner held an inquest on Wednesday, on the body of Pierre Mathieu, a young Frenchman, about 20 years of age. His death occurred under the following circumstances: He started with some of his friends on Saturday night, on a hunting excursion, with the intention of camping out on the Metarie Ridge at night, and shooting on Sunday morning. Just as it got dark the deceased was attacked by a bull which tossed him on the ground and was goring him when he cried out to one of his comrades to shoot the animal, but unfortunately it was too dark for his friend to take aim with precision, and instead of the bull being shot, young Mathieu received the charge in his right side. He was brought home, when he expired the night before last.

The Commissioners for settling the new boundary line in Bessarabia had nearly completed their work. In a few days they would reach Tornia and the Pruth, and it was said that the English and French Commissioners, after arriving at Tornia, would await at Reni instructions from Paris relative to the subject of Belgrade. COMMERCIAL.

Wednesday Morning, Nov. 5, 1856.

COTTON....We stated in our last review that the market closed on Friday languid, as figures hardly say to previous quotations. There was no material change in Saturday, when the sales were confined to 2000 bales at fertile prices. On Monday, however, buyers came forward with rather more spirit and the sales summed up 7000 bales, while yesterday the Canadian's accounts, reporting sales of 60,000 bales at Liverpool during the previous three days at an advance of ⅛@⅜d., gave an additional impulse to the demand, and 7000 bales were taken at full prices compared with previous rates, but without any quotable advance. Thus the sales for the three days amount to 14,500 bales.

The receipts since the 31st ult. comprise 26,000 bales, against 27,482 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 5221 (3416 to foreign ports and 1805 coastwise,) embracing 3416 to Liverpool, 1275 to Boston and 530 to New York, leaving on hand a stock of 215,602 bales, against 184,567 bales same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 254,016 bales against 208,236 same time last year—showing a decrease of 5800 bales. The decrease at all the ports up to the latest dates reported, is 9027 bales, (509,466 against 548,493.) Referring to our remarks as above we repeat our quotations as follows:

NEW, ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Assimilating to that of Liverpool.

Inferior	—@—	Middling	11¼@11⅝
Ordinary	10¾@10⅞	Good Middling	12 @12⅜
Good Ordinary	11 @11⅛	Middling Fair	12⅝@12⅞
Low Middling	11¼@11⅜	Fair	13 @13⅛

TOBACCO....The market has been quite stagnant during the past three days, and we have not heard of a sale of any moment. We report our previous quotations as follows:—Factory Lugs —@9¼; Planters' 9@10; Inferior to Common Leaf 10¼@10¾; Fair 11¼@12; Fine 12½@13; Choice and Selections, 14@15; Rich, heavy Clarksville, etc, 17@18. Received since the 31st ult. 71 hhds. Exported 16.

COFFEE.....The demand has continued moderate without any material change in rates, the sales of the week are 900 bags on Saturday at 8c for Ordinary and 10¾@11¼c for Fair to Prime; 900 on Monday at above the same ranges and 1583 yesterday embracing 350 at 8¾c, 1200 at 10¾, and 600 at 10¾, making a total of 2650 bags. There have been no further arrivals.

FLOUR.....The market being but poorly supplied with Superfine, the bulk of the receipts being Extra, and there being some prospect of the receipts being enlarged by the lower freights ruling from St. Louis, holders have advanced their pretensions, but the sales indicate only a slight improvement, embracing 1500 on Saturday, including 600 bbls Superfine at $5 at $5 50; Unimproved Fancy at $ 60 a 7 10; Family at $7 75 a 8; Louisa at $7 87½; 150 Fancy at $ 50; 300 Extra Illinois at $ 75; 200 at $ 80; and 100 Choice Extra at $ 00; 2000 on Monday, embracing 100 bbls Superfine St. Louis at $ 87½; 100 at $ 00; 300 Fancy at $ 50; and 600 Extra at $ 75, including 200 Superfine St. Louis and 1000 Fancy at $ 00, and 150 Choice Extra at $ 75, making an aggregate for the three days of 4000 bbls. We also noticed some small sales of Ohio & K. brand yesterday at $ 00. Received since the 31st ult. 9,000 bbls. Exported 3745, including 1150 to Havana, 515 to Mexico, 300 to Galveston and 230 to Indianola and Fort Lavaca.

[illegible] Co., Miss., on the 21st August, in Lauderdale [illegible] HARRIET JANE MORGANS, [illegible] daughter of Joel and Nancy Graham. Mrs. [illegible] died after a few weeks [illegible] old. She was born in S. Carolina, Newberry [illegible] the 16th of October, 1826. She be- [illegible] the Methodist Church when [illegible] years of age and always maintain- [illegible] character. She was married to [illegible] December the 7th, 1847, in [illegible] by the appointment of [illegible] was sent to the [illegible] Circuit, which was a year of trial to [illegible] and also a year of much suffering, both mor- [illegible] But by grace of God sustained [illegible] she always considered that year a bless- [illegible] on all, she saw the hand of the Lord in pro- [illegible] for the duties and privations of an itinerant's life, and for usefulness in the Church. Thus she was brought to see and feel the impor- tance of the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, which she sought earnestly until in the spring of '51 she was enabled by the grace of God, through Christ Jesus, to bring all to the altar of consecra- tion, and the Spirit bore witness with her spirit that the offering was accepted, and she was filled with the fullness of God. From that time until her death she possessed and enjoyed the blessing of perfect love.

By the providence of God and the economy of the Church, we were sent again, in 1855, to Lau- derdale Circuit, and in '56 re-appointed to the same work, where she enjoyed good health until the 9th of August, the time of the sitting of the third Quarterly Conference, an occasion to which she looked with more than ordinary interest.—The meeting was near her place of residence; it commenced on Friday morning. She was there, and enjoyed the first day's privilege, and rejoiced in God her Saviour. Saturday she was sick, and not able to go; but was resigned to her Heavenly Father's will. Her sickness, for the first three days, did not seem at all alarming, though medi- cal aid was called. But on the evening of the fourth day she became worse, and seemed to have a presentiment of her death; but without the least alarm. She talked about death without ex- citement requesting that her burial clothes should be prepared; and conversed about death and the grave, and Heaven, and of parting with her hus- band and children, with such calmness as is seldom witnessed—frequently requesting those present to sing praise to God, she herself joining in the sing- ing. For several days before she died she expect- ed each day to be the last, speaking to all the friends that visited her about Heaven and glory. Calling for her three children, one by one, com- mencing with the oldest, and, kissing the dear little babe, she commended it and the two older ones to the protection of Almighty God; then sent messages to her mother and brothers and sisters, in Alabama, requesting them to meet her in Hea- ven. For years she prayed that when she should be called to die, she might be permitted to die in her senses, often expressing her confidence that her request in this would be granted. But her suffering and the nature of the disease greatly af- fected her mind. This gave anxiety to her hus- band and the friends present. Her mind was so much affected that she was out of it for two days. But the Lord heard prayer. In the morning of the thirteenth day her mind again became steady and composed, and she requested those present to sing the hymn—

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand, &c."

She joined, and sang the entire hymn as clear as she ever sang, and with a degree of sweetness that seemed to be more of Heaven than of earth. After which she requested to be raised up; which was done, and she sat up in the bed, and spoke to all the friends present with such enraptured views of Heaven and the glories of the New Jerusalem, and those she expected to meet there. Speaking of her father, who had died two years and a half before, and of her own little babe Joel Perry, who had died two years before her, said she would soon be with them: the writer has often seen her happy and heard her speak of the love of God, and of Heaven, but never with such a flow of heavenly eloquence; a halo of glory seemed to fill the room where she was, and all present praised the Lord. For the last hour of her stay on earth she did not speak; but prayer was answered—she died in her sainted calmly fell asleep in Jesus her Saviour, to wait the call of the Archangel to awake her dust to life. Truly, there seemed to be more of God and Heaven there than the writer ever realized anywhere else. The numbers of friends that were present all shouted the high praises of Almighty God!

That her triumphant death may be sanctified to bringing all those who witnessed it to the same happy end, is the earnest prayer of her sorrowful and bereft.

HUSBAND.

The Southern Christian Advocate will please copy.

The death of Miss MARY E. ROSS occurred on the 19th of last August, after an illness of eight- een days, at the residence of J. G. Jones, of Jef- ferson Co., Miss.

After her father's death, Mary was placed—as her father had directed in his will—in charge of her uncle, Rev. John G. Jones, who, with his ex- cellent lady, used their utmost diligence to train her up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; her intellectual culture was well provided for.—She graduated with honor, at the Fayette Female Academy, in the summer of 1854; after which she taught with great acceptability, till near the time of her death, in the Port Gibson Collegiate Insti- tute. Here she made many friends by excellent conduct as a teacher, and exemplary character as a Christian. Her religious course began in her eleventh year. At that early age she became a member of the M. E. Church, at Belle Grove Church. About two years after this she tasted the pardoning love of God; but, while at school the three following years she lost much of her re- ligious enjoyment. At a Camp-meeting soon after her return from school, she was graciously restor- ed to former peace; so great was the blessing then bestowed, that she dated her conversion from that time. From the hour of this re-baptism especial- ly, she walked humbly with her God, serving Him in spirit and in truth, as she had time and oppor- tunity. During her last sickness she told her be- loved uncle, while watching by her bedside, that she did not enjoy as much of the sensible comforts of religion as she wished; but soon added, and several times after repeated, that she was not afraid to die. She saw, or thought she saw, her mother (long since dead) by her bedside, whom, addressing, she said, "Why, mother, is that you? Yes, I know that is you, mother! I am not afraid of you, mother! I know you have come for me, mother!" Doubtless her sainted mother had come at the bidding of God to escort to her home in Heaven. Soon before her death she spoke of hearing music, sweet music. In her last moments her Redeemer was all her hope and all her salva- tion. Among her last words were: "Oh! blessed Lord Jesus." In her death the church has lost a good member, her lone brother a true sister, and her uncle and aunt an obedient ward. To you her relatives now bereaved, but comforted, we would say, what though your "lone Dove," as you were wont to call her, has taken her flight to the paradise of God, and you see her no more, remember this, that, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." All this is true of her whom you have mourned, for we can say, in the language of my little daugh- ter, who has since joined her in Heaven, in a pri- vate journal kept by her:—"She was a Christian, and died happy."

J. L. FORSYTH.

October 10th, 1856.

DIED—1st October, 1856, in Sunflower county, Miss., HORATIO S. COLE. He professed religion and joined the M. E. Church in August, 1843, in Virginia, under the ministry of the Rev. John Rich. In 1846 he removed with his family to Mississippi, and was licensed to exhort on the Coffeeville Circuit, Memphis Conference. At the time of his death he was an exhorter and steward, an effective one too, on the Sidon Mission, Miss. Conference. He died after a short but painful illness, greatly beloved by the community.

His religion like all his virtues was of the solid rather than of the showy order. The writer, as his pastor, was intimately acquainted with his religious experience for the past two years, and can say that he was as near faultless as any man with whom he has ever been acquainted. His life was a practical illustration of Christianity; his death a glorious commentary on his life. He lived and died like faithful Abraham, "strong in faith, giving glory to God." In his conflict with the last enemy he hung his hope and his all upon the promises of God, and died in sight of heaven. He repeated again and again the words of the Saviour—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." O, what a glorious leave-taking of this world of sorrow and temptation was his! what a blessed testimony has he left behind to us, who with him have received "like precious faith." And now while we de- plore the loss to the Church and to the communi- ty, we rejoice to know that he is safe, forever safe in the bosom of his Saviour. No doubt, ere this, ranks of the shining ones have conducted him safely to the mansions on high; and why should we mourn while our loss has been his eternal gain.

Bro. Cole was buried with Masonic honors, of which fraternity he was a prominent member.

EDWARD MORTIMER.

Memphis Advocate please copy.

DIED—In Cayuga, Miss., on the 19th of Sept. 1856, Mrs. SARAH JANE, wife of H. Foote Esq., and daughter of Thomas Fisher, dec'd, of Mercer county, Kentucky.

Mrs. FOOTE was for several years previous to death, a consistent member of the Methodist Church. She was naturally of a retiring and dif- fident disposition, and made no parade about her religion, but in her daily walk and department, was a sincere and devoted Christian. On Sabbath morning, three days previous to her death, she called her husband and children to her bed-side and told them all to meet her in heaven, asking for her hymn book, and selecting the following hymn to be sung at her grave.

What is there here to court my stay,
To hold me back from home,
While angels beckon me away,
And Jesus bids me come?

She then made all her preparations for death and talked calmly of heaven and heavenly things. When told by her husband that she ought not to distress herself by talking of her death, she remarked "while I am calm and free from pain is the proper time to talk of these things, and not to wait until fever and delirium seize upon my brain." On the same day, at night, she requested that Bro. Wiley should be sent for to pray with, and for her, which was done. Soon after the praying and singing was over, she swooned away and lay to all appearances as breathing her last, her pulse growing weaker, and less frequent every moment, and all present supposed her to be dying. While in this condition she sung a song (which she evidently composed as she sung) of angelic sweetness; and full of holy rapture and joy; in which were blended her prayers for her husband and her children, and her longings for holiness and heaven. Many were present, and all were struck with the heaven born melody of the song.

For several hours after this she lay gasping for breath. Suddenly she revived and was then un- conscious that she had sung at all. On the next morning she said, "last night I went to the outer courts of heaven and asked for a band of Angels to take me home; an answer was returned that my petition was granted, but now I must go back to earth and suffer awhile." And truly after this she did suffer the most intense physical agony. At times her pains seemed almost too excruciating to bear without causing instant death.

During these sufferings she knew no one, not even her husband—but strange to relate whenever the name of Jesus was spoken, she answered promptly. In the wildest delirium of pain she never failed to answer to his name. A few mo- ments before her death (when asked if she did not wish to go home to Jesus) she answered promptly, "I do."

With birds and flowers of bright and beauteous summer time, hath she passed away, but unlike them, she will live and bloom again immortal, in fairer worlds than this.

DIED.—Sept. 29th, in Mobile Co., Ala., SARAH WISDHAM, daughter of J. & M. Hays; born April 13th, 1818, professed religion and joined the M. E. Church sometime during 1833.

The writer has been acquainted with Sister Windham the two years past, being her pastor. It has seldom been his privilege to form the ac- quaintance of one so devotedly attached to the cause of Christ. She was consistent, humble and earnest, in her efforts to do good: she was a most affectionate wife and mother—her great, leading desire was to fix indelibly religious impressions on the minds of her family. Not being near a church; and living in a community whose feelings were not sufficiently enlisted to erect a house of worship, her doors were kindly opened and every effort made to accommodate her neighbors, that they might have the word of life. She loved and prayed for her preachers, and was not unmindful of their wants. She had not enjoyed good health for several years previous to her death. Her dis- ease eventually assumed the form of a slow but increasing fever, producing much stupor; but the day preceding her death, this left her for a time. She saw her condition, knew she was dying, and conversed freely on the subject of death and her full preparation. Being asked if she was willing to die? "Yes, there is nothing on earth to live for now." She had committed her children into the hands of God, and, as a dying wife and mo- ther only can, exhorted her husband and children to prepare for death.

F. WALKER.

DIED—On the 28th of September, in Sunflower county, Miss., REUBEN D. MARSHALL. He died universally regretted by the community in which he lived, leaving none but friends behind to mourn his loss. He died in great peace. In speaking of his departure a short time before his death, he said, "I fear no evil—I am prepared to go." His hope was in God. Well might he fear no danger. "How blessed to go when so ready to die."

Whene'er he thinks he's seen,
But just as soon's you're out of sight
He's making mon's again.

He's aye tig, tigging,
And winna let me be;
But O sae sly, he hauds his tongue
Whene'er he kens ye'er near,
And says't again below his breath,

"Father, settle Davy!
It's him that winna 'gree;
He's aye jeer, jeering,
And lays the blame on me;
I daurna spenk, I daurna look,
I daurna move a limb,
For if I gi'e a wee bit laugh,
He says I laugh at him."

Father.

"O, learn to be loving, and kindly agree!
At home all as happy as brothers should be,
Ere distance may part you, or death may divide,
And leave you to sigh o'er a lonely fireside.

The sweet look of kindness, the peace-speaking tongue,
So pleasant and lovely in old or in young,
Will win the affections of all that you see,
And make you still dearer to mother and me.

But O! if divided by distance or death,
How sore it would grieve you, till life's latest breath,
That anger or discord should ever have been,
Or aught but affection, two brothers between!"

A PRAYER FOR GUIDANCE.

Father of all, be thou my guide,
My Saviour, and my friend;
Thou hast sustained me through the past,
Be with me to the end.
Keep all my thoughts and all my words,
From sin and folly free;
And whilst I live, O! let me live,
Entirely, Lord, to Thee.

Give me Thy spirit and Thy grace,
Give me Thy perfect love,
And let me ever bind my thoughts
To Thee, and things above.
Give me Thy strength, Eternal King,
With joy life's race to run,
And let me say in all things, Lord,
"Thy will, not mine, be done."

TELLING MOTHER.

A cluster of young girls stood about the door of the school-room one afternoon, en- gaged in close conversation, when a lit- tle girl joined them, and asked what they were doing. "I am telling the girls a secret, Kate, and we will let you know, if you will promise not to tell any one as long as you live," was the reply.

"I won't tell any one but my mother," replied Kate. "I tell her everything, for she is my best friend."

"No, not even your mother, no one in the world."

"Well, then I can't hear it; for what I can't tell my mother, is not fit for me to know." After speaking these words, Kate walked away slowly, and perhaps sadly, yet with a quiet conscience, while her companions went on with their secret conversation.

I am sure that if Kate continued to act on that principle, she became a virtuous, useful woman. No child of a pious mo- ther will be likely to take a sinful course, if Kate's reply is taken for a rule of con- duct.

As soon as a boy listens to conversa- tion at school, or on the play-ground, which he would fear or blush to repeat to his mother, he is in the way of temp- tation, and no one can tell where he will stop. Many a man dying in disgrace, in prison, or on the scaffold, has looked back with bitter remorse to the time when first a sinful companion gained his ear, and came between him and a pious mother. Boys and girls, if you would lead a Cristian life, and die a Christian death, make Kate's reply your rule: "what I cannot tell my mother, is not fit for me to know," for a pious mother is your best friend.

If you have no mother, do as the dis- ciples did, go and tell Jesus. He loves you better than the most tender parent.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Once, in a happy home, a sweet, bright baby died. On the evening of the day, when the children gathered round their mother, all sitting very sorrowful, Alice, the eldest, said: "Mother, you took all the care of baby while she was here, and you carried and held her in your arms all the while she was ill; now, mother, who took her on the other side?" "On the other side of what, Alice?" asked the mother. "On the other side of death; she was so little she could not go alone." "Jesus met her there," answered her mother. "It is he who took little children in his arms and blessed them, and said, 'Suffer them to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven!" He took the baby on the other side.

The Ten Commandments.

The following has been printed before, but it is good enough for a second ap- pearance:

Have thou no other gods but me;
Unto no image bow thy knee;
Take not the name of God in vain;
Do not the Sabbath day profane;
Honor thy father and mother too;
And see that thou no murder do;
From vile adultry keep thee clean,
And steal not, though thy state be mean;
Bear no false witness—shun the blot;
What is thy neighbor's covet not.
Write these thy laws, Lord, in my heart,
And let me not from them depart.

Never Jest with Scripture.

It is of great importance that we should resist the temptation, frequently so strong, of annexing a familiar, face- tious, or irreverent idea to a scriptural expression, a scripture text or a Scrip- ture name. Nor should we hold our- selves guiltless, though we may have been misled by mere negligence or want of reflection. Every person of good taste will avoid reading a parody or a trave- tie of a beautiful poem, because the re- collection of the degraded likeness will always obtrude itself upon our memories when we wish to derive pleasure from the contemplation of the elegance of the original. But how much more urgent is the duty by which we are bound to keep the pages of the Bible clear of any im- pression tending to diminish the bless- ing of habitual respect and reverence to- ward our Maker's law.—Palgrave.

HOW THE APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION IS KEPT UP.—Lord Palmerston has now made his third and fourth episcopal ap- pointments, in filling up the vacant sees of London and Durham; and, as both are to be divided, and the promotion of the Bishop of Ripon creates another open- ing, his lordship, if he weathers next ses- sion, will have made seven "successors of the Apostles," or about one fourth of the occupants of the episcopal bench!

TIME FOR MARRIAGE.—At twenty-four an unmarried woman is in the May-time of her existence. At that age her chance of marrying well is better than it was at any previous period—because her judgment is more able to exercise a be- neficial control over her imagination.

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING MILLS. French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block. Seven different kinds of these Mills are manufactured, adapt- ed to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The Burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diame- ter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices of from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy- five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of the Burr, power applied, and velocity given.

The Mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (fourteen inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal, in four and a half minutes.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.
THE lands are situated in Moorehouse Parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Backtop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fer- tility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of pro- ducing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf Rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in con- venient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction, and fast- gaining to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excel- lent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to pos- sess greater advantages and present inducements to purcha- ers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern coun- try. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. (jan12-1y) JAMES H. BRIGHAM.

TALKS WITH AUNT POLLY.

BY IGNATIUS, JUN.

Aunt Polly was a product of that old Christianity that fills the calendar of Heaven with saints. She was eighty years old when she died in last September. At a camp-meeting in Buckingham Co., Va., her soul was first startled into the reality of sin. Her struggles were deep, her experiences vivid. Conversion did not satisfy her spiritual longings, and she hurried on to sanctification.—"One evening, when I was at prayer," I quote her own words, "a voice came to me audibly, 'Thou art Justified, Sanctified, and Cleansed from all Sin!'"—From that day she walked by the Spirit and was a child of God.

The following lines, Aunt Polly said, were dictated to her by the Spirit in the third year of her sanctification.—*

The Lord's my guide and guardian friend,
On whom my hopes and thoughts depend,
My morning prayer and evening song;
And when I meet among the throng,
His footsteps I forever trace,
Because my God has given me grace.

And when upon my bed I lay,
O may my thoughts to Heaven convey,
To God, who never yet denied,
And always has my wants supplied.
O, may I never doubt His love,
And be prepared to meet above.

Every reach of thought, every altitude of experience, points beyond itself to a region rich with truth. There are lessons in the words and experiences of a simple soul, of which that soul dreams not. They lead us to the outer boundary of its being, and bid us look beyond into the unexplored continent that stretches before us. The best consoler in adversity, the best enlightener in moments of speculative darkness, the best solver of perplexing problems, is the humble Christian, having a hearty sympathy with God. Aunt Polly was of this sort. Her words always contained a truth deeper than was uttered. The words of a soul so bathed in sanctifying truth, could not but throw light in directions where erst was gloom. I have felt many a doubt give way beneath the experimental utterances of Aunt Polly. A few of our "Talks" I will record.

NO. I.

There are moments of the Christian life when God seems curtained in impenetrable gloom. Two sorts of Christians are especially subject to them: men of reclusive habits who lead an introspective life; men of worldly business, when their minds stop suddenly to regard themselves as religious instead of commercial beings. It is well to think of one's self; it is better to think of one's God. I was threatened with spiritual hypochondria, arising from excess of self-thought, when the following "Talk" occurred:—

Ignatius, jun.—Aunt Polly, it seems to me I have no religion; not only have no religion now, but it does seem to me that I never will or can have any. I feel utterly incapable of religion.

Aunt Polly—You are spending your time thinking of self instead of God. You are trying to nurse yourself into piety. Of yourself you are incapable of religion, and your feeling of incompetency is not a fiction. Instead of being filled with all the fullness of God, you are filled with all the emptiness of self. The flowers bloom by looking into the face of the sun; so does the soul by looking into the face of God. The eye turned inward to self becomes blinded to God. The serpent charms the bird till it forgets there is any other way to fly than towards the lambent eye and trembling tongue of the snake. Self so charms the soul that it becomes blinded to God, and suffers all the horrors of an actual atheism. Cease from self, my brother; break loose from the fatal charmer, and fly to God. Religion is an extreme consciousness of God; an extreme consciousness of self is its opposite. Else why so much talk in the Bible about knowing God? Why the Moravian's question to Wesley, "Do you know God?"

I went home, and the deep truth dropped as a radiant meteor into my soul; but, unlike the meteor, did not go out as it fell. As I walked, this soliloquy almost broke into voice: "This landscape that stretches in solemn calm before me—these stars that lend a mysterious meditativeness to the night—are all suggestive of God; yet I have walked beneath them a hundred times without thinking of God, thinking only of self. O, my Father! forgive me that I have always loved myself, and only feared Thee!" Then came into my mind Wordsworth's profound poetry—

"I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky; . . . . .
A motion and a spirit, that impels
. . . . all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things."

GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

Lieut. Lynch, of the U. S. Navy, was, in 1848, detailed to take command of the U. S. Exploring Expedition to the River Jordan and the Dead Sea. The object of the expedition was to discover and explain the peculiar features of this mysterious sea, to the end that science might be advanced, and the curiosity of the world put at rest regarding a sea that knows no ebb and flow, and in whose God-accursed waters no living thing exists. Having faithfully performed the object of his mission, he bent his steps to Jerusalem, and there visited all the "holy places" for which this city is so famous. He visited the garden of Gethsemane in May, and thus speaks of that sacred spot:

"The clover upon the ground was in bloom, and although the garden, in its aspects and associations, was better calculated than any place I know, to soothe a troubled spirit. Eight venerable trees, isolated from the smaller and less imposing ones which skirt the pass of the Mount of Olives, form a consecrated grove. High above, on either hand, towers a lofty mountain, with a deep yawning chasm of Jehosaphat between them. Crowning one of them is a living city; on the slope of the other is the great Jewish Cemetery—City of the Dead. Each tree in this grove, cankered, and gnarled, and furrowed by age, yet beautiful and impressive in its decay, is a living monument of the affecting scenes that have taken place beneath and around it. The olive perpetuates itself from the root of the dying parent stem, the tree springs into existence.—These are accounted one thousand years old. Under these of the preceding growth, therefore, the Savior was wont to rest; and one of the present may mark the very spot where he knelt, and prayed and wept. No cavilling doubt can find entrance here. The geographical boundaries are too distinct and clear for an instant's hesitation. Here the Christian, forgetful of the present, and absorbed in the past, can resign himself to sad, yet soothing meditation. The few purple and crimson flowers growing about the roots of the tree, will give him ample food for contemplation, for they tell of the suffering and consanguined death of the Redeemer."

How Wolves Cajole and Capture Wild Horses.

Wherever several of the largest associate together for mischief, there is always a numerous train of smaller ones to follow in the rear, and act as auxiliaries in the work of destruction. Two large wolves are sufficient to destroy the most powerful horse, and seldom more than two ever begin the assault, although there may be a score in the gang. It is no less curious than amusing to witness this ingenious mode of attack. If there is no snow, or but little on the ground, two wolves approach in the most playful and caressing manner, lying, rolling and frisking about, until the too credulous and unsuspecting victim is completely put off his guard by curiosity and familiarity.

During this time the gang, squatting on their hind quarters, look on at a distance. After some time spent in this way, the two assailants separate, when one approaches the horse's head, the other his tail, with a shyness and a cunning peculiar to themselves. At this stage of the attack, their frolicksome approaches become very interesting—they are in right good earnest. The former is a mere decoy; the latter is the real assailant, and keeping his eyes steadily fixed on the hamstrings or flanks of the horse. The critical moment is then watched, and the attack is simultaneous; both wolves spring upon their victim at the same instant—one to the throat, the other to the tail—and if successful, which they generally are, the hind one never lets go his hold until the horse is entirely disabled. Instead of springing forward or kicking to disengage himself, the horse turns round and round without attempting a defence.—The wolf before then springs behind to assist the other. The sinews are cut, and in half the time I have been attempting to describe it, the horse is on his side—his struggles are fruitless—the victory is won. At this signal the lookers-on close in at a gallop: but the small fry of followers keep at a respectable distance until their superiors are gorged, and then they take their turn unmolested.

As the sun ripens and sweetens fruits by shining upon them, without which they would be sour and unsavory; so it is the sunshine of God's love and favour that sweetens all earthly blessings, without which they would prove but crosses and curses to them that possess them.

* There are other verses of this sacred poetry not quoted. Whether they are to be found in the old hymn books, and existed in the mind of Aunt Polly as a youthful but obliterate remembrance, and were restored in a moment of religious rapture, the Holy Spirit acting on the palimpsest, I am not able to say.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE DRUNKEN SEA.

BY JAMES HENRY, M. D., OF DUBLIN.

Nothing can exceed the beauty of the Drunken Sea from the beach of Soberland, where you take shipping, as far as Point Just-Enough. The clear and smooth water is scarcely so much as rippled by the light breeze which wafts from the shore the fragrance of a thousand flowers. No mist ever broods upon the water, no cloud overcasts the soft blue sky. The glorious image of the sun by day, the silvery face of the moon by night, are nowhere seen to so much advantage as in the mirror of Pleasant Bay, for so this part of the Drunken Sea has been most appropriately named. The current being always towards Point Just-Enough, and the wind, if you can apply that name to the gentle breath which no more than fills your sails, always in the same direction, the passage is so smooth and easy that it not unfrequently happens that the voyager finds himself close upon the Point almost before he is aware that he has left Soberland.

The voyage is usually performed in boats made out of porter hogsheads, or wine pipes, or spirit puncheons. It is astonishing what excellent sailing boats these vessels make, when divided longitudinally, and furnished with sails and oars. Riches having the advantage everywhere, upon the Drunken Sea as well as upon land, the boats which are used by the rich are much more elegant, easy and commodious, although perhaps not faster sailers than those which are used by the poor. Besides the fares there are certain tolls payable by all persons who sail upon the Drunken Sea. These tolls are so considerable as to form a principal part of the revenues of some of the imperial governments of Soberland. Notwithstanding the expense which is thus necessarily attendant upon sailing on the Drunken Sea, the number of persons, rich and poor, who sail upon it, exceeds all calculation; the rich paying the expense out of their superfluities, the poor out of their necessaries. Some, however, insist that in the end the poor bear the whole expense, and pay out of their necessaries for the rich man's voyage as well as their own.

The voyage to Point Just-Enough becomes more and more agreeable as you approach the Point. The air becomes still more soft and balmy, the blue of the sky and water still more delicious, and even the sombre objects of Soberland, now somewhat in the distance, seem to acquire a certain mellowness and splendor from the new medium through which they are seen. In the meantime a corresponding change takes place in the passengers themselves; they experience an agreeable sensation of warmth, commencing at the pit of the stomach, and gradually extending from thence over the whole body; their pulse beats quicker and stronger; their breath acquires an agreeable odor, not unlike that of the sea on which they sail; their eyes become brighter and softer, and sometimes even seem to sparkle; their cheeks flush a little; their hands are sensibly warmer to the touch; their looks and gestures become animated; they feel increased strength and courage and readiness for action; their ideas succeed each other with greater rapidity and vivacity, and are a little less obedient to the will; they become less careful and anxious, less precise and particular; regard themselves with more complacence, their neighbors with more charity; gentlemen become less solicitous about the seat of their cravats; ladies, of their caps and collars; all become less serious; less disposed to deliberate; less inclined to prayer, or any other solemn religious duty; less scrupulous about right and wrong; less tight-laced; not so very sober; more gay, good-humored, frolicsome, frivolous; more inclined to singing, jesting and light conversation; more voluble, energetic, eloquent, more ready to tell secrets, either of their own or their neighbors'; more inclined to quarrel suddenly.

Diffugiunt mordaces sollicitudines;

All voyagers to Point Just-Enough agree in the account which they give of their passage across Pleasant Bay, and of the agreeable sensations experienced on approaching the Point; but they disagree very much in their statements respecting the Point itself; some say that it is further off, others that it is nearer; some that it lies more to the North, others more to the East, many assert that it recedes as you approach it, while some maintain that it moves forward, and comes to meet you before you have more than half crossed Pleasant Bay. These conflicting statements may, perhaps, be reconciled on the supposition, which seems far from unreasonable, that Point Just-Enough is situated in a floating island, which, shifting its position from time to time, is sometimes nearer, sometimes more distant; sometimes a little more to the North, and at other times a little more to the East. However this may be, the visitors to Point Just-Enough all agree in stating that it is quite impossible either to come to anchor off it, or to effect a landing upon it; the water being so deep that no anchor will take the ground, and the current so rapid as to carry you past the Point before you can secure a boat to it by any grapples which have yet been invented. For these reasons all skillful sailors, the moment they arrive at Point Just-Enough, instead of vainly attempting to come to anchor or to land, tack about and steer back again across Pleasant Bay for Soberland, thus avoiding the danger of being carried by the force of the current further on into the Drunken Sea, and perhaps thrown upon an island called Tipsy Island, lying at no great distance to the leeward.

The great unwillingness with which all the visitors to Point Just-Enough allow the sailors to tack about and steer homeward, has given rise to an opinion that if a landing upon the Point were practicable, every visitor would settle there permanently, and bid an eternal farewell to Soberland.

Pleasant Bay is continually covered from early morning until a late hour at night with boats conveying passengers of all ranks and descriptions to Point Just-Enough and back again. The intercourse is however by far the greatest from dinner hour until tea time; the evening being generally considered the most fashionable as well as the most convenient and agreeable time for the voyage. Some time before they set out, but the greater number take their dinner on board. Among the visitors to Point Just-Enough there are a few who go very irregularly and at long intervals, others who go every second or third day, and some only on the Sabbath day; but the great majority, unless prevented by illness, go every day of the year at the same hour, and never allow either business or pleasure, or even bankruptcy or insolvency, or trouble or the death of friends or relatives, to interrupt the regularity of their daily sail across Pleasant Bay. Kings and queens, lords and ladies, knights and members of imperial legislatures professors of all arts and sciences, merchants, traders, artisans, and even those who subsist upon charity, are to be found among the daily visitors to Point Just Enough; the christian, the jew, and the pagan; the white, the black, and the olive; the democrat, leveller and aristocrat; the busy as well as the idle, the wise as well as the foolish, the learned as well as the ignorant, the grave as well as the gay, the young as well as the old. Parents bring their children with them, and teach them to navigate the Drunken Sea, as birds teach their young to fly. Employers bring their workmen, and masters their servants; the latter however require but little teaching, having generally had the advantage of an early apprenticeship to the art.

It is worthy of remark, that of the countless multitudes who daily sail upon Pleasant Bay, there is not one who can be persuaded that it forms a part of the Drunken Sea. It is almost remarkable that every one of those who make a daily practice of sailing upon this Bay, acquires an invincible dread of water, and cannot be prevailed upon to drink it unless when sick.

It has been observed besides, that with the exception of man, all animals have an antipathy to the Drunken Sea, and cannot, without great difficulty be persuaded to navigate that part of it called Pleasant Bay. From this fact some naturalists have deduced a distinctive character of man, and instead of describing him as animal, erect, biped, rational, with teeth intermediate between graminivorous and carnivorous, define him simply, an animal which sails upon the Drunken Sea.

The longitude and latitude of Point Just-Enough never having been exactly ascertained, either from its being situated as already mentioned, in a floating island, or whatever other cause, geographers have found it very difficult to assign the precise limits of Pleasant Bay. It is perhaps to get rid of this difficulty, that some geographers describe Pleasant Bay as extending the whole way from Soberland to Tipsy Island. But whether it be or be not geographically correct to apply the name of Pleasant Bay to that part of the Drunken Sea which lies between Point Just-Enough and Tipsy Island, it is quite certain that there is no part of this where the sky is so bright, the air so exhilirating, or the motion of the water so lively and buoyant as it is here. It happens, therefore, as might be expected, that many of those who leave Soberland, with the intention of going no farther than Point Just-Enough, do yet, when they arrive at that point, extend their voyage to Tipsy Island, tempted by the increasing beauty of the scene, the favoring wind and current, and the easy landing which the shore and the island presents at no great distance. Besides those who thus voluntarily extend their voyage from Point Just-Enough to Tipsy Island, there are others who, overshooting the Point either through ignorance or inadvertance, miss stays in their attempt to tack, and are carried to the island by the force of the wind and current.

As it generally happens that those who have once visited Tipsey Island in either of the ways just mentioned, soon return to it again, direct from Soberland, and repeat their visits with great regularity during the remainder of their lives, Tipsy Island is always full of visitors. The sensations experienced on this Island differ only in degree from those which are felt at Point Just-Enough. The pulse and heart beat a little quicker and stronger, the eyes become brighter, the skin hotter, the face more flushed, the voice louder, the gestures more vehement, the conversation less connected, the ideas rambling and incoherent. Some dance, some sing, some swear, some fight, all stagger about; some become loyal, others patriotic, some poetical, others philosophical; all are voracious, disinterested, magnanimous, chivalrous. It is usual to remain several hours, and even to pass the night upon the island. A few remain upon it for several days together; but as it is discreditable to be seen upon it in the morning, those who regard appearances usually leave for Soberland some time before day-break; many fall asleep on the island, and are carried in that state to their boats. In the morning all awake unrefreshed, with a parched mouth, hot skin, red eyes, aching head, and no appetite for breakfast, and spend the day drinking soda water at the great fountain on the quay of Soberland, which looks towards Pleasant Bay, and longing for evening in order to return to Tipsy Island, or at least as far as Point Just-Enough.

Tipsy Island is said to have been first discovered by Noah, who planted vines upon it. It was afterwards sacred to Bacchus, whose temple, situated about the middle of the island, is in a high state of preservation. It has been visited by Alexander the Great, the most of the illustrious men both of ancient and modern times, the names of many of whom are to be seen, carved with their own hands, upon the bark of the vines.

* * * * * * *

All navy and regimental messes are held upon the island, and there is no part of the world where the point of honor is so strictly observed, or so many duels fought. It is here that white bate and other ministerial dinners, election treats, lord mayors' feasts, and sheriffs' breakfasts are given. Barristers always dine here when upon circuit, and medical consultations are sometimes held here. Great discussions on religion and politics take place here, and many of the most famous speeches of members of imperial legislatures have been conposed, and not a few of them delivered in this place. There are several magnificent race-courses on the island, and gaming tables on new and improved principles. It is also the favorite resort of pirates and smugglers, robbers, burglars and murderers, who have performed some of their most famous exploits upon it. As there is no church nor other place of religious worship on the island, none but the most abandoned are seen upon it during church hour on the Sabbath day; soon after church hour the boats begin to arrive, and continue arriving until a late hour on the Sabbath night.

It is impossible to mistake the habitual visitors of Tipsy Island, when you meet them anywhere in Soberland; their hands are tremulous; their eyes muddy; those parts of their face which should be white are red, and those parts which should be red, and particularly their lips, are blue and purple; they are consumed by an unquenchable internal heat and thirst; have little or no appetite for solid food; are infirm in their gait, either attenuated or bloated in their form, fretful, timid, irresolute of purpose, apprehensive of evil, and have no disposition for useful and active exertion, nor any taste for virtuous society or intellectual enjoyment. Ten thousand millions of money are annually expended in loss of time upon the Drunken Sea and Tipsy Island, paying the tolls and fares, manufacturing porter hogsheads, spirit puncheons, and wine pipes; and supporting workhouses, jails, penitentiaries and penal settlements, police commissioners and policemen, stipendary magistrates, dispensaries, hospitals and lunatic asylums for the use of the visitors to Tipsy Island.

Over against Tipsey Island on the mainland, and about a league beyond Point Just-Enough, is the port of Paphos. Many of the boats touch here as they return from the island. Malaria is prevalent in this port. The hospital, which is a very large building, and always full of patients, is situated on a hill immediately above the port, and commands a fine view of the Drunken Sea.

Off Tipsy Island, on the side furthest from Paphos, are three sunken rocks called the Horrors. The visitors to Tipsy Island are frequently dashed on these rocks by an eddy or whirlpool which surrounds them, and sucks in every boat that comes within a certain distance. Dreadful as is the fate of those who perish at once by this accident, that of the survivors is worse; the strength of their muscles is gone; their stomach rejects its food; their memory and perception is impaired; they are careless and indifferent about their property, friends and nearest relatives; they are haunted by vain terrors, and not unfrequently imagine that dead or absent persons are present and talking with them; imbecile alike in body and mind, they have no happiness but in Tipsy Island, which they never cease to visit, until sooner or later they are again drawn in by the whirlpool, and dashed to pieces upon the same rocks, upon which they had so nearly perished before.

On the same side of Tipsy Island as the Horrors, but a little further out in the Drunken Sea, are the Liver Sands. These are the more dangerous, because the precise point where they begin or where they end has not been exactly ascertained. Many of the visitors to Tipsy Island, in their attempts to keep clear of the whirlpool and the Horrors, run aground upon the Liver Sands; all such become yellow in the skin, hard in the stomach, swelled in the legs, and die dropsical; effects not unlike those which are produced by twenty years residence in India.

It is remarkable that those who sail upon the Drunken Sea in boats made of spirit puncheons, more frequently strike upon the Horrors, or run aground upon the Liver Sands, than those who sail in wine pipes and porter hogheads. The superior safety of the two last mentioned class of vessels is, however, counterbalanced by their peculiar defects; porter hogsheads in particular not only dull the wits and bloats the bodies of those who sail in them, but are besides so heavy and unpleasant sailers, and produce much biliousness and sea sickness, that many persons say they would rather not sail at all upon the Drunken Sea than go in them; while on the other hand, the wine pipes are infested by a venemous insect, from which no degree of care can keep them free. This insect, which closely resembles the common bug, is generated in the lees of the wine, and like the bug, hides itself in the crevices of the wood, from whence issuing out unobserved, it bites somewhere about the great toe. The pain and swelling which follow its bite are very considerable, extending to the foot, and even to the entire limb. Those who have been frequently bitten by it, have their legs swelled so as to resemble elephant's legs, are very irritable and choleric, and subject to fits of indigestion and apoplexy, which sometimes proves fatal in the course of a few hours. The antidote to the bite of this insect consists in drinking a large quantity of water, and never again sailing upon the Drunken Sea. It is, however seldom used, as the bite of the insect has the property of communicating along with the poison an invincible repugnance to the antidote. For this reason few who have been bitten by this insect ever recover.

For some distance all round the Horrors, and on the Liver Sands, the sea is dark and rough, the winds loud and boisterous, and the sky overcast with clouds, which not unfrequently overshadow a great part of Tipsy Island. When you pass this island, and advance further into the Drunken Sea, the water becomes still darker and rougher, the winds more loud and boisterous, and the clouds which overspread the sky more black and lowering. Continuing to proceed, you enter into a dense fog called Fatous Fog, which reaches from the water quite to the clouds, and shuts in the view in every direction. Immediately on entering the fog, the compass ceases to point, and whirls round incessantly with a rotatory motion upon its axis. Navigation being thus rendered impossible, it rarely happens that a boat which has entered Fatous Fog is ever seen again. The few travellers who have ever emerged from it having been found to be either insane or idiotic, have been received into the lunatic asylum which stands upon a little point of land running into the sea, opposite to Paphos and Point Just-Enough. Beyond Fatous Fog, and forming the extreme limit of the Drunken Sea, there is a range of very high and inaccessible mountains, called the mountains of No-Hope. At the foot of these mountains the sea beats with inconceivable fury, throwing up from time to time human bones and fragments of wrecked and foundered vessels.

The boatmen believe that somewhere under the mountains of No-Hope there is an outlet through which the waters of the Drunken Sea disgorge themselves into the abyss of Hell.

A POETICAL DUN.

A LA HIAWATHA.

Here is some excellent poetry. It goes right into the feelings. It is from the Editor of the Methodist Protestant. We have a fellow feeling in our bosom on this subject! Read and the response:

Should you ask why this dunning?
Why these sad complaints and murmurs,
Murmurs loud about delinquents
Who have read the paper weekly,
Read what they have never paid for,
Read with pleasure and with profit,
Read of church affairs and prospects,
Read of news both home and foreign,
Read the essays and the poems—
Full of wisdom and instruction;
Read the table of the markets,
Carefully corrected weekly.

Should you ask us why this dunning?
We should answer, we shall tell you,
From the printer, from the mailer,
From the kind, old paper-maker,
From the landlord, from the carrier,
From the man who taxes letters
With a stamp from Uncle Samuel—
Uncle Sam, the rowdies call him;
From them all there comes a message—
Message kind, but firmly spoken,
"Please to pay us what you owe us."

Sad it is to hear such message
When our funds are all exhausted;
When the last bank note has left us,
When the gold coin all has vanished,
Gone to pay the paper-maker,
Gone to pay the lolling printer,
Gone to pay the landlord tribute,
Gone to pay the sable carrier,
Gone to pay the faithful mailer,
Gone to pay old Uncle Samuel—
Uncle Sam the rowdies call him,—
Three and twenty hundred dollars!

Sad it is to turn our ledger,
Turn the leaves of this old ledger,
Turn and see what sums are due us,
Due for volumes long since ended,
Due for years of pleasant reading,
Due for years of toilsome labor,
Due despite our patient waiting,
Due despite our constant dunning,
Due in sums from two to twenty.

Would you lift a burthen from us?
Would you throw a spectre from you?
Would you taste a pleasant slumber?
Would you have a quiet conscience?
Would you read a paper paid for?
Send us money—send us money,
Send us money—send us money;
SEND THE MONEY THAT YOU OWE US!

CHINESE PECULIARITIES.—When the Chinese want to describe a person who pretends to be very brave, and make a great parade in order to show his courage, they say that "he is cutting off a hen's head with a battle-axe." A coward who boasts of his courage they call "a paper tiger." They compare a person who pretends to be what he is not, to a fox who tries to look as noble and strong as a tiger. If a person is ignorant of books, they will say, "Turn him upside-down, but not a drop of ink will come out of him."

ABOUT MISERS.

There died at Paris in the year 1799, (says the author of a charming work, "Salad for the Social,") literally of want, the well known banker, Steryald. A few days prior to his death he resisted the importunities of his attendant to purchase some meat for the purpose of making a little soup for him. "True, I should like the soup," he said, "but I have no appetite for the meat; what is to become of that? it will be a sad waste."—This poor wretch died worth £125,000 sterling. Another desperate case was that of Elwes, whose diet and dress were alike of the most revolting kind, and whose property was estimated at £800,000. Daniel Dancer's miserly propensities were indulged to a degree that on one occasion when, at the urgent solicitation of a friend, he ventured to give a shilling to a Jew for an old hat—"better as new" to the astonishment of the friend, the next day he actually retailed it for eighteen pence.—He performed his ablutions at a neighboring pool, drying himself in the sun to save the extravagant indulgence of a towel; yet this poor mendicant had property to the extent of upwards of $3,000 per annum.

The well known Nat Bently, (alias Dirty Dick,) of London, was the victim not only to a craving for gold, but for old iron. Another deplorable case might be cited, that of Tom Pit, of Warwickshire. It is reported that some weeks prior to the sickness which terminated his despicable career, he went to several undertakers in quest of a cheap coffin. He left behind him £2,475 in public funds. Another instance is that of the notorious Thomas Cook. On his physician intimating the possibility of his not existing more than five or six days, he protested against the useless expense of sending him medicine, and charged the doctor never to show his face to him again. His property was estimated at about £130,000.

Sir William Smyth, of Bedfordshire, was immensely rich, but most parsimonious and miserly in his habits. At seventy years of age he was entirely deprived of his sight, unable to gloat over his hoarded heaps of gold. He was persuaded by Taylor, the celebrated occulist, to be couched—who was, by agreement, to have sixty guineas if he restored his patient to any degree of sight. Taylor succeeded in his operation, and Sir William was enabled to read and write without the aid of spectacles during the rest of his life. But no sooner was his sight restored than this baronet began to regret that his agreement had been for so large a sum. His thoughts were now how to cheat the occulist. He pretended that he had only a glimmering, and could see nothing distinctly; for which reason the bandage on his eyes was continued a month longer than the usual time. Taylor was deceived by these misrepresentations, and agreed to compound the bargain, and accepted twenty guineas instead of sixty. At the time Taylor attended him he had a large estate, an immense sum of money in the stocks, and £6000 in the house.

A miser of the name of Foscue, who had amassed enormous wealth by the most sordid parsimony and discreditable extortion, applied his ingenuity to discover some effectual way of hiding his gold. With great care and secrecy he dug a cave in his cellar. To this receptacle for his treasure, he descended by a ladder, and to the trap-door he attached a spring lock, so that, on shutting, it would fasten of itself. By and by the miser disappeared; inquiries were made; the house was searched; woods were explored, and the ponds were dragged; but no Foscue could they find. Some time passed on. The house in which he had lived was sold, and workmen were busily employed in its repair. In the progress of their work they met with the door of the secret cave, with the key in the lock outside. They threw back the door, and descended with a light. The first object upon which the lamp reflected was the ghastly body of Foscue, the miser, and scattered around him were heavy bags of gold, and ponderous chests of untold treasure; a candlestick lay beside him on the floor. This worshipper of Mammon had gone into his cave, to pay his devoirs to his golden god, and became a sacrifice to his devotion.—Newark Advertiser.

A Clergyman in a Bad Fix.

Some amusement was caused a Sunday afternoon in one of the churches in Stamford, at the expense of the rector of the parish, who not long since was a bachelor, but now a benedict; after escorting his lady to the church, and duly reading the appointed service, was observed to be anxiously feeling first in one pocket of his coat, then in another, and afterwards in the pockets of his trowsers; whatever he wanted, it was not there, for, with a disappointed countenance, a conference was held with his "better-half," who forthwith left her seat and hurried from the church. On her returning without bringing anything, there was more whispering and next a female domestic was sent out, who likewise returned emty-handed. All this time the curiosity of the congregation was of course excited to a pitch which called their thoughts below sacred devotion; and they were only led back to a proper tone of mind by an announcement of the rector's dilemma—he had lost his sermon. In some measure to make up for misfortune the parishioners had thereby sustained, his reverence read some chapters in the Bible, and endeavored to expound portions of them as he proceeded.—Zion's Herald.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The N. O. Christian Advocate.

Terms, $2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, NOV. 15, 1856.

ADVERTISING.

By reference to the last column on our fourth page our terms may be seen. The Advocate is the best advertising medium in the South-West; and, considering the valuable publicity of its notices, as cheap as any other. Professional and business men, educational institutions, and all others whose success requires them to be before the public, would find it to their interest to appear in our advertising columns. Those columns are consulted by thousands as a directory, when they want to find an agent, a store, a school [illegible].

FEES.—Our city papers charge a dollar for inserting a marriage notice and make a good many dollars by it. Our city friends sometimes pay us a dollar for inserting such notices, because the Advocate, say they, deserves it as well as any of the rest. Now those notices make pleasant reading. We insert them with pleasure. Send them on. But this is a fair proposition: Send on the name of the newly married couple as a subscriber. We charge that.

THE ARGUS LETTERS.

A scribbler, signing himself "Argus," for months published "Letters from New Orleans" in the Northern Christian Advocate. While Mr. Hosmer was at the head of that paper, the letters were relishable to his morbid taste for slave-horrors. He was ousted, and the publication of those letters was very justly counted one of the items against him. Mr. H. having been put over an Independent paper, Argus finds a market to carry his wares to. The scurrilous publications were resumed. They have been put into a book and heralded as follows:

"Here the reader has the celebrated letters of 'Argus.' We are heartily glad that they have been brought out in this portable and permanent form. They have already done a good work.—No letters from the South, in many a year, have so stirred the public mind. The fact is the author unmasked the abominations of slavery in a manner which no previous tourist had dared to do. He lifted a veil from the domestic and social features of slavedom, and the horrid spectacle excited a deeper loathing than even our slavery-hating North is accustomed to. The effect was wholesome. We have been helped to a more fervent hatred. The public sensibility has been shocked at the revelations of the Patriarchal institution. But this shock was necessary—it was impossible to save the evil so long as concealment could be practiced.

"Argus" is a truth-telling man. His candor, his intelligence, and his courage, are equal to Daguerreotyping the revolting scenes. It was a work for a hero—a martyr. It has been done, thank God, and all the squeamish tastes of Christendom cannot restore the seals that have been broken.

It turns out that one "Rev. Philo Tower," who dwelt among us, in the South, on a health-recruiting or quasi-business agency, and professed to have been favorably disabused of previous Northern notions about Southern institutions, is the author of those letters!—We have sometimes read them to friends in our office, living here in New Orleans, for the laughter excited at their Gullivor stories. Mr. Hosmer may pick a Connecticut jury, and we will prove to their satisfaction that these "truth-telling" letters contain, on an average, two black lies each, and any quantity of white ones, in the way of exaggerations, reprehensible mistakes, excessive coloring, suppressions of essential facts, &c.

What stuff does abolition fanaticism feed itself on!

Death of Thomas M. Elam.

We are pained and have a sense of bereavement, at learning the death of this excellent man. He died of heart disease at his residence in Baton Rouge, the 8th instant. Long has he been a pillar of the Methodist Church. Most of the ministers who have there preached found homes under his hospitable roof, and all of them a friend in his generous heart. His ability was the only limit of his charity. The Baton Rouge Advocate says:—

ANOTHER OLD CITIZEN GONE.—Death is again in our midst, and has laid his rude hand upon one of our oldest and most venerated citizens, James M. Elam, Esq., from an affection of the heart, died this morning, in this city, after a painful illness of two weeks. He was widely known in this State as a prominent politician, of the strictest and most decided character, but at home was more esteemed for his open-hearted acts of kindness, and his visitations and ministrations to the sick during many a long and afflicting yellow fever epidemic. He was a conscientious and an honest politician, an able member of the bar, and a good man. He had long been a member of the Methodist Church, and died a Christian, and will be mourned by our citizens after his dust shall have mingled with its kindred earth. Peace to his venerable ashes!

CONVERSIONS AT THE FAMILY ALTAR.

Not long since, in conversation with a venerable minister who has seen service in the itinerant ranks, the subject of conversion at family prayers was introduced by him with substantially this narration:—

"I was returning from the —— Conference, and my heart was heavy when I thought on my children. It weighed on me, that some of them were of years for piety before God, and were not pious. While I had been trying to save other people and their children, my own were not saved. They made me a keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept. The burden grew as I got near home. It was a long day's journey—the last. I needed rest, and thought to retire early; but a blessed interest was manifested at the family altar. Before four o'clock the next day three of my own dear children and one of my neighbor's were converted—happily converted."

The above had not passed out of memory, but was deepened in its impression by the following, from an esteemed bro. minister:—

"I have for years been impressed that the family altar is the most appropriate place for the conversion of our children. Hence, at that altar, I frequently wrestle with God in their behalf. Our dear sainted Mattie was converted when no one was present but the family. On last Sabbath, at night, after we had all retired, my eldest daughter, Kate, called to her mother; said she couldn't sleep; she was weeping, greatly distressed.—All in the dark, mother, father, child, prayed. In about an hour she was happily converted. O! what joy! Her convictions were from reading the 13th chap. of Mark's Gospel. When she received the blessing she said, "I don't care if these things do happen. O, ma, I am as light as a feather." Her mother exclaimed, in view of her being converted from reading that chapter, "Let this stamp the Word of God with more importance than ever." O, who can doubt the power of the Word accompanied by the Spirit. Lord! convert and save our children, and we'll still, with more faithfulness, yea, and if need be, with more sacrifice, itinerate. D. D."

AN OLD FASHIONED CLASS MEETING, AND THE SEQUEL TO IT.

MR. EDITOR.—Two peculiarities among the usages of Methodism have recently been signally owned and blessed of God in our community. Last Sunday week, (Oct. 26), after preaching by Rev. Silas Cooper of the Georgia Conference, we opened the door of the church and a young lady joined as a seeker of religion. The congregation being dismissed, we had a class meeting; while this meeting progressed, one sister was bleat of God, and praised him aloud; the gracious influence extended to others, who also shouted the praise of God. Meantime the young lady who had joined the church, became earnestly engaged for her own salvation, and presently the Lord spoke pardon and peace to her soul. Seldom has it been my privilege to attend such a class meeting. It was good to be there, in so much that we protracted the meeting until the dinner hour had passed by. The world and other denominations may rate us for opening our church doors for the protection of the penitent, and for our class-meetings; but while God honors these old Methodist usages, we will hold to them. But the good pleasure of the Lord is still further manifest in the sequel to this class-meeting. We thought it our duty to follow up such indications of good among us, and the result, up to this time, is about twenty professions of religion—nineteen have attached themselves to the church, mostly on probation. Some of our meetings have been remarkable for the presence and power of God; and many of His people have been revived, and made to rejoice together and shout the high praises of Jesus. Our meeting still continues, and we are praying and working for further displays of God's presence and his power to save among us. May the end be even more glorious, and all the praises be ascribed to Him that doeth all things well.

Bro. Foust, of the Centreville circuit, is sitting here in my room, having come in since I began to write to you, he sends you as an item of interest that he has had some gracious revivals of religion in his work during the year, and about one hundred persons have been received as probationers in the church, within the bounds of his circuit.

Montevallo, Ala. Conf.

REV. DR. PALMER, of South Carolina, has formally accepted the call of the Presbyterian Church, on Lafayette-sq., to become their pastor. The call was prosecuted with successful diligence.

OUR NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR.—It is pleasant now and then to take a fresh start in any given path we may have marked out for ourselves, from the date of some memorable event—such as a Presidental election—and so, forget in a newly awakened zeal, the prosy fact that we are but doing our duty after all. Now my intention to perform the particular duty of letting you hear from us "dwellers of the rocks" in a seasonable time after the last date, was good, but true to one of the impulses of fallen human nature, I have still delayed the fulfilment of said intention, until the arrival of this great day in the national history, made me think, all at once, how time was flying.

Alas! that the disposition to procrastinate should be as universal as it is singular and dangerous. From the most important down to the most trivial affairs of life, its influence is all-powerful, and the man who risks the fortune of a lifetime by foolish delays, differs only in degrees from him who loses an omnibus ride by trifling away a moment. Dean Swift, somewhere, says:

"No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the same train and turn of thought that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before." True enough; but how often is it the case, that just as we begin to heed the teachings, the teacher is gone, and we are left "without excuse."

"Prythee, have done with moralizing, and go on with your letter," say you? Well, I was only putting off the evil moment when the confession would have to be made, that everything here—except politics—remains distressingly in statu quo, there being not even a "resignation" to chronicle.

But about politics: We have had all sorts of excitements on that score. Processions and opposition processions; speeches innumerable from both sides, arches, poles, banners, transparencies filled with quaint devices, and a running fire of sky-rockets, squibs and crackers, until some of the more quiet lookers-on have been tempted to wish that Presidents could be elected "to serve for life, or during good behavior."

The city has been as quiet to-day as we had any reason to expect it would be. A few disturbances have occurred here and there, in which fire-arms were used, but I know of no serious accidents, and hope there will be none for the papers to record in the morning. Of course nothing is known with certainty of the city vote, but I have heard it said that Fillmore and Donalson will probably have a small majority.

Rev. D. R. McAnally, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has been spending a few days here. He preached on last Sunday morning at M'Kendree's Church to a large audience, his sermon giving general satisfaction. It was an extremely sensible and well-expressed discourse on the nature and consequences of sin. I forget what led to them, but was particularly pleased with his remarks on the indiscriminate use of our churches and pulpits for other purposes than those which involve the immediate worship of God. He is wholly, and I think very properly, opposed to this. The good nature of our preachers and trustees has been carried so far in this matter, that Methodist churches every where have come to be considered in the light of convenient places for the giving of concerts, school exhibitions, lectures on various subjects &c., all of which are right enough in their right place, which certainly is not the house of God. I do hope this thing will be corrected, and am glad of an opportunity to express my personal obligation to Brother McAnally for the ground he took on this subject.

We are greatly rejoiced to hear of the interesting revival in Huntsville, the more especially as it seems to have been a result of the late Session of Conference in that place. This has been the case in many instances within my knowledge during the last two or three years, and the fact speaks well for both preachers and people.

The preachers sent here to labor for this present year, are all at their posts I believe. Br. Rigg's, appointment to McKendree Station has pleased all concerned, and I am glad to learn that the ladies of the congregation are about refurnishing the parsonage for the use of his family.

Most of the officials connected with the Publishing House are now at home. All look well and cheerful, and I hear no complaint, excepting of the want of water in the river, which causes some inconvenience. We have had a slight rise within a few days. There are two feet of water on Harpeth Shoals, and one or two small boats are running to the mouth.

The weather has become quite cold within thirty-six hours, but the sunshine is beautiful, even though it comes through the frosty air, and falls only on the dead leaves and flowers of a perished summer.

"Blest power of sunshine! genial day!
What balm, what life is in thy ray!
To feel thee is such real bliss,
That, had the world no joy but this,
To sit in sunshine calm and sweet—
It were a world too exquisite
For man to leave it for the gloom,
The deep, cold shadow of the tomb!"

Very truly Yours,
CROTCHET.

REVIVALS.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Nov. 3d, 1856.—Our protracted meeting in Woodville closed on last Friday evening, having continued three weeks. We have had, truly, a precious and interesting time. God honoured his word, "for it was quick and powerful, a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, a two edged sword," separating sinners from their sins. The interest became so extensive that it pervaded the town like leaven, counter working and absorbing, to a considerable extent, for a time, the political excitement in the place. Each of the political parties had a great barbacue and mass meeting with much speaking, in town during our meeting, yet the work of the Lord went on, and 67 persons were received on probation—53 white and 14 colored. Many were converted. There were very frequently at the altar from 35 to 45 weeping penitents. The Church is more refreshed and built up than it has been for years. Some of the most substantial citizens in the town are among those who united with the Church. Truly "the Lord has done great things for us whereof we are glad." During the year 95 persons have united with the church in this station—67 white and 28 colored. While we give all glory to God, without whom we can do nothing, we love and thank our ministerial brethren for the assistance, faithful efficient assistance they rendered us.

WM. B. HINES.

AUTAUGAVILLE, ALA., Nov. 6TH, 1856.—Since my last writing, we have had upon the circuit of whites 89 conversions, and 96 accessions; colored 8. In many respects the circuit is greatly improved.

DANIEL DUNCAN.

PRATTVILE, ALA., Nov. 3D, 1856.—We are having a good time here. Twenty-two have made a profession of faith in Christ, and others are still inquiring, "What must we do to be saved." Truly, we have had a "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." The community generaly, seems to be deeply impressed on the subject of salvation. The Church has been greatly revived and strengthened. We expect to close in a few days.

JOHN D. FISHER.

ATTAKAPAS, Nov. 3.—We closed a meeting at New Iberria, last Tuesday evening, at which eleven persons were justified, the membership was much revived. The praise be unto the Lord.

J. H. WATERS.

WOODVILLE, Mi., Oct. 27.—We are having a very interesting meeting in Woodville. It has been in progress more than two weeks. Forty-two whites, and eleven colored persons have been received on probation. The Lord has refreshed his people very much, and converted many sinners. Brothers T. W. Brown, J. J. Wheat and C. A. Flowers, have been with us most of the time and rendered efficient service in the Master's vineyard. WM. B. HINES.

SPARTA, LA., Nov. 2.—Our fourth quarterly meeting closed on the 25th of Oct., and during the past quarter we have to report eighty-nine accession and thirty-two dismissions by letter and otherwise. Many happy conversions and some reclamations. Praise God for his goodness in revival on the Sparta Circuit.

W. A. SMYTH.

WAHALAK CIRCUIT, ALA. CON., Oct. 25TH, 1856.—The Lord has graciously revived his work on this circt. Within the last two months many have been the subjects of converting grace, and have united themselves to the Church. We have more than realized our most sanguine expectations as to our missionary collections. Many of our brethren, with myself, were alarmed when it was known that we were assessed the sum of two hundred dollars; we have now in cash, and good subscription, over two hundred and ten dollars. So that we are beginning to hope that the Ala. Con. will redeem her pledge by bringing to conference the round sum of $30,000 for the great missionary cause. R. Y. REW.

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—Rev. W. A. Smith writes, Nov. 5:—There is an interesting revival in progress in this city, at this time, under the labors of Brothers Phillips, South and Friend. Forty have professed religion, and the meeting still continuing.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from our Fayre Ladyo.

LONDON.

I expected great things of this famous Londontown, but, partially, I was disappointed. First, there was not so great a roar and bustle—"like the noise of many waters," as I have heard it compared to; and, secondly, its great size did not strike me; but this was because I took no wide view from a height, and had only to be guided by the impression made upon me in driving through the streets. We were in a very quiet neighbourhood, however, where no greater disturbance than an occasional cat, a dully organ-grinder, or a "Punch and Judy" row came. Looking down the street we saw Charing Cross—one of the spots from which the accession of a new king is Proclaimed, and where, too, there stands a monument to Nelson, and an equestrian statue of Charles I., and very near by one of George III. Opposite this open square stands the National Gallery, in a wing of which the Royal Academy exhibits its paintings for three months, and a little way down the street stands Whitehall—which was built for the banquiting hall of a new palace, but this hall is all that was ever accomplished of the grand design. It was just in front of this Whitehall that Charles I. was beheaded, having slipped out to the scaffold from an upper window. Opposite is the Horse Guards, of which Punch has made so much fun for its strong adherance to "red-tapes and routine," and just by is Downing street filled with Government offices, and looking exceedingly dignified, and just as if it knew its own importance. An archway at the Horse Guards leads into St. James Park, and on each side of this arch stands two soldiers in full array mounted on powerful black horses—for what purpose I could not find out, excepting that it was an old custom and must therefore be kept up. At the National Gallery, too, there are many forlorn soldiers pacing up and down the livelong day. The first glance at them would make you think them men frozen into statues but for a look of discontent upon the face. I burst into a fit of uncontrollable laughter when I first saw them, and they looked at me with fixed moroseness. A little past Downing street the Grand Tower of Westminster Abbey rise up, and close to it the Parliament houses with their elaborate carvings and stone, even now looking old and mouldy, although one tower is yet in process of erection. To me it seemed in bad taste to have the church hallowed by ages, and sacred from all holy associations, so near to these rain buildings, where so much pomp and vanity, and at best, worldliness is constantly going on; and in point of architecture too (to my untutored eye) the contrast was unfavorable. But I only spoke of these to let you see the objects of interests I saw in my evening walks, when for half-an-hour I would go ahead passing every thing rapidly till the towers of the Abbey rose up against an evening sky almost as grey as they. then I would take a long look and then turn slowly homewards, with my mind filled and calmed, while memories of home and our wild forest aisles and York minstrs, and its organ tones and choir came thick and fast. But I had but very little little time for either quiet evening walks or musings. Every moment was occupied, and yet we saw, comparatively, very little of London, having come away without going to the Tower or the Tunnel, or "The Great Eastern," that mammoth ship which can carry 10,000 soldiers, or Buckingham Palace or Windsor Castle, or Hampton Court, or the Vernon Gallery &c. &c. Not one worked industriously for 10 days but lost one in trying to see the Crimean Guards in Hyde Park upon the occasion of their reception by the Queen. The crowd was so great, and our places so ill selected that we only saw a few of the rank and file with their sunburnt faces. We spent four or five hours in the National Gallery greatly to my delight and edification. It was was the first collection of paintings I had ever seen, and was therefore a far greater treat to me than to any one else of the party. It is labor thrown away to describe paintings, and I will not attempt giving you any thing more than my general impression of each great master's work. Of all I saw, two or three heads by Rembrandt made the greatest impression on me, and are best remembered. There was a darkness and richness of coloring, with great distinctions too in his paintings that pleased me greatly. Guido's quiet mild faces, and some of Titian's I looked at again and again, and each time with increased satisfaction; but I am going to say that my taste was to poor too enjoy Ruben's fat florid women, and high coloring. I felt it would take a long time to teach me to appreciate them. There was an immense cartoon there of "The Murder of the Innocents," by Raphael, that was positively frightful. The agonized expression on the mothers' faces, and the relentless ones on those of the executioners with their long sharp spears just entering the throat or side of the helpless little children, unhelped by any art of the mother's deep love, was most pitiful and horrible. The figures were larger than life and it helped the momentary illusion that it was a novel scene upon which you were gazing. There were also some beautiful landscapes by Cuyp and Claude, and some very fine sea pieces, but I have forgotten whom they were by. Turner has two fine landscapes here, hung by his own request between the two "Claude's"—for the sake of contrast I suppose—and certainly at the first glance Turner's seems far superior, but Claude's grow upon you and you find yourself returning to them again and again. Here too were some of Poussin's, but I can recall none of them very distinctly, I am sorry to say. But at the same time I enjoyed them exceedingly. When we went to the Royal Academy, one or two days afterwards, I felt the difference between the dark and quiet coloring of these old pictures and the gay and high tone of color in those of this year's exhibiting—yet there were some here that were very fine—two very good ones by Landeur, and a portrait of Dickens, and one of Carlyle which I can best recall now.—Imagine Dickens with an immense moustache!—I felt disappointed, for the expression of the mouth was entirely concealed, not otherwise, the face was very firm. Carlyle was put before us as a very thoughtful meditative man with "eyebrows like plant houses" and eyes that seemed to be gazing miles away. I enjoyed very much a view of one of the "streets of Venice" by Roberts, I think, and "High Mass in St. Peter's" at Rome, also, I think, by him. The latter was so faithfully and minutely painted that the candles seemed to flicker, and the incense to rise, and the voice of the chanting priest to be heard. The idea was very grand indeed—it deepened all my longing to be there. But all these dim reminiscences of pictures can give you even less pleasure than they do me.

But of what shall I chat next? I have not time enough to give you as full a description as I wish of either St. Paul's, or Westminster, or the Sydenham Palace—each of them will take a letter to themselves. We had one very great treat at the Royal Surrey Gardens, in hearing the "Orntorio of the Messiah" performed by 1000 performers with Julien at their head. Imagine 800 trained voices singing in chorus—the most of them females, a few of the little boy choristers of the cathedrals, York among them, but I looked in vain for my little favorite ward there two years ago—he must have lost his voice for I know I should have recognized him had he been present. I never heard such music and never shall again, I fear. The orchestra and voices had been selected with the greatest care and well trained, and the effect was most wonderful. I could have listened for hours and it seemed to me days without weariness—and the 3 hours we were there passed away like a dream. It was music worthy of the subject and words—the triumphant, rejoicing tones of "Unto us a son is born; unto us a child is given" rings in my ears yet. This alone was worth crossing the Atlantic to hear. The building is a very fine one, capable of holding 7000 persons easily, and 10,000 with crowding, and here Julien is to give concerts and Oratorios—and other musical entertainments, and this, with a fine display of fireworks and liberty to walk in the pleasant garden, is all to be had for 25 cts. NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

SYRIA AND PALESTINE, IN CONNECTION WITH THEIR HISTORY. By A. P. Stanley, M.A. With maps and plans. Redfield, N. Y., 1856.

The author visited the scenes of sacred history in Egypt, Arabia and Syria in 1852-3. He saw the country through the eyes of the Bible. To speak first of the book maker—Redfield. This is one of the best things in that line of art. Such type and maps, text and notes, paper and binding, it is a pleasure to handle and look at, and lay upon the shelf of one's library.

But the cloistered student and "Canon of Canterbury" is a poor traveller. Mr. Stanley trudges along with a load of books under his arm. He is busier examining his "references" than sights. He might have written as well in his room at home, with Robertson, Olin, Laberde, Burckhardt, Ritter, Reland &c., within his reach. His illustrations are not so familiar to us as the scenes he would illustrate. He settles no disputed question or locality; but rather, by a learned array of conflicting authorities, sets afloat every previous conclusion.

While we are indebted to the traveler for nothing of discovery—the essayist gives us fine passages repeatedly:

"In Palestine, as in Greece, every traveler is struck with the smallness of the country. He is surprised, even after all he has heard, at passing, in one long day, from the capitol of Judea to that of Samaria; or at seeing, within eight hours three such spots as, Hebron, Bethlehem and Jerusalem. The breadth of the country from the Jordan to the sea is rarely more than 50 miles, its length, from Dan to Beersheba is about 180 miles. The time is now gone by when the grandeur of a country is measured by its size, or the diminutive extent of an illustrious people can otherwise than enhance the magnitude of what they have done. * * Nor is it only the smallness, but the narrowness of the territory which is remarkable. From almost every high point in the country its whole breadth is visible; from the long wall of the Moab hills on the east, to the Mediterranean sea on the west. Whatever may be the poverty or insignificance of the landscape, it is at once relieved by a glimpse of either of these two boundaries.—

"Two voices are there—One is of the sea,
One of the mountains."——

Alluding to the varieties of soil and climate, of scenery and occupations, shepherds, husbandmen, artizans, traffickers, ships, carts, storms, valleys, hills, earthquakes, hail and harvests—all grouped and familiar on a small map—Mr. Stanley indulges a felicitous reflection upon the suitableness of the Holy Land to furnish a history and poetry for the world.

"It is said by Volney, and apparently with justice, that there is no district on the face of the earth containing so many and such sudden transitions of structure and climate. Such a country furnishes at once the natural theatre of a history and a literature which was destined to spread into nations accustomed to the most various imagery. There must, of course, be much in the history of any nation Eastern or Western, Northern or Southern, which to other quarters of the world will be more or less unintelligible. Still it is easy to conceive that whatever difficulty is presented to European or American minds by the sacred writings, might have been greatly aggravated had the Bible come into existence in a country more limited in its outward imagery than is the case with Palestine. If the valley of the Nile or Arabian Desert had witnessed the whole of the sacred history, it is impossible not to feel how widely separated it would have been from the ordinary European mind; how small a portion of our feelings or imaginations would have been represented by it. The truths might have been the same, but the forms in which they were clothed would have affected only a few here and there, leaving the great mass untouched."—pp. 125-6

PROPHECY AND THE TIMES; OR ENGLAND AND ARMAGEDDON. By Joseph Berg, D.D., Pastor of the Second Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of Phila. Higgins and Perkinspine, Phila., 1856.

Dr. Berg confines himself mainly to the sixth and seventh vials—Revelations &c. He does not believe in a Millenium that is to be brought about by the coming of Christ. It will precede that coming. His reign upon earth will not be personal but spiritual, and will consist in a prevalence of the gospel which, like heaven, is to permeate and control society and government. Laws, usages and public opinion of the whole world will reflect the principles and precepts of the word of God. Nations shall learn war no more. The kindreds of the earth shall constitute one Christian brotherhood. All this is to come under the dispensation of the Spirit—in the regular way. The gospel plan will not be set aside as a failure. We like Dr. B.'s views of Millenium. They are set forth modestly and with reason. There is encouragement to the Church's diligence and hope in them. With Mr. Baldwin, he sees the United States in prophecy—it is the "stone kingdom," but he does not accept Mr. Baldwin's date. The Armageddon battle has set in. Armageddon in Hebrew—Sebastopol in Greek. The "Powers" may haul off—make treaties and alliances—but the fight is only suspended! Russian and all other despotisms are to be smashed up—all hierarchies, tyranies &c., put an end to; after which general and mutual construction of hindrances, the KINGDOM will come with power and quickly.

These lectures were delivered to a congregation, in a Sabbath night series.

A. MYCATT & Co. have opened on Camp street, a new and well stocked book store. A look into the premises impressed us very favorably with their skill and ability in catering to the taste of the reading public. We expect to notice this new establishment more at length hereafter. Of their fresh arrivals we have—

LORENZO DOW'S COMPLETE WORKS, 2 vols. Sheldin, Lamput, & Blakeman, N. Y.

This is a fine large volume; the best appearance Dow has yet made and completest. A likeness of Lorenzo, said by those who have seen him to be good, faced by one of Peggy, his redoubtable wife. The volume is a curesity, teresting rather than edifying. It was a disorganised body, and in the "Cry from the wilderness" has some hard things against the Methodist Episcopal Church—not historically true. He traveled so extensively, preached so often, delivered himself so impressively and kept a journal so minutely, that the reader will fail of a local if not personal interest in what is here. Peggy Dow's journal is included. We are glad that oddities seldom start up in the name of Methodists.

THE RIFLE, AXE AND SADDLEBAGS, AND OTHER LECTURES. By W. H. Milburn. Introduction by Dr. McClintock. Derby & Jackson, N. Y. 1856.

The volume is dedicated to Gen. W. Williams, Esq. of Charleston, S. C.—the same gentleman to whom Dr. Cummings dedicated his late work. Mr. Williams must be the Mocaenas of Methodist authors. The portrait on steel is carefully executed. Mr. Milburn has taken a high stand as a popular lecturer. He is most wholly blind, he has cultivated spoken eloquence at great disadvantage and with success. The reader of his lecture on the "Triumph of genius over blindness" will appreciate any degree of this success the more highly.

The lecture which gives its title to the volume is full of movement and fine description. One great civilizers in their order have been the hunter, the settler and the itinerant Methodist preacher. These following close upon each other, and often going in company, have reclaimed this vast western realm from wilderness and barbarism. They, with immense sacrifice, courage and zeal, presided over the forming settlement. From these darkened fountains in the forest have gushed the waters which flowing into sunshine, have combined to form the majestic river of our national life. The chivalric heroism of the old preachers is happily set forth. This is a real historical service to the country, and a tardy justice to them. Mr. Milburn deserves the thanks of the Church which sent forth Axley, Barke, Bascom and their likes, for the manner in which he has challenged public attention to their noble characters and achievements.

There are other lectures—making a neat and very readable volume. Having often delivered them, the author has given the style a hard finish of plainness, elegance and strength.

A Prejudice Conquered.

For centuries the law of Hindostan has been that a widow could not re-marry, which has led to great immorality. The English authorities have made great efforts to bring about a better state of affairs, in which, according to the following from a Calcutta paper, they have made a beginning towards a successful result:

"The barrier has burst, and it only remains for young Bengal to follow the example of Baboo Bhoobun Mohun Doss, a respectable native gentleman residing in Paikpatra. He has, we hear, married a Hindoo widow fifteen years old, with the permission (though hesitating permission) of her parents. The Brahmins made a fuss, but money (a powerful mediator with them) silenced their tongues. We wish Baboo Bhoobun and his bride all success for thus sinking the trammels of religious prejudice.

POLITICAL CONVERSATION.

This ought to be headed, more properly, conversation about politics. Here is a slip from an exchange that would have been more in time a month ago; but it is not out of place now:—

In all political conversations, says the Norfolk (Va.) Herald, particular care ought to be taken to preserve the temper. None are so irritable as the tempers of enthusiastic politicians. I have seen some of this character, concerning whose lunacy I have not the least doubt. It is better, if possible, to avoid political conversation when the speakers betray warmth and attachment to party. I never knew an instance of conviction attending the longest disputes. There is a pride and obstinacy in the minds of ignorant partisans which we rarely find in other men. If their belief in God were half as sincere as their confidence in their favorite leader, they would be the most pious and fervent saints the world ever saw. As we must sometimes meet with men of this character, it is best never to argue nor answer, even when we are certain of their errors. Let us rather leave their company and pity their weakness of mind.

VISIT TO MRS. JAMES K. POLK.—A number of military companies in Nashville, Tenn., visited, a few days ago, the residence of the estimable rolict of the late President, James K. Polk. The Union of that city says:

The companies approached the grounds by the main entrance on Church street, and filed through the yard, with marked precision and decorum, paying their respects and passing out in the same order in which they entered. Such manifestations of respect were no less appropriate on the part of the military than they were gratifying to the distinguished lady.

THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—We learn from the Mobile Tribune, that this road is now in running order from Mobile to Macon, Miss., a distance of two hundred miles and that from that point to the Southern Tennessee line, a distance of one hundred and thirty miles, the grading, bridging, etc., are completed. The track beyond Columbus, Miss., is also ready to receive the iron, which has been purchased, and will be laid immediately. The Tribune says:

The gross earnings of the road last month were $65,000, and as soon as the rolling stock, which is now coming, is received, it will probably be increased to $80,000 per month—which sum would pay the interest on the indebtedness of the Company, and the current expenses, and also afford them a net profit of over $40,000.

FIRE FROM SPARKS OF A LOCOMOTIVE.—A fire occurred on the Pacific Railroad at St Louis on the night of the 29th ult., which destroyed one passenger and three freight cars. The latter were heavily loaded with goods. The fire was caused by sparks from the locomotive.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—There was a large fire at Bellfontaine, Ohio, on Saturday night, the 1st inst., including the entire business part of the town.

LOCAL NEWS.

Go from home to hear news, is an adage verified in many strange things reported as done here. The followiug ingenious discovery is made known to us for the first time by a New York paper:—

Dr. L. L. Bledehu, of New Orleans, has succeeded in training the larger species of mosquitoes, known in N. Orleans as "gallinippers," to perform all the objects hitherto only accomplished by the leech or the cupper. A dozen of these insects are equal to six leeches, and placed on the desired spot, will at once commence to suck blood in the same way, and with far less trouble, than the older institutions.

Another like unto it:—

A STRANGE SEIZURE.—A lady's leg was recently seized by a deputy of the sheriff of New Orleans. It appears that a lady of the Crescent City had ordered and received an artificial leg from the manufacturer for $250, and afterward declined paying for same. The maker had a writ issued, requiring the sheriff to take the leg into his possession. That gentleman gave his deputy the disagreeable job; and the latter functionary, after some trouble, obtained the litigated limb, and it is now in the sheriff's office at New Orleans.

OUR RAILROADS.

Should the weather become somewhat cooler, (says the Orleanian,) we may look forward to the replenishing of our market with wild ducks and poule d'eaus from our bayous and lakes and water courses, adjacent to the Opelousas railway, and which, at the proper season, are conveyed in such quantities in the freight cars to our city. Then the "canvass back," plump, delicious and rotund, whnt more invitiug dainty need be required; nor are the small black water hens, which are eaten on Fridays and fast days by the most devout Catholics, less savory. They are, the latter, a species of meat, converted by water process, or the small fry they feed on, into fish! perhaps are a mixture of "fish, flesh and" anything but red herriug: they serve admirably in ember times and lenten periods as substitutes for "mutton and meat," croakers and craw fish, that is, when surfeited with the one, and caring little for the other. With wild game generally comes to us the more substantial and valuable necessaries, and when once the termination of the road is reached, we may look forward to the receipt of numerous essentials, perhaps superfluities.

We are pleased to notice that our other great railway—the Jackson—is progressing, and that Mr. Robb, who has succeeded so well in London in his negotiations, expects to have the road open to Jackson in little over another year. The Mississippian of a late date, publishes the following encouraging paragraph:

"Gov. McRea showed us a letter addressed to him by Mr. James Robb, dated London, 21st September, in which he says 'that he is now able to give him certain advices,' that he has made arrangements to complete the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad to this point next year. After speaking of the negotiations, concluded, he says: 'If the contractors who have undertaken the grading of the road south of Jackson, comply with their engagements, I see no difficulty in the way of the company opening the road to Jackson before January, 1858."

When the connection between Berwick's Bay or the Bnyou Bœuf and Galveston is once established, by means of the Vanderbilt steamers, we expect cattle, corn, game, wild and tame fouls, &c., &c., in large quantities, from Texas. However, the period is very remote when our railroads will subserve the purpose of the Father of Waters, and we can dispense with his services.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The Administrators of the Charity Hospital met on Tuesday, November 3d, 1856, at 12 o'clock, M., and elected the following gentlemen Surgeons and Physicians, to serve in this institution for the ensuing six months. From the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana:

Surgeons—Drs. Stone and Hunt.

Physicians.—Drs. Jones, Cenas, Nott, and Wederstrandt.

From the New Orleans School of Medicine:

Surgeon.—Dr. Choppin.

Physicians.—Fenner, Beard, Picton, Thos. Penniston, and Axon.

Physicians from the Profession at largo:

Drs. Williams, Cox, A. Penniston, Martin and Rannoy.

LAW LECTURES.—The Law Department of the University of Louisiana opened for the session of 1856-57, last Monday evening. Christian Roselius, the Dean of the Faculty, and Professor of Civil Law, delivered the introductory lecture to a large and intelligent class, composed of gentlemen from all the Southern States, and was attentively listened to, and at the close, loudly applauded.

DEATH OF AN OLD CITIZEN.—We have now to chronicle the death of Samuel Chalmers Bell, cashier of the Canal Bank of this city. Mr. Bell departed this life at his residence in this city, on Saturday night the 8th inst., after a lingering illness of several months duration, in the 71st year of his age. He was a native of Philadelphia, and arrived in this city in the year 1812.

LOUISIANA ELECION RETURNS.—Of the forty-eight parishes in this State we have had returns from all but twelve. These foot up a majority for Mr. Buchanan of 185. The remaining parishes gave a Democratic majority of 1702 at the last Gubernatorial election. Mr. Buchanan has evidently carried the State by a majority ranging from three thousand to thirty-five hundred.

COL. KEWEN.—Among the passengers who arrived by the Tennessee was Col. E. J. C. Kewen, of the Nicaraguan army.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Railroad Meeting at Natchitoches.

An important Railroad Convention commenced its sessions in Natchitoches on the 27th ult., and ended on the following day. The parishes of Natchitoches, Sabine, Caddo and DeSoto, were duly represented. Hon. J. G. Campbell was elected President, Dr. T. H. Patterson, Vice President, and J. D. Wemule, Secretary.

The following resolution was moved and adopted:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of one delegate from each parish represented, be appointed by the chair to report at an adjourned meeting, a basis and plan of action by which the objects of the convention can be best advanced.

Gen. P. A. Morse, of Natchitoches; Dr. Patterson, of Sabine; D. Creswell, of DeSoto, and Dr. Estes, of Caddo, were constituted said committee.

Interesting addresses were then made by Gen. Morse, Mr. Creswell and Dr. Estes, in which many valuable statistical facts were brought forward. After which the meeting adjourned until 10 o'clock the next day.

On the re-assembling of the convention, pursuant to adjournment, the committee appointed under the above resolution submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted. As matters of much moment to our city are referred to, we give the report entire:

Whereas, from the extraordinary difficulty and expense attending the shipment of our products and procuring the necessary supplies for the last two years, and from the increasing obstructions in the navigation of Red River, (which must still further embarrass our trade with the commercial emporium of our State,) we have been fully taught the necessity of greater facilities, and the consequent need of railway communication, and

Whereas, we are encouraged by the progress of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, and by the liberal land donation by Congress in aid of its extention northward, and

Whereas, The people of North-Western Louisinna feel a deep solicitude in the development of the resources of their section of the State, therefore:

Resolved, 1.—That the extension of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, through the Western parishes of the State to a convenient point of intersection with the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, with suitable connections with Red River, is a practical object of vital importance to the people of those parishes and the State at large.

Resolved, 2.—That it is the opinion of this Convention that the people of the parishes here represented are able and willing to subscribe money and labor enough, with the material aid to be derived from other sources, to build the road.

Resolved, 3d.—That it is the matured conviction of this Convention, that, in order to interest the greatest number of persons in the success of this enterprize at its earliest day, it is necessary that the people on the line should become stockholders, by liberal subscription in money and labor.

Resolved, 4th.—That inasmuch as real estate is enhanced in value to a greater extent than any other species of property, by railroad facilities, it is but just it should pay proportionably, we recommend to the people of the several parishes a voluntarily assessment in aid of the work on their landed property, upon a scale graduated according to distance from the line of the road, payable upon its completion.

Resolved 5th.—That in order to secure the early completion of the road, it is advisable, and we recommend to all those who shall become stockholders by assessment to furnish such security to the Board of Directors as will enable the Company to negotiate a loan in anticipation of its resources.

Resolved, 6th, That we suggest to the Company that the amount of the subscription of each parish should be expended within its own limits, so far as it is practicable without detriment to the general interest of the road.

Resolved, 7th, That we recommend to the directors the immediate location of the road, and commencement of the work upon its northern terminus, and we pledge ourselves to a cordial support of the enterprize.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair of each parish, to confer with the company in relation to the above suggestions, and to take such other and further steps as they may deem necessary, towards the success of the road after such consultation.

In conformity to the requirements of the last resolution, the President appointed the following committee, to which, on motion, the chair was afterwards added:

For Caddo—Dr. M. Estes, Dr. J. Wilder and L. M. Nutt, Esq.

For De Soto—H. Phillips, J. D. Wemple and Thos. M. Garlin.

For Sabine—D. R. Gaudy, R. B. Stille and C. Chaplin, Jr.

For Natchitoches—P. A. Morse, Thos. Hunter and Lewis R. Wamsley.

The subjoined preamble and resolutions offered by Gen Morse were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Congress of the United States has granted to the New Orleans and Opelousas and Great Western Railroad alternate sections of public land along the line of said road, for the purpose of aiding in its construction; and

Whereas, By the location of said road, it passes through a district of country where the lands have to a considerable extent already been taken up by private entry; and

Whereas, It was doubtless the intention of Congress that this railway should derive the same advantages from the liberality of Congress as has heretofore been extended to railways in other States, therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to procure the passage of an act, granting to the said railroad such quantity of land as may be found, upon examination and proof to be deficient, for the reasons herein stated, to be made up either by specific grants of lands, or by extending the line of said road in which lands may have been entered; and they be requested to obtain a grant of alternate sections of land along the line of any branch, or branches, of said road, which may be found necessary to connect the said road with Red River.

Be it further Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President of this Convention for the purpose of conferring with our Senators and Representatives in Congress, upon the subject matter of the above preamble and resolutions, and furnishing them with such facts and evidence as may be necessary.

Messrs. P. A. Morse, S. M. Hyams and Thomas Hunter are appointed a committee under the resolution last given.

Speaking of the action of this convention, the Natchitoches Chronicle, of the 1st., says:

The utmost harmony prevailed. All were unanimous in favor of an extension of the Great Western, New Orleans and Opelousas Railroad to Red River. There was but little discussion; all understood that the convention did not meet to hear buncombe speeches but to act. If the same feeling that influenced the members of this body, can be brought to bear upon the men of influence and capital throughout this region—there can be no doubt but we shall, within a reasonable time, be able to travel to our great market without depending on the caprices of Old Red.

A Good Move for Mobile.

The citizens of Enterprise, Miss., are now making strenuous exertions to have the Brandon and Vicksburg Railroad intersect with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad at that place. The directors of the Brandon and Vicksburg, Mobile and Ohio, and the north-east and south-west roads, are to meet at Enterprise on the 25th of this month, for the purpose of considering the matter. An effort has been made to have the intersection take place at Gainsville junction, but it is said that the route to that point would be through a hilly and very poor country; whereas the one marked out to Enterprize is easy, and would not be attended with the labor and expense which the building of the road over the former would require. It is also through a rich, well-settled and wealthy section; and the distance is ten miles nearer the Mobile and Ohio road than by the other route. This is a movement in which our citizens should feel an interest. It would be much more to the benefit of Mobile to have the intersection made at Enterprize than at Gainesville junction, which is sixty miles further north.

Taking into consideration the difference in the routes to each point, that to Enterprise would afford a saving of seventy miles in the transportation of produce from Western and Middle Mississippi to Mobile. By the completion of this road to the Mobile and Ohio road, we shall, without doubt, receive a large share of the trade which now floats down the Mississippi; and the nearer it comes to this city the better; every mile saved in the distance will be a great gain. Let our citizens look to it and exert their influence in favor of Enterprise.—Mobile Tribune, 7th inst.

Memphis and Ohio Railroad.

The Memphis Bulletin, in an article on the progress and prospects of this road, says:

The link in this road between Brownsville and the junction with the Mobile and Ohio road, has been put under contract, to responsible and energetic contractors. It is to be finished and in running order by the 1st of March, 1858. The Mobile and Ohio road, now under contract from Columbus to Jackson in this State, will be finished by that time up to the point indicated, so that we may count with tolerable certainty upon having an outlet into the whole system of Northern railroads within the next two years. It is scarcely to be estimated, the increase of trade, both in bulk and variety, which the completion of these portions of those two works will give—bringing to us the wheat, tobacco, corn and pork of the northwest part of Western Tennesse.

Within the same period there is every probability that the entire line to Paris and the Tennessee river will be completed. Twenty-three miles of it from Paris south, were let out last summer to contractors of reputation and energy, who are at this time putting a large force upon the work. The intervening sixteen miles between the southern end of this contract and the junction with the Mobile road will be put under contract, so as that it will be ready along with that already let out. This connection, also, will bring an immensely large and valuable increase to our trade, by opening up and developing a remarkably fine region of country, now comparatively isolated.

TIME IS MONEY.—A Chicago broker, famous for his shrewdness took a trip by railroad the other day, and sat down at the end of the last car, because he considered the use of the money worth something while the conductor was coming through the cars.

IRON BANDS.—With the exception of a few miles in Virginia, there is now a connected line of railroad all the way from Bangor, on the Penobscot, to Montgomery, on the Alabama; ere long the chain will be extended to New Orleans, thence to be carried westward until it reaches the shores of the Pacific.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.—General Ph. St. G. Cook, of Virginia, on retiring from the office of President of the Agricultural Society, which he has ably filled, gave to the Society his check for twenty thousand dollars as a contribution to a fund for maintaining an aggricultural school.

Later from Nicaragua and California.

The steamship Tennessee, Capt. J. S. Crowell, arrived at this port Tuesday 9th, from San Juan del Norte.

The steamship Texas arrived from New York with six hundred and fifty passengers for California, on the 4th.—The Sierra Nevada arrived at San Juan del Sur on the 2d November, with 700 passengers for New York and New Orleans.

The Tennessee left San Juan on the morning of the 5th, and the Texas, for New York, same day. The news from Nicaragua is unimportant.

The reports brought by the steamer Tennessee on her last voyage are fully corroborated. Gen. Walker's position is growing still more favorable, and the prospects are that peace will be shortly proclaimed.

The Transit Route is in excellent order, and has now every facility for the conveyance of passengers with the utmost speed, comfort and safety.

By this arrival we have received El Nicaraguense of the 25th, ult. It contains a circumstantial report of the victories gained by Gen. Walker over his enemy at Massaya and Granada, and fully confirms the accounts brought by the Tennessee on the 23d ult. Gen. Walker was still at Granada. El Nicaraguense says:

Among the wounded we regret to announce John Tabor, proprietor of El Nicaragueuse, whose leg has been broken, above the knee, by a musket ball, and Major A. Gillis. We have not had time to collect a list of all the killed and wounded. This will, probably, appear officially. The victories of Musaya and Granada have put, we expect, a period to the war in Nicaragua. Those who attacked Granada were not natives of this country. They bonsted during the night that they were San Salvadorians and Guatamalians and that being such, we might as well lay down our arms at once, as they were unconquerable.

The numbers of the enemy killed in Granada is truly astonishing. In many of the houses they lay piled up in dozens; they were lying on the streets, on the door-steps, and in the out-houses. They were killed in large numbers in the bushes; whole bungo loads were killed while they were endenvoring to escape by that lake, and intelligence is every hour arriving of where tens, and twenties, of bodies have been discovered in the yards.

The Americans buried over one hundred of the enemy's dead in Granada, while they had filled three walls capable of containing one hundred each, besides filling privies, cess pools, and burying very many in the yards and suburbs of Granada, rendering it impossible to furnish anything like a satisfactory list.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

By this arrival we have received San Francisco papers of the 20th ult.—two weeks later than previous advices.—There is but little news of interest.—From the Bulletin we extract the following summary:

The success of those engaged in placer mining generally is said to be extraordinarily good. The rivers having fallen early, are well drained. The deep diggings are also easily worked, and the hill diggings are also paying well and the miners in good spirits.

In Hope Valley veins of copper, gold and silver, some fifteen or twenty have been discovered by Dr. Brewster, State Surveyor, who is of the opiuion that native copper will also be found there, and that these are not the main or mother veins.

On Tuesday, October 7th, the trial of E. Seymour Fairnsworth, second mate of the steamer Golden Gate, indicted for the murder of John Bowen, was concluded and the accused acquitted. The case had been widely known under the title of the "roasting alive case," and had produced considerable excitement.

The Chinese, near Two Mile Bar, undertook to get up a private battle of their own, being divided into two factions, the Canton's and the Hongkong's. The whites prevented bloodshed. Some 1200 had gathered together to amuse themselves in this way.

On the 25th ult., at about half-past 11 o'clock, P. M., severe shocks of earthquake were experienced in San Diego county. The Indians and cattle were much frightened, and sleepers generally disturbed, but no great damage was done.

The Annual State Agricultural Fair held at San Jose closed on the 10th inst. The display of fruits, vegetables and other productions, was rich, varied and very creditable. The stock department was nothing extra. Among other things were cotton from the Stanislaus river, tobacco from various parts, beet sugar from San Francisco, and broom corn.—This latter article has been grown in Calaveras county and elsewhere this year, in considerable quantities with success. The State Fair next year will be held at Stockton.

On the 7th October a destructive fire occurred at Placerville, by which property to the amount of over $50,000 was consumed. The city is being rebuilt in very substantial style. Brick buildings already occupy a large portion of the district formerly burnt over.

The furniture of the Vigilance Committee has been sold.

The result of the Maine election was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the Republicans throughout the State. The Democrats and Americans say they never expected any other results. Different partisan presses have demonstrated, unmistakably, that California will give a large majority for each of the candidates. They say their figures may be depended upon.

During the past fortnight rain has fallen in different parts of the State, and shows now cap the mountains of the Sierra Nevada. On the 8th of October snows to the depth of eight inches fell at Bear Valley, Navada county. Copious showers have also fallen in the southern portion of the State. Our miners, and stock raisers are well pleased.

All over the State the people are wide awake and on the look-out for the thieves and murderers who have been lately prowling in the mountains. One of the ubiquitous Tom Bells was captured on the 4th instant on the the San Joaquin river and hung by his captors. He confessed that he deserved his fate, and several stolen horses were recovered at his reach or stopping place.—Some eight or ten of the robbers have thus far been captured; two or three hung by the people, and the rest, along with some who have harbored them, are in jail awaiting punishment. Other murderers have also been arrested. A startling discovery, being the bones of twenty-seven white men, in a well at a ranche upon a road from the Calveras to the Stanislaus river, is announced to have been lately made. The house was formerly occupied by a man named Colebrook, whose brother was hung for the murder of one Armstrong. An active search is being made for him.

FROM OREGON.

Our advices from Oregon are to the 11th ult. The Portland papers are much taken up with the alarming condition of Indian affairs in the territory. The Oregonian says:

The Indians have now full and complete possession of the country east and north of the Dalles, with the exception of a block house or two. They are more hostile than ever. The volunteers are disbanded; the public property sold; the money sunk in the pockets of party speculators. Gen. Wool says there is no war; and Gov. Curry has left the territory. In our estimation, we are to-night in a worse position than ever, for all of which we have to thank those appointed to rule over us. It is said that there are three thousand Indians at and near the Dalles capable of bearing arms; most of them are well armed.

Lieut Miller, of the 9th Regiment, U. S. Army, was drowned on the 6th ult.

BY TELEGRAPH.

New York, November 10.—The United States mail steamship Baltic, from Liverpool on the afternoon of the 29th ult., has arrived at this port. The Africa arrived out on the morning of the 29th.

GENERAL NEWS.

The French Ambassador has left Naples and it is supposed the English Minister will follow his example.

The French fleet remains at Toulon and the English at Malta.

The Turkish Cabinet has resigned.

KANSAS.

Kansas News.—Gov. Geary had arrested some persons on a charge of being concerned in the recent disturbances at Ossawattomie, but the accounts do not say to which party they belonged.—When the Governor started out on his tour of inspection, he took with him a company of U. S. dragoons. On reaching Lawrence they were encamped in a hollow, and the Governor went into the town, where he made a speech at the presentation of a Free Soil flag to Mr. Brown, the editor of the Herald of Freedom. The Governor said he had received various complaints from different sections of the Territory, and calls four various quarters for protection; and he intended with this retinue to visit all the settlements, see the condition of affairs—to assure the settlers of his protection, and to show them by this retinue that he has the power to protect them. In the evening the Governor and U. S. officers attended a large party at Brown's house. At Franklin a pro-Slavery man by the name of Crane, who lives there, had repeatedly complained to the Governor of his neighbors (Free State men.) The Governor on inquiry found, however, that Crane was the aggressor, and told him so; Crane soon got excited, and told the Governor he lied. His excellency got very angry; he doubled up his fist at young Crane—asked him how he dared use such language to him, and told him that, if he repeated it, he would knock him down.—Crane however, did not repeat it, and consequently no fight came off. On his route the Governor stopped at every settler's cabin, and talked familiarly to all he met.

Gov. Geary's position in Lecompton does not seem a very enviable one.—The pro-slavery party accuse him of sympathy with the abolitionists, and denounce him in no measured terms. One of Col. Titus's men threatened to shoot him a few days since, on account of the appointment of Col. Walker to the command of the military company raised in Lawrance. The Governor's action in this respect has excited their displeasure.

FOREIGN.

BY THE CANADIAN AT QUEBEC.

The steamship Canadian arrived at Quebec on the morning of the 3d instant, bringing Liverpool dates to the 22d ult. We find the following telegraphic summary in our New York exchanges of the 4th instant:

A terrible accident had occurred at London. The Rev. Mr. Sturgeon, a Baptist preacher, was speaking in Concert Hall, Surry Gardens, when thieves raised the cry of fire, and the audience rushing towards the doors, several persons were trampled to death.

Many of the English Ministers had arrived in London.

It was reported that Lord Palmerston was preparing a new Reform Bill, and that Lord John Russell also threatens a similar measure.

England and France had suspended diplomatic intercourse with Naples, but no hostilities had taken place.

Considerable doubts are expressed as to the truth of the statement that the Austrians had commenced, on the summons of France, to evacuate the Bauubian Principalities.

A ministerial crisis, and increasing financial difficulties, existed at Constantinople.

COMMERCIAL.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Nov. 10, 1856.

COTTON.....We stated in our last review that the market closed dull and drooping, hardly sustaining the improvement realized on the receipt of the Canada's accounts. On Saturday the demand was still more languid and the few sales that were made, not exceeding 2000 bales, were mostly of the Middling and lower grades, at figures showing a falling off of ¼@⅜c on those descriptions. On Monday, the factory purchases being nearly due, buyers showed no disposition to go on with, as Saturday's concessions and the sales were confined to 1700 bales, but yesterday, the receipt of the Baltic's advices having settled the views of parties on a more definite basis, factors submitted to a further reduction of ¼@½c, and buyers coming forward with renewed spirit at the decline, the sales reached up fully 10,000 bales, nearly half of which was taken by the North. Thus the sales of the three days amount to 13,000 bales.

The receipts since the 7th inst. comprise 27,000 bales, against 24,158 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 11,600 (three to foreign ports and 8000 coastwise,) embracing 3175 to Liverpool, 1236 to Marseilles, 800 (700 half bales) to Vera Cruz, 4452 to Boston, 900 to New York and 800 to Philadelphia, leaving on hand a stock of 240,000 bales, against 202,817 bales same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 287,800 bales against 333,000 same time last year—showing an increase of 18,043 bales. The increase at all the ports up to the latest dates reported, is 27,287 bales, (222,413 against 195,126.) Referring to our remarks as above we reduce our quotations ¼@¾c, as follows:

TALKS WITH AUNT POLLY.

BY IGNATIUS, JUN.

NO. II.

Aunt Polly sent for me one day when she was sick. I went. She was in tears.

Aunt Polly—Why is it, my brother, that I am so despondent? My feeble mind fails to grasp and realise that God is, and that he is my true sanctifier.

Ignatius, jun.—Religions joy is the result of a full assurance of faith; full assurance of faith is the result of evidences; ovidences are presented to the mind; the mind may be so weakened by bodily infirmity as to be unable to grasp the evidences. Then despondency ensues, unless the heart comes to the rescue with its truthful love. This is your case, Aunt Polly. God is with you, full of love, your true sanctifier; yet fleshly vapors—not of sin, of disease—obscure His appearing. Bring your heart to the rescue with its fervent love. God does love you, and you love Him though you see Him not.

Aunt Polly—O! I do love Him!

"Sink down, ye separating hills,
Let sin and death remove,
'Tis love that drives my chariot-wheels,
And death must yield to love."

But, O, it so grieves me to think that, as my body grows weak in death, my Lord, in whose presence I have lived for fifty years, will be clouded from me.—No, no; it cannot be; the winter of my life must reflect, though dimly, the vernal glories of Heaven!

Ignatius, jun.—Aunt Polly, (and I quoted from an old book I had read), St. Paul saith, "When that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." Now mark what is that which is perfect, and that which is in part. That which is perfect is a being who hath included all things in himself and his own substance—and without whom and beside whom there is no true substance; for he is the substance of all things, and is in himself unchangeable, immovable, and changeth and moveth all things. But that which is in part, or the imperfect, is that which hath its source in, and springeth from the perfect, just as brightness floweth from the sun or a candle, and appeareth to be somewhat—this or that. It is called a creature—self, I, mine, me.—Now, when that which is perfect is come that which is in part shall be done away; but when doth it come? I say, when, as much as may be, it (the perfect—God) is known, felt and tasted of the soul; for the lack lieth altogether in us, not in it. In like manner the sun lighteth the whole world, and is as nigh to one as to another, yet the blind man seeth it not; but the fault lieth in the blind man, not in the sun. And, like as the sun may not hide his brightness, but giveth light unto the earth, so also God, who is the highest good, willeth not to hide Himself from any, wheresoever He findeth a devout soul that is purified from all the creatures; for, in what measure we put off the creature (self), in the same measure we put on the Creator. In life that which is in part shuts out that which is perfect: self, the created, bars out God, the Creator. You, Aunt Polly, have felt, tasted and known much of that which is perfect, and your life has been a struggle to do away with that which is in part. The struggle is drawing to a close with you; and it is natural that that which is in part, or self, should make a mighty final struggle. But be fervent in love, and death will soon throw open the blinds and doors of your soul for the final and consummate entrance of that which is perfect. Then will you be filled with all the fullness of God.

Aunt Polly.—

"When languor and disease invade
This trembling house of clay,
'Tis sweet to look beyond our cage,
And long to fly away."

Three truths dawned upon me from this talk: That love, with an eddy's force, draws the soul Godward in concentric circles, the suction intensifying as the storms advance; That self and God are mutually exclusive, the one involving a denial of the other; That the Holy Spirit educates the soul to grasp truth after which philosophy struggles in vain, evinced in the brightening eye of Aunt Polly as I talked of substance.

Take the candle of God's word, and search the corners of your heart.

Two things are to be trembled at: the presence of God which fills all places, and the word of God which reaches to all times.

INFANTILE CONVERSION.

NUMBER II.

The theory of conversion for which we are going to contend is this: A conversion so early that an experimental knowledge of religion shall precede the experimental knowledge of sin.

The present theory upon which our church has been built, and upon which it now stands, is just the opposite of this: that is, it supposes that sin must have taken place before conversion.—That this is indeed the case with the thousands of our Israel who have been converted to God, and that ample provision for such cases in the future has been made in the Gospel, is not denied: but we contend for a mode of conversion by which the fearful admission of sin into the heart may be estopped and prevented, by the grace of God, in the children of pious parents.

If this is not possible, then, indeed, may the friends of Zion, who watch for the millennial period in which there shall be none left to say, KNOW GOD, but when all shall know Him from the least unto the greatest, yield up their hopes to despair; because, under the present theory, that day can never come. There will never cease to be sinners upon the face of the earth; nor can it be even hoped that the church will ever gain any addition of strength in communities where the Gospel has been planted for a generation or more. Let there be given a community to whom the Gospel has been preached for a generation, and half that community have been converted; under the present theory the next generation will choose only the same or similar results. Because, if all of them are to grow up to be sinners before conversion; and if the present means only avail for the conversion of one half of a given number of sinners, then will this average remain and continue world without end!

This has indeed been much the case in the history of the church hitherto.—In some places she may have gained upon the general average, but in others she has lost. And there are places in New England, for instance, in which churches have maintained the same relative strength to the community for two hundred years or more.

The only hope for the final conversion of the world on this theory is an increased outpouring of the Holy Spirit in rendering the present means of grace far more efficient than they have ever been before; but this hypothesis is as applicable to the one theory as the other; or, rather, more to be hoped for under the new theory, for when "the hearts of the fathers are turned to the children, and the hearts of the children are turned to their fathers," then the day of Christ will soon come.—Mal. iv, 6. The whole doctrines of "the fall and rising again of Israel," may be illustrated by the following simile: Let Adam unfallen be compared to a good and fruit-bearing tree—apple, olive, grape—upon which God looked after the creation, and pronounced it very good. By an inscrutable providence this tree becomes corrupted in its root and fruit, so that the husbandman is compelled to declare, "I looked for grapes, and behold wild grapes." It is so, moreover, with every scion that springs from the original stock, with a tendency to still further degeneration. The husbandman looks on with disappointment, and considers what shall be done. At first it repents Him that He had made man. He, therefore, destroys the whole family, reserving only a very few of the best as a seed for new planting; these likewise degenerate; and finally He introduces from heavenly soil a new stock, in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is planted at Jerusalem, with a power of infinite multiplication; and from this new stock he takes buds and inoculates the degenerate stock of Adam, when, lo! a new race springs up, bearing fruit after its kind, that is, after Christ, though the root remains the same. The mode of grafting is to cut down the old stock, and ingraft the new upon the same root; thus from the wild apple, olive or grape, we have an improved tree bearing fruit after the manner of that from which it was grafted instead of that to which it has been set. Nor does it matter as to the age or size of the root to which this transfer is made, so that the germ be brought from a fruit-bearing tree; if the former have never borne its own wild fruit, it will be the easier to be grafted upon, and will bear as readily; granted a kindred relation, as that of the first and second Adam, the result will come as from the second. Nor will any amount of culture upon the original stock supply the place of grafting, to bring back the degenerate fruit to its proper kind. Religion requires the putting off the old man and the putting on of the new.

If this be a true illustration in those points wherein the analogy is intended, then it is evident our theory will not exclude the conversion of the oldest sinner, though in his case the difficulties are always increasing:

"While the lamp holds out to burn,—
The vilest sinner may return."

But, nevertheless, it holds forth high and important advantages in respect to those cases in which the heart has not yet borne the fruit of sin. Here the difficulties are lighter, the stock is more tender, the insceptibilities are greater. Here you may hide the cicatrix below the soil, and allow the plant to grow as if it were sui generis. Here God, the Divine Husbandman, may command the blessing even life forevermore—a life which shall begin with the first risings of moral consciousness, and never end. From this tree there need be cast off no fruitless boughs; nor will there spring from it any thorns or brambles "which are nigh unto cursing, fit to be burned."

To return to theological accuracy.—In Adam all fell, and every child of man is born corrupt. But Jesus Christ has introduced a remedial system, we are told, intended to repair all the injury incurred by the fall. The nature of this is such, that it cannot be applied, as far as we know, to unconscious beings. But there is a period between the rise of consciousness and the date of moral responsibility to God, reaching, say, from one to twelve years of age, within which we contend for the practicability of a conversion anterior to sin.

JUVENIS.

Ala. Conf., Nov. 1, 1856.

BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

The following paragraph has recently been widely circulated in the papers:

The following books are referred to in the Bible, but are now lost. The number is greater than is generally supposed: "The Prophecy of Enoch." See Epistle to Jude 14. "The Book of the Wars of the Lord." See Num. 21: 14. "The Prophetical Gospel of Eve, which relates to the Amours of the Sons of God with the Daughters of Men." See Origin Cont. Celsum, Tertul. &c. "The Book of Jashur." See Joshua 10: 13; and 2 Samuel 1: 18. "The Book of Iddo the Seer." See 2 Chron. 9: 29; and 12: 15. "The Book of Nathan the Prophet." See as above. "The Prophecies of Abijah, the Shilonite." See as above. "The Acts of Rehoboam, in the Book of Shemaiah." See 2 Chron. 12: 15. "The Book of Jehu the son of Hanani." See 2 Chron. 20: 34. "The Five Books of Solomon, treating on the nature of trees, beasts, fowl, serpents and fishes." See 1 Kings 4: 33."

Of this collection of books, the Christian Intelligencer, of New York, gives the following estimate:

There are no "lost books of the Bible". No man has proved or can prove that any portion of canonical Scripture has perished. There are, indeed, books mentioned or referred to in the Bible which are not now extant, but none of these are intended as part of the revelation of God and the rule of our faith. As to the "Prophecy of Enoch," Jude, in the place quoted, does not say that there was any such writing. So the "Gospel of Eve" is a pure fiction of men, for the Scriptures give no authority for any such book. As to Solomon's utterances upon natural history, it is not said that they were committed to writing; and if they were, they no more made a part of Scripture than did his private letters to his friends. The Book of the Wars of the Lord may have been a mere muster-roll of the army, and the Book of Jasher (rectitude) some compound of civil regulations. The Books of Gad, Nathan, Iddo, Shomaiah, etc., were quite probably parts of what we now have in the canon, under another name; since 1 and 2 Samuel, 1 and 2 Kings, and 1 and 2 Chronicles were doubtless written, not by one but a succession of prophets. (Compare the 18th, 19th, and 20th chapters of 2 Kings with the 36th, 37th and 38th of Isaiah.) It remains, then, to be proved that any real part of the Bible has been lost; the Providence of God, the well-known vigilance of the Jews, and the remarkable preservation of what Scripture we have, all being very strong presumptive arguments against any such theory. The Greek version of the Old Testament shows that the Hebrew Scriptures were, three hundred years before Christ, the same as they are now; and the repeated and unqualified testimony of the blessed Savior to their integrity, is sufficient to remove every cavil from an intelligent mind.

The word of God must be nearer to us than our friends, dearer to us than our lives, sweeter to us than our liberty, and pleasanter to us than all earthly comforts.

THE CAMEL AND THE NEEDLE'S EYE.

St. Matthew, xix. 24; St. Mark, x. 25; St. Luke, xviii. 25. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven."

I can scarcely remember the time in my early youth, when this text did not excite my curiosity and wonder. In the days of the Evangelist, as well as our own, needles were of various sizes. There are the large needles, such as St. Paul used in making tents, and such also, as we know, are employed in making the broad sails of some great admiral. There are the finest points of steel, used in ancient and modern times, in the most delicate kinds of needle-work, fit to deck the person of a Queen at her coronation. The camel is a beast of burden, much used in eastern countries. It is about the size of the largest ox, with one or two bunches on its back, with long neck and legs, and with feet adapted to the hot and sandy desert. Such is the general understanding of the two more prominent terms of the passage of the Holy Writ, now under consideration.

Some have supposed that a slightly varied reading in the original word, which is translated "camel," might be adopted, by which the phrase would be made to mean, a "cable," such as is used in anchoring ships in the roadstead. Then the text would read: "It is easier for a cable to go through the eye of a needle," &c. But the former is probably the most correct reading, for the whole figure seems to have been a maxim, quite prevalent in the East. Among the Babylonians, in whose country elephants were not uncommon, the phrase was, "an elephant passed through a needle's eye." But the elephant was a stranger in Judea, while the camel was well known; and therefore the latter was used by the Jews, instead of the former to give force to the maxim. Obviously the object of this form of speech was to express a thing absolutely impossible.

But I have met with another explanation of this striking figure, which, to say the least, adds to its beauty and force. All the important cities of the East, in ancient times, were surrounded by high and massive walls; and so they are, as the modern traveller informs us, at the present day. At certain points, these walls were perforated by large passage-ways, for the exit and entrance of the inhabitants. These passage-ways in times of peace, were open by day, but at night they were closed by massive gates, capable of resisting any common assault. Now, by the side of these large entrances, were very much smaller ones, used by foot passengers, and by those who had occasion to go forth, or enter the city by night. They were called "the needle's eye." Lord Nugent, an English traveler of modern times, when at Hebron, was directed to go out by "the needle's eye," that is, by the small side-gate of the city. The camel can go through the needle's eye, but with difficulty, and hardly with a full load; not without stopping.

I think this expresses the just idea of the passage, "It is easier for a camel to go through the needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the gate of heaven." It is not impossible for a rich man to enter heaven, for we may believe there are many already in the paradise of God, who consecrated their wealth to the service of their redeemer, and trusted in him always for salvation. But just as the camel must be relieved of part of his load, before he can pass through the "needle's eye," so the rich man must divest himself of large portions of his wealth, in the walks of benevolence, in order to enter the gates of glory. Our Saviour seems to have reference to the same idea when he says, "Strait is the Gate." And as the camel was compelled to stoop, in order to enter by the low and narrow gate of the city, so must the rich man learn humility, if he would "see the Lord," "in the fullness of joy."

The Conscientious Young Man.

There is no object so beautiful as a conscientious young man. I watch him as I do a star in the heavens. Clouds may be before him, but we know that his light is behind them, and will beam again. The blaze of others' prosperity may outshine him, but we know that though unseen, he illuminates his true sphere. He resists temptation, not without a struggle, for that is not virtue; but he does resist and conquer: he hears the sarcasm of the profligate, and it stings him, for that is the trial of virtue, but he heals the wound with his own pure touch. He heeds not the watchword of fashion, if it leads to sin. The atheist who says, not only in his heart, but with his lips, "There is no God," controls him not, for he sees the hand of a creating God and reverences it. Woman is sheltered by strong arms, and guided by loving counsel; old age is protected by its experience, and manhood by its strength. But the conscientious young man stands amidst the temptations of the world, a self-balanced power. Happy he who seeks and gains the prop and shelter of Christianity.

Onward then; raise thy standard, and nerve thyself for goodness. If God has given thee intellectual power, awaken it in that cause. Never let it be said of thee, He helped to swell the tide of sin, by pouring his influence into its channels. If thou art feeble in mental strength, throw not that poor drop into a polluted channel. Awake, arise, young man, wear the beautiful garment of virtue.—Caroline Gilman.

KILLING WITCHES.

[In the Autobiography of Rev. Joseph Travis is a very good thing about Rev. James E. Glenn, who died a few years ago, long a permanent citizen of East Alabama. This was when he lived and labored in S. Carolina.—ED.]

Brother James E. Glenn was a man of no ordinary talents. His polemical gift was equalled by few. He was a firm believer and a strong defender of the Methodist doctrines and usages. His zeal, united with prudence and knowledge, made him a very useful preacher; and many, no doubt, have been converted to God through his ministry. But I would not ignore the fact, that he had his peculiarities, and his own way of doing up things. At a certain place he had a regular appointment, but could get but few to hear him—the neighborhood consisting chiefly of what are now called Hard Shell Baptists—great advocates for water, but loving it still better when mixed with whisky. They were especially opposed to the Methodists; and hence influenced all they could against Brother Glenn. The greater part of them were ignorant and superstitious, believing in witches, wizards, hobgoblins, bloody bones, etc. Brother Glenn availed himself of this superstitious mania prevailing in the neighborhood, and stuck up several written advertisements, that at such a place, day and hour, he intended to kill witches. The news spread from Dan to Beersheba. The day came—the crowd was great. Brother Glenn sings and prays, and then gives out his text: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." Now, says he, I understand that there are three witches in this neighborhood—yea, and I believe it. There are at least three: one is called Calvinism, the second Universalism, and the third Infidelity. These three, by the grace of God, I intend butchering up to-day. And I understand that the best way to kill witches is, to draw their pictures, and then shoot at them. He proceeded to draw the picture of Geneva Calvinism. He descanted on the horrible decrees, etc., for some time. Now, says he, just look at her: what a haggard, frightful old wretch she is! They say we ought to shoot silver balls at them; but I am going to shoot golden balls. You will find my first shot in such a book, such a chapter and such a verse. Now, says he, make ready—take aim—fire: he would then roll out the text loudly and distinctly. And thus he kept firing for hours. After this, only let it be known that Glenn was to preach, and the house would be crowded.

RIGHT EYED.

In a paper read before the Association for the advancement of Science, at its recent session in Albany, Professor John Brocklesby, of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., gives the following as the result of a series of experiments on "visual direction:"

In view of these facts, I am inclined to believe that most persons, when they gaze upon a near object with both eyes open, habitually neglect the image formed by the left eye, and employ that of the right to fix the visual direction—in fact, that we are right eyed.

Moreover, that cases sometimes occur where the left eye is used for this purpose, and in such exceptional instances the observers may be termed left eyed. A boy shoots marbles with both eyes open, and a sportsman not unfrequently brings down his game in the same manner; but I apprehend that in both instances the aim is as truly taken as if one eye was shut; and that either the right eye or the left eye gives the range, while the other is passive.

If it is true that the right eye, under the circumstances mentioned, possesses a superiority over the other, the fact would be in strict accordance with some other physiological phenomena. We are all aware of the pre-eminence which the right hand has over the left, either from habit or otherwise. How much more ready and quick it is in all its motions being the first to advance whenever the hand is needed. So marked is this characteristic that we term expertness and activity of manipulation dexterity. Right handedness constitutes the law, left handedness the exception. The same fact is observed in respect to the feet. In the game of foot-ball, for instance, the right foot naturally comes first into play, and is decidedly more active than the other. The superiority of one organ of vision over the other would not, therefore, constitute an anomaly, neither would it be surprising if the same phenomenon should be found to exist in respect to one or more of the other senses.

DEMAND FOR THE BIBLE.—During the late trade sale in New York, there was an extensive demand for the Holy Scriptures. Many copies were disposed of to the booksellers assembled from all parts of the country, ranging in price from $1 to $1. 50. This demand for the sacred volume, in addition to the immense supply sent out yearly by the Bible Society, is a cheering indication for the future of the Church and country, worthy of note.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.—A shepherd lost a sheep with its lamb. He went in pursuit of them. He found them far off in a lonely valley. He tried to drive them home, but was not able. At length he picked up and carried off the lamb, and the mother followed. Thus the Savior often brings a mother to herself by taking away her little child from her bosom.

We speak to God in prayer; God speaks to us in his word.

THE OLD AND THE NEW STYLE.

Julius Cæsar and his scientific associate, Sosigenes, very much improved the mode of reckoning time, when they established the Julian calender, and made every fourth year to consist of 366 days. They considered a tropical or solar year to contain 365¼ days, and hence the additional day every bissextile year—four quarter days being equal to a whole one. But, they rather overdid the matter; or even during the reign of Augustus Cæsar, a correction of three days was found requisite. Instead of being 365¼ days or 365 days 6 hours in length, the precise date show that a solar year contains just 365 days 5 hours 48 minutes 47.8 seconds. This makes a difference of 11 minutes 12.2 seconds between the Julian year and the actual year. This difference amounts to 24 hours 1 minute 12.2 seconds, or a trifle over a day in 131 years. Thus it was perceived as early as the year 1414 that the vernal and autumnal equinoxes were really leaving March 21 and September 21. These were their supposed dates in the third and fourth centuries.*

After the question had been agitated for nearly two centuries, and it was ascertained, that, since the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, to the year, 1852, the equinoxes occurred ten days earlier than the true time, or than they did at the session of that Council. Another individual was in Rome who had courage and public spirit enough to assume the responsibility of changing and rectifying the calculations of Cæsar. Pope Gregory XIII. made the calendar leap ahead ten days by calling the day next following October 4th, the 14th of October, 1582. He went one step further. To prevent a recurrence of the error, he ordered that only such centuries as could be divided by four without a remainder should be deemed bissextiles, viz., the 12th, 20th, 28th, and so on, which is equivalent to abating three days, from every four hundred years. We have seen above that 131 years produce one day's difference; and 393 years of course amount to three days difference. This, it will be observed, still leaves a small balance undisposed of; and this trifle will, in the lapse of many centuries, amount to a few days, about three days or less in 100 centuries. Now, as years are to be divided by four, and centuries are to be divided by the same number, and without a remainder too, designate the bissextile years if we devide the millennia or periods of thousands of years likewise by this number, and select those that leave no remainder by the division, the calendar would be corrected still more accurately. A hundred thousand years, or which is the same thing, a hundred millennia, would produce but the difference of one day.

The Pope's recommendation was embraced at once by Catholics generally; but Protestants did not so readily acquiesce in the decree. They retained the old Julian system till 1699. In 1700 the German Protestants imitated the Papal spencer of leap year, and made the calendar leap ten days ahead in February, so that March 1 immediately followed Feb. 18. This mode was not adopted by Great Britain till January, 1752. In September of that year she also made the calendar leap ahead to equalize the current of time. The third day of that month was called the 14th. Thus slowly was the new style adopted. Even now the Russians adhere to the Julian method, or old style. They are thereby about twelve days behind our date now.

Hence, we learn that Julius Cæsar authorized the bissextile, which proved to be slightly inaccurate, that Gregory corrected the inaccuracy in a great measure, and amended the leap year.—We also learn that every fourth century, and every fourth millenium, divisible by four without a remainder, is to have one day added to its length. And we further learn how it happened, that February is increased at these periods. And now since a military general introduced the Macadono Grecian calendar, (for this preceded the Latin), since an Emperor established the Roman mode or old style, and since a pope decreed the adoption of the Christian or new style, why may we not venture to hope that a President may contribute his part in recommending another improvement in our reckoning by rectifying the condition of the Christian era, and call the next year A. D. 1861, as it will in reality be instead of A. D. 1857? Such improvement would be the American style or era, as well as the Christian: and would soon be introduced throughout Christendom. Both imperial and papal Rome have made their deep marks on the face of the calender. Let something similar be accomplished by republican America. The margins of our very Bibles declare to us that we are four years behind age. We blunder blindfold forty-eight months into every century before we are aware that the previous century has really expired.

When we stated that the Roman year commenced with March, it was very clear why September, October, November and December were so called; for they were the seventh, the eighth, the ninth, and the tenth month, of the Roman year. In their language septem meant seven, octo eight, novem nine, and decem ten. Finally, January became the first month named from the two faced God Janus, looking at the same time towards the old and new year. February was named from the feast Februa, celebrated, in that month

*The real dates of the equinoxes and solstices at that time fell upon the twentieth day of March and September, June and December.

March from the God Mars; April from Apero, I open the buds, &c; May from the goddess Maia; and June, from Juno. Thus we find that everything with the Romans seemed to have a meaning. Why should it not with us? Why call this year 1856 of the Christian era, when it is 1860? Why name our era after a personage who claimed to be truth itself, and then compel every annual member of its long procession of centuries and millennia to act a continual falsehood?

THE ATHEIST SILENCED.

Some years ago, the Rev. Isaac Coleman made a trip to Iowa. On board of the steamer in which he took passage, there was a gentleman who took great pains to make known that he was opposed to Christianity and all forms of religion.

He spent most of the day in arguing with those who would dispute with him, and in pouring fourth anathemas against priestcraft and the credulity of mankind. He denounced Christ as an impostor, religion as a delusion, any particular form of worship or creed as the result or trammels of education, and that it was only tolerated by statesmen for the security of government, and the benefit of the weak and erring. He was evidently a man of education and ability. His repartee, drollery, sarcasm, and a faculty for turning things into the ridiculous, bore down so heavily upon those with whom he argued, that they were generally silenced though not convinced.

One day he was in high glee, and kept a crowd of passengers in a continual roar of laughter at his irreligious jokes and witticisms. On this occasion, Mr. Guseman, who had hitherto refrained from entering into any dispute or controversy with him, determined to try and silence him, or turn the laugh against him. He accordingly moved slowly towards the crowd the sceptic was amusing. On his approaching, the other observed:

"Well, old gentleman, I am a free-thinker; what is your notion about religion?"

"Why, sir, I have always been taught to believe in the truth of the Christian religion, and have never once had a doubt of the existence of a supreme and intelligent Cause. But in turn, let me ask you a question. 'Do you believe in the immortality of the soul?'"

"Certainly not; I have none!"

"Do you deny the existence of a God?"

"Most assuredly I do."

"Then, sir, I have heard of you before!"

"Heard of me before?"

"Yes, sir, I have read about you."

"Read about me! I was not aware that I was published. Pray where?"

"In the Psalms of David, sir, where it reads, 'The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God!'"

At this unlooked for turn in the argument, there was general burst of laughter and hurra, at the expense of the Atheist, who, confounded, and unable to rally at this being unexpectedly proved a fool, moved away to another part of the boat. During the remainder of the voyage the wiseacre was silent on religious subjects; but occasionally some of the passengers would tease him, by slyly observing, "I have heard of you before."

A Sabbath Day's Journey.

We sometimes hear people speak of "a Sabbath-day's journey towards heaven." But those who use that often repeated sentence should be reminded that, if it is employed figuratively at all, it should be to express the very opposite of considerable progress. The Sabbath day was not a day for traveling. The Sabbath's day's journey of which Luke speaks (Acts, i. 12) was no more than two thousand paces, or the greater mile, also called "the bound of the Sabbath," the utmost distance lawful for a journey on that day. This limitation was not imposed by God on the institution of the Sabbath, nor when the law was confirmed at the giving of the Decalogue, but was afterwards admitted by the Jews, on a decision of their rabbics. In the time of our Lord's incarnation, then "a Sabbath day's journey" was the measure of two English miles; and so it occurs once in the inspired volume. If, therefore, any mystical signification belong to the phrase, it must be altogether different from the meaning and wishes of those who use it. And be it remembered, that the inaccurate use of Scripture language leads to inaccuracy of conception as to spiritual truths, and, as a prolific source of error, cannot be too carefully avoided.

LITTLE SINS.—A little hole in a ship sinks it; a small breach carries all away before it; a little stab in the heart kills a man; and a little sin, as often improperly called, tends to his final destruction. Whatever the heart is prone to, that the devil will help forward.

SEVERE, BUT TRUE.—Macaulay, in his history of England, in reference to the character of those who often become converts to Popery, remarks, "We frequently see inquisitive and restless spirits take refuge from their own scepticism in the bosom of a Church which pretends to infallibility, and after questioning the existence of a Deity, bring themselves to worship a wafer."

All arguments against the word of God are fallacies; all conceits against his word are delusions; all derision against his word is madness.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION. — The Methodist Sabbath School in the Union Hall, on Jackson-st., 4th Dist., will hold its second anniversary next Sabbath afternoon, at 3 o'clock. A banner that cost $115 will be presented. The exercises will be entertaining and wholesome. This School ought to be encouraged. It is under the superintendence of our friend D. Maxwell, whose outlay of time and energy in its conduct is to be commended. The School is doing good.—Attend the anniversary, if you can.

WELL DONE ARKANSAS!—Bishop Pierce has been the Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society at New Orleans, by which dated Batesville, Nov. 3, that the collections in Arkansas Conference are enough to meet all the drafts upon the treasury for its domestic missions; and yet the drafts, for good reasons, are larger, by $500, than ever before. Here is progress. Arkansas is off the list.—Which next of those west of the Mississippi?

COUNTERFEIT BILLS.—A word to the preachers gathering up their yearly collections: Beware of counterfeits. The preachers will take up to Conference much of this stuff, if they don't look sharp. The amount of counterfeit bills that go into "benevolent collections" has got to be a feature of the times.—Every treasurer has an item of it on the credit side of his account. At the May anniversaries in New York one society had over $500 of this trash.

MUSIC BY STEAM.—The city and suburbs was startled out of its propriety on Saturday evening, by musical steam. A boat came down the river, from "out west," with its whistling apparatus turned into a machine of notes, that sounded very like a huge hand organ just around the corner of the street. Yankee Doodle, Savannah, and the like were played well. To everybody it seemed "just around the corner." The serenade was loud enough for 200,000 people, besides the dogs. The machine is called a "Calliope,"—and not until the reporters of the daily press found out the matter, and put it next morning, was the city set at rest—"What is it—where is it?"

A friend suggests that by and bye steam will be put to our church organs; first to one thing after another, till the congregation will have nothing left but to listen.

MILLS.—An Antiquity.—The first grist mill ever erected in Pennsylvania is yet in existence. It is a quaint old stone building, and bears the date about 1680. It is located on a small stream near Germantown, and some of the original machinery imported from England is still retained. We should like to see one of those mills advertised by Webster, on every page, put along side of that old one. It would show "progress." Planters and others who would save their own grain and do their own sawing, after the most approved method, would do well to call at Mr. Webster's Depot, Magazine-street.

SAVINGS BANK.—We have such a most excellent institution among us—fully guaranteed. Mr. Jones, the cashier, presides at his new premises on Canal-st. They have lately given the test of prosperity by declaring a 6 per ct. dividend.

REV. E. H. ROLLER.—This minister, the successor of Dr. Clapp, has arrived, and for a fortnight past occupied his pulpit.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO POST ROUTES.—These are changing and improving. Postmasters and patrons do us a favor who send suggestions as to the quickest routes for the Advocate to reach them.

DEATH OF REV. E. C. THORNTON.

The Rev. E. C. Thornton, one of the leading men in the Western Virginia Conference, and Pres. Elder of the Parkersburg District, met with a fatal accident on some Railroad in Wisconsin, while returning from a visit to his father in Iowa. The Janesville Free Press says that in attempting to get on the cars after they had started, both legs were thrown on the rail and were horribly mangled. Medical assistance was immediately called in and every effort made to get up sufficient re-action necessary for amputation, but with little avail until the afternoon of the next day, when a slight reaction occurring, at the urgent request of the sufferer and a large number of sympathizing friends, and being satisfied that it was the last resort, the physician amputated the limb. He bore it with much courage and self-possession, and retained his senses amid all the agonies to the last moment. No blame is attached to those in charge of the train, and every one connected with the road manifested much sympathy and assisted in their efforts to make him comfortable while he survived. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his untimely fate.—S. C. Adv.

PRAYING PART OF A CONGREGATION.

ALL hearers are not alike in their effect on the preacher. Some are simply absorbents, at best. They hear only—receive all—give back nothing. A famous pastor said to a desponding old lady who was doubting whether she lived to any purpose, "You help me a great deal. Every time I preach, with you before me, you help me."

Payson and a friend were returning home from church. His friend wondered at the earnestness manifested in the sermon, there appearing no special interest in the congregation. "Did you see that plain man sitting in the gallery? He devoured every word I said," was the reply.

"You have a chance to preach, a fine one, brother," remarked a preacher in the pulpit to him who was about to stand up, "three-fourths of your hearers are praying people."

Can God's messenger always calculate safely that way? Alas, some of the coldest critics are members of the church. The preacher looks into their faces, and hardly hopes they are praying for him.—If he could believe it, it would strengthen him. He has a right to expect their sympathy. What! Is there no difference between preaching to a congregation made up of unconverted, worldly people and one three-fourths of which are praying people?

Christians, can the messenger of your Master count on your help, when he sees you in the congregation?

A. B. C. F. M.

At the 47th meeting of this Missionary body a member of the Prudential Committee said it was their custom in making their appropriations to make them upon the principle of faith, without any money in the treasury—depending upon the contributions of the churches. The credit of the Board is good. They have a credit of £25,000 with their banker in London, who never asks any security, but takes the word of the Board.

The Rev. Dr. Pomeroy said they had free access to Turkey, while English missionaries would be looked upon with suspicion. Our British brethren are doing nobly, and acting in a truly catholic spirit. But the door is open; we have possession. We must furnish the men; and they who furnish the men must also give the means. We have access to 36,000,000 of people in Turkey, where the field is our own. Great responsibility rests upon Christians in this land. We are rolling in wealth and likely to be injured by it.

Horace Holden, Esq, feared that the great difficulty consisted in the prosperity of the country. In the terrible year 1843–4, there was as much raised for the American Board as was raised for it last year. They ought to raise between $600,000 and $700,000. Another difficulty is that the masses of the people are not reached. He hoped that the clergymen from the rural districts would take systematic means to reach all their people. Their large benefactions are numerous. Some city churches do liberally. But they must depend upon the masses and reach them.

The Board settled the controversy between teaching and preaching, as the main means of discipling the heathen. Preaching, the spoken word—was declared to be the great instrument, over schools and before them. And so will their foreign missionaries be governed, we presume, in their general policy. The matter has excited much debate and research.

REVIVALS.

GREEN CIR., ALA. CONF., Nov. 5.

We commenced a meeting on this circuit, at Pleasant Grove Church, on Friday night before the third Sunday in October, which lasted nine days. And on leaving the consecrated spot, most of us could unite in saying, it was good for us to be there. During the meeting, thirty one professed to have received pardon of sins: over thirty eight joined the Church. But the good that was done, was not confined to the conversions of sinners, but the Church members received largely of the benefits of the meeting. On Tuesday after the first Sunday of the meeting, we met at ten o'clock, at the Church, for prayer meeting, and it was about five o'clock in the evening before we left church. Such a scene of rejoicing I have scarcely ever witnessed, and so much old fashioned Methodist shouting I have not heard for years; work continued on that night until nine o'clock, when it was ascertained that fifteen had been converted during the day and night. And though some infidel parents have turned their children out of doors in consequence of embracing religion at this meeting, we trust they have a title to a home in Heaven.

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.

THIS body closed a harmonious session, at Batesville, Nov. 3. The Editor of the Memphis Advocate, from which we derive our information, says $450 were realized at the Missionary Anniversary.—Bishop Pierce presided with eminent satisfaction. The Editor says:—

The Conference has improved more this year in its missionary collections than any other in the whole Church. Year before last its collections were about four hundred, last year about seven hundred, while this year it will be about three three thousand dollars. This great improvement has doubtless been effected mainly by the "locking" which the preachers say the Bishop gave the Conference in consequence of their failure to present and urge the claims of the missionary cause to their people. We were disposed to congratulate them upon their improvement, and hope they will continue to advance in the same ratio until this young and promising Conference shall take its place among the foremost in this great and glorious cause. The next Conference is to be held at Jacksonville.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

SANTA ROSA, FLA., Nov. 2, 1856.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South:

DEAR SIR: I would include my report for the two last quarters of this (the Fish River Mission) of the Alabama Conference in this communication.

We have on this work some five or six appointments extending over a thinly populated country between Pensacola, Florida, and the Mobile Bay, Alabama.

We have admitted on trial twenty one, taken in to the church two by letter, and baptised twenty three. Our congregations for so sparcely a settled country have been good, and the people who attend church attentive to the word preached.

We are of the opinion that it should be still continued Missionary ground, and that much good will yet be effected here.

May the God of Missions bless this work. Amen,

ZACHEUS DOWLING.

OTHER CHURCHES.

M. E. CHURCH, NORTH.

Supporting a Missionary.—A Methodist merchant in Philadelphia has made himself responsible for the regular support of one foreign missionary to the amount of $750 per year. Go and do likewise.

Rev. THOMAS M. EDDY, A. M., of the Southeastern Indiana Conference, has been elected to the editorship of the Chicago Advocate, vacant by death of Dr. Watson. He is called from Indianapolis district, where he was traveling, when elected, as presiding elder. Though rather a young man, he has been about fifteen years a traveling minister, and he comes to the office of the Advocate with the saddlebags upon his arm, and the itinerancy in his heart.

The Western Book Agents bought an eligible sight in Chicago, and will build an office for the Advocate and Book Depository there.

The total number of subscribers to the weekly Christian Advocates of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, not including those on the Pacific coast, is one hundred and sixteen thousand three hundred and forty-six. Number of copies of the Sunday School Advocate sent out semi-Monthly, one hundred and twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and twelve.

BAPTIST.

Liberal Endowment.—The Chicago Christian Times says the subscription of one hundred thousand dollars, for the building of the Baptist University in that city, has been completed, and additional sums have been added, so that the whole amount received for that object cannot be less than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The Baptist State Convention of Texas, met 25th ult., in Anderson, Texas. A very large delegation present. The Texas Baptist says:

"A more intelligent, pious and harmonious body we have never seen. Not an unkind word was spoken during the whole Convention, so far as we know. All seemed to be influenced only by brotherly love and a desire to glorify God in doing good.

Brother Huchins was again elected President, and Brother H. Clark, Recording Secretary. As the Minutes will be published in our paper, we shall only remark now that a much larger amount of money was raised for missionary purposes than at any previous session, notwithstanding the general failure in crops. A spirit of Christian liberality was manifested that we have never seen surpassed in this or any other State. The Convention closed its session Tuesday night, about eleven o'clock. The Executive Board held its meeting on Wednesday, and appointed twelve missionaries, who are to labor principally in the frontier counties and other destitute missions."

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The congregation of the Church of the Epiphany (Protestant Episcopal) in Philadelphia, held an election to decide whether the Vestry should be sustained in the rebuke given to the Pastor, Rev. Dudley A. Tyng, for preaching a political sermon some time since. The vote stood for the Vestry 57, against it 44.

This involves the resignation of the Pastor, agreeably to his determination previously announced, that if not sustained by the congregation he would resign.

The Late Episcopal Convention.—The Protestant Churchman after speaking of the late General Convention of the Episcopal Church, as having consisted of thirty bishops and two hundred and fifty laymen and clergymen, who had been deliberating for three weeks, says:

"In view of all this, it is natural to inquire how much of this true work of the Church has been accomplished by this assemblage of 'Fathers,' clergymen and laymen. With the exception of the passage of a canon, requiring a bishop to reside within his own diocese, the declaration by the House of Bishops, that of the three parts which are now combined in our usual morning service, a single portion, any two, or all may be used at the discretion of the minister, and an amendment to the Constitution providing for the subdivision of dioceses, very little of any real value to the true interests and great business of the Church, has been done."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The American Presbyterian is tired of accurate dryness at the expense of freedom and power in the pulpit, and thus reads a lecture on Preachers for the Times:—

"Here we are, reading sermons, dividing justification, adoption, and sanctification into a dozen heads each, fighting forgotten controversies, splitting seventeenth century hairs, handling everything with gloves, looking at everything as scholars in libraries look at them, preaching people's heads into a confused vertigo, or entirely failing to gain their attention, and yet every man has in the main a clear, discriminating knowledge of theology. Was there ever such a failure in the adaptation of means to ends?

Does any one ask us how a minister ought to preach? He should stand firm in his pulpit, as God had put him there; he should look his people in the eye, and talk to them, not loosely, nor childishly, nor vulgarly, but like a man, a scholar, and a christian; and at the same time so as to interest them; he should come to their stratum of thought and feeling; he should illustrate a thing, so that they will see and feel it, and like a lawyer with a jury, or a stump speaker, he should gain and hold his audience, and he should never be satisfied until he can do so. A man may be anything else, but he is not a public speaker if he cannot gain and hold the attention of a mixed crowd. But he must be learned by practice. Our present system hardens a man with a fossil in his forming period, and asks him to shape himself to new circumstances, when the power of shaping is gone. Leaders of the church, can you not form your ministers in the gristle, instead of the bone?"

Ministerial Success.—The Presbyterian, Philadelphia, calls attention to a striking fact disclosed by the Old School Presbyterian Minutes of last year, that nearly one-fourth of all the churches of that body are reported as vacant.

We have had the curiosity, says the Presbyterian Herald, to look into the Minutes of the General Assembly, with a view to arriving at the comparative results of ministerial labor in the different sections of the church during the past year. Taking the whole number of ministers, the average result of their labors during the year was an addition to the churches of about five and a third members on profession of their faith to each minister. The average in the western Synods was, to each minister in Kentucky, five; in Cincinnati, five and three-fourths; in Nashville, three and a third; in Indiana, five and a half; in Missouri, six and a half; in Iowa, three and a half; in Mississippi, four; in Illinois, five; in Memphis, three and three-fourths; and in Wisconsin, two and one-eighth.

Religion in Russia.

The largest national church in the world, is the "Greek Church" in Russia.

It embraces from forty to forty-five millions of people. Besides these, Russia contains Lutheran and other Protestants, three or four millions; Roman Catholics, seven millions; Mohommedans, two and a half millions; Jews, perhaps, two millions; and about half a million pagans! All these heterogeneous religions elements are brought into one, for practical purposes, under the despotic supremacy of the Czar, who appoints and controls the high ecclesiastical courts. No small debate and negotiation has been and is at this moment going on between Russia and Rome, in consequence of this assumption of the latter power's most jealously guarded prerogatives, and with a probability of ultimate concessions to the "spiritual" independency of the Bishops.

A Family of Preachers.

Chilly McIntosh, D. N. McIntosh, Louis McIntosh, William McIntosh and Thomas McIntosh, all half blood Indians, are preachers of the gospel in the Creek Nation, and sustained by the Domestic Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. Most, if not all of them, were brought into the church of Christ by the indefatigable labors of Rev. H. F. Buckner.

THE PUBLIC.—"The Public," said Chalmers truthfully and wittily, "is just a big baby." "What a knowledge of society is here," adds Bayne; "and what a comparison! a big baby! a great pulpy, lumbering thing that can do nothing but bawl."

The Univers, a leading Catholic newspaper in Paris, says: "In all the Catholic cities in Germany, the statistical returns make it apparent that the number of Protestants is increasing in a fearful manner."

Death to a Christian is putting off rags for robes.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from our Fayro Ladye.

LONDON.
August 29th, 1856.

This Sydenham Palace, you remember, is the Hyde Park Crystal Palace, removed to Sydenham and enlarged after the first great exhibition (that of 1851,) was over. Those who have seen both tell me that the Sydenham Palace is finer in its effect than the old one, as that had a flat roof and in this the roof springs up in a beautiful arch, and this is much larger too—but one thing the old palace had which this can never have, two magnificent oak trees in full leaf growing inside its walls of crystal. A little railroad drive of seven miles, brings you to a gently-rising slope, and you can either go up a glare arch-way, covered by flowering vines and leading into the palace, or start at once from the lowest parts of the grounds and so have the grand building break upon you gradually, as you climb slowly from terrace to terrace, and see first the flags and then the roof, and finally the dazzling glistening whole. I wish I could give an adequate idea of its size, but I have forgotten the number of feet, and can only compare it to three of our longest New Orleans blocks. Recalling it now as I first saw it, I feel sure there is so no exaggeration in saying this, and only a probability of having much underated it. The grounds are well laid out and in ten years it will be a beautiful park, but now the trees are mere shrubs; the view, however, is very fine; long slopes of grass, and harvest-crowned hills, intermingling with patches of dark green forests, and still farther off a smoke rising up and hanging over the great city. On the terraces nearest the palace, fountains are playing, but knowing that in a few hours we shall see the finest display of waterworks ever known in the world, these fountains seem small and trifling to us, although in reality they are very fine. A slope of stone steps, a quarter of a mile long on each side, surrounded by ten bronze figures, each representing a child of 9 or 10 supporting a Tazza, forming a fountain's basin on its head, leads from the large centre fountain down. Then two most beautiful Moorish summer-houses of glass are below, but still in full view from above, and yet below lakes, with rocks in the centre, are seen. It is 4 o'clock, the band ceases to play, the grounds are full of small ant-like men and women, and every gallery is crowded. At once, as if by a touch of magic, long columns of spray, tossing in the strong wind and glistening in the bright sunlight, spring up from the lowest terrace, and each Moorish bower has become a magical fountain, the water springing from the gilt peak on top, and flowing unceasingly down the sides, and dropping with its musical tingle into the basin below; and now each bronzed child becomes a strange water-carrier, and from their heads leap up streams of water which quickly fill and overflow the saloons and down the steps between, the water goes gurgling, gurgling, until it reaches a brink of stone not fully concealed, when, with a sudden dash, it plunges into a little gulf below. Look! look! and more beautiful jets are dancing in the light, and the eye grows bewildered. One moment before and all was dry and silent, and now over all the hum of 11,000 voices, the splash and ripple of falling water is heard, and 11,000 jets are throwing out their silver spray.

The highest fountains throw 280 feet high, and 150,000 gallons of water are flowing every minute. We leave our gallery and rush breathlessly down to the lowest fountains, proposing to go leisurely up admiring each one, but by the time we reach that far away one, the lofty column begins to waver, and slowly (and to our excited imaginations) reluctantly it sinks lower and lower, and in five minutes only a drop or two is left. As we turn backward toward the palace again, we see that in all of them the water is gradually diminishing, and soon of all this gorgeous vision—this dream of enchantment—nothing is left but a never-dying memory in our brains, and the three or four smaller fountains which always are playing. We draw a long breath and look in each others faces to realize that we have not been dreaming or have not been in the remembered fairy-land of our childish love. All this long day we find ourselves doing the same thing, as vision after vision of wonderful beauty rises before as as we go through the palace. Large hanging baskets filled with moss and earth, and covered over by beautiful drooping flowering vines, and the wonderful English geranium and lachsia of great size and brilliance of color are suspended from every point of the galleries within and below; immense shrubs of laurel and myrtle and arbor-vitae, intermingled with gay beds of flowers, breaking the monotony of the wooden floorings.

The subdued light coming from the high roof, the light graceful arches entwined with vines, the rich and bright colors of ladies' dresses below, and the distant glimpse of mammoth Assyrian bulls, and human figures and the nearer one of Grecian statues and Roman busts, make you sigh and dream, and start and sigh and dream again. Surely it cannot be real, you say again and again, but the fragrance of the flowers and the rustling of silks, and the low murmur, of voices once more convince you for a moment, but still you doubt all the while—so marvelously strange is it all. We go far back to the end of the court of tropical plants, and recognize with a joyful smile many of our Southern plants—the Latauler, the Palmeto and Fringo tree, the Orange, Lemon and Banana trees, especially. Next is the Assyrian or Ninevah court, where colossal human figures, copied in plaster after those discovered by Mr. Layard in Nineveh, frown down upon us poor little pigmies, and here crouch gigantic bulls with stately human faces; and fresco paintings of battles, and lion fights, line the windows and rooms with their two ingeniously painted entrances. What an exaggerated, yet grand conception (in spite of its grotesqueness) those old nations, now passed away, must have had. After these terrifying figures, the quiet and softened light of the court of the Alhambra, strikes upon you most gratefully. These three rooms, small as they are, are exact transcripts of the courts of Alhambra in Granada, Spain, as Washington Irving and others have discribed them. But vivid as his discription is, it gives no such idea of their beauty as this copy does. There is the celebrated court of Lions, with its marble pavement and fountain, and wonderfully carved walls with their mingling colors of red, white, and blue—the three primary colors, but what a marvelous effect the different proportions of each color makes. One room with its inlaid colored floor and high ceiling—its dark high surface, where a little black and green mingle with the other three colors, and its light delicate carvings, the lower or rather the inner carving being white and blue, and the outer ones gilt and red with its rose-colored curtains, mats and flowers, is one's ideal of a quiet slumbering place in the mid-day heat, only that the European dresses look out of place, and if a dark Moorish maiden, such as Irving loves to describe in his "tales of Alhambra" were to come gliding in, it would not startle us at all. Next this is a pretty little boudoir, its walls all white, but the light that comes from above through the red, blue, and yellow stained glass cone that crowns it, makes them of a beautiful purple or pinkish blue as it happens to fall. But this will aid you but little in realizing the most wonderful beauty of these rooms. After these, the French, German, and English Medieval courts were clumsy and vulgar in their heavy ornamenting, and their great dashes of coloring instead of the picking out of colors, that these Moors practiced so successfully. There, too, besides these three—Medieval courts, was the court of Renaissance—filled with plaster copies of the carvings and statutes of that day. But it would have taken hours to have seen all these statues that crowded these four courts as well as those of Greece and Rome. So we only looked at the whole and go on to see the fine music saloon fitted up in the centre by tent hangings, and from that to the long picture gallery at one end, where we stop only at two pictures, which make us laugh gaily. One is New York in winter, with an omnibus sleigh dashing through Broadway. The other, New Orleans at sunset, and all that can be seen here are two or three steeples, and a piece of the levee covered with bales and barrels; and one of our great Western steamboats with fires lighted. I wonder what impression of N. O. this gives these sober-looking people about. We are now wearied out and the ladies of our party are seated in nicely cushioned turn chairs, set on rollers and pushed behind by a man who takes us wherever we choose to go for 37½ cents an hour.

In one of the centred isles they are erecting a fine memorial of the Peace, but it was not finished sufficiently for us to tell what it was intended to be. Every day some improvement is going on, some addition being made, and this great Crystal Palace stands as a glorious monument to the taste, energy and perseverance of the English people. All persons are admitted for 25 cents, except on one of the great waterworks days, and then $2 00 is asked, because the expense of setting all the fountains in motion for even half an hour, is enormous. The sun is setting as we leave, and brightening the landscape, at which we take a last look, and a few minutes takes us back again to London, which seems unconscious of this rival to its wonders so near at hand.

ROSS' SOUTHERN SPEAKER. Published by J. B. Steel, N. O., 1856.

Mr. D. B. Ross, a successful teacher in this State, has brought out this useful school book, wherein boys may find suitable pieces for declamation. The word Southern is not out of place.—Scraps of political speeches are potent to form public sentiment.

THE TONGUE OF FIRE; OR, THE TRUE POWER OF CHRISTIANITY.

Our publishing house (Nashville) has brought out this volume handsomely. Dr. Summers gives it a good touch as it passes through his editorial hands. We like this edition as well as the Harpers. Let all the people and preachers get it and read it.

THE HIDDEN LIFE EXEMPLIFIED.

Another fresh and delightful volume added to the department of religious literature by our book agents. Mrs. Florilla Cummings was such a Christian, and had such experience of daily and religious life, that many will be encouraged to patience, usefulness, and holiness, by her example, as here set forth by the affectionate and discriminating hand of her husband—Dr. Cummings, President of Holsten Female College, Ashland, N. C. We take the volume into the recesses of our home.

HANNAH WIDAIFIELD'S COOK BOOK. T. B. Peterson, Phila., 1856.

We laid this book on the table where the key-basket lies, and received this judgment on it: "It is plain in directions, and, unlike most of its kind, not extravagant in the materials called for." These are good qualities surely. Then the very names of the dishes that catch one's eye as one's hand turn the leaves is enough to make one's mouth water.

Gone Right over It.

I have a friend, whose ready wit often enlivens the social circle, and sometimes also faithfully serves the cause of truth. One Sabbath morning, as he stepped from his house to go to church, he met a stranger driving a heavily-loaded wagon through the town. He turned upon him, stopped, lifted both hands and stood in a tragic attitude, gazing upon the ground beneath the vehicle, and exclaimed, "There! there! you are going right over it! You have gone right over it!" The traveler hastily gathered up his reins, drew in his horses, came to a dead stand, and began looking under his wheels to see what little innocent child, or dog, or pig, might have been ground to jelly by their heavy weight. But seeing nothing, he looked anxiously up to the man who had so singularly arrested his progress, and said, "Over what?" "The fourth commandment!" was the quick reply; "Remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy." It was hard starting those wheels again, and hard having that load all the rest of the day.—Norwich Examiner.

A dead faith is as barrenless as the barren fig-tree which the Saviour cursed.

TUSKEGEE, Nov. 4th, 1856.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The members of the Conference, upon arriving at Tuskegee, will call at the Methodist Church, in sight of the square, and learn of their homes during the Conference.

I would also inform the members of the Conference that the President of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad will charge them only for the ticket to Chehaw, which is our depot, and will return them free—which is the same as half price each way.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS CALLED FOR—10,000 to the Home Circle—3000 to the Quarterly Review, and not less than 50,000 to the Sunday school Visitor.

Shall we not have them by the first of January next? This is a grave question; and we submit it in confidence to the ministry, membership, and friends of the entire Connection. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you especially for a large increase of patronage to all our Publishing House Periodicals. The present is a favorable season for obtaining new subscribers, as well as for securing the renewal of old ones. On leaving your different charges, for the purpose of attending your respective Conferences, would it not be well to take with you from five to twenty new subscribers? This can certainly be done in almost every case, if the proper efforts be made. And on entering the new fields of labor to which you may be assigned, if you desire, as we knew you do, to see a great and glorious revival of enlightened, genuine, and enduring piety among the people of your several charges; and if you would bring all the available means and instrumentalities of the Church to bear on the accomplishment of this one great object, let all our prodical issues be fully and freely circulated in every part of your work; and see to it, that this be done at the earliest possible day. Confiding implicitly both in your ability and disposition to carry out this important enterprise, we have but to remind you that a strict, through prudent, adherence to the cash system, will be to the interest of all concerned. Be careful to receive the money, as far as practicable, at the time of taking the subscriptions and renewals; and don't fail to remit it to us, if possible, in connection with the names and post offices of the subscribers.—This will be a special accommodation to us, and a great relief to our clerks.

LOCAL NEWS.

FREE SEATS.—The Second Presbyterian Church, corner Prytania and Calliope streets, has declared for free seats. We publish with pleasure the following statement:

The Savior's command to "preach the Gospel to every creature," seems to imply provision for the access of all, "without money and without price" to the privilege of the sanctuary. "Whoever will, let him come." Many are unable to pay for seats, while others profess to have conscientious scruples in respect to pew rents. Every stumbling block, whether real or imaginary, ought, if possible, to be removed out of the way of the salvation of men. New Orleans is a great missionary field, where many tens of thousands are passing "unwarned" to the judgment seat of Christ and to the retributions of eternity. Actuated by these views,

At a meeting Nov. 12, 1856, the session of the Second Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter no demand shall be made for seats in the Second Presbyterian Church, corner of Prytania and Calliope streets, except through the voluntary contributions from Sabbath to Sabbath, of those who may attend. The seats are free to all, whether strangers or residents in the city, whether contributing or not. Families who are regular attendants and have become attached by long occupancy to particular pews, may retain them on the conditions above, by affixing their names.

The health of the city is good. The business tide is flowing in. Strangers fill the streets and hotels.

PERSONAL.—We had the pleasure, last Sabbath, of hearing Bros. Crosby and Strickland preach. The latter at St. Paul's, (African,) gave us his Diotrephes sermon—with what effect may be better imagined than described.

CONNECTION WITH TEXAS.—New Orleans will be fortunate in hitching on Vanderbilt to her interests. A paragraph in a New York paper, of the 12th inst., gives a list of vessels building in and about the ship-yards of that city, and denotes that something is astir with regard to steam communication from Berwick's Bay to Galveston:

Mr. J. Simonson has just commenced the construction of two steamboats for Commodore Vanderbilt, for the New Orleans trade, to be launched in seven weeks. They will be 230 feet long, 33 feet beam, 12 feet deep, and about 600 tons measurement.

According to this, the steamers may be here in March. From the dimensions of the boats, it is evident they are not intended for shoal water. They are rather too large for the Lake and Mobile trade, so it is presumed they are intended for the Texas trade.

It has been suggested, or rather surmised, that the Jefferson and Pontchartrain Railroad Co. would place one or two low-pressure boats on the Lake, in the Mobile and Coast trade. It must be a bold association comprising enterprise and capital, that would enter the trade of the Lakes with the present Mobile mail line. However, competition is the very essence, the life, soul and body of commerce.

NEW ORLEANS SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.—Dr. Fenner, the Dean, delivered an elegant opening lecture on Monday. Drs. Picton, Crawcour and Choppin, followed on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Medical School has opened well. The product of individual enterprize, it is an honor to our citizens. The Old School is also doing well.

The N. O. School of Medicine matriculated over thirty students the first week—twice as many as its most sanguine friends anticipated. The medical department of the University never before opened with more than forty matriculants; now it has over a hundred.—This competition has had a healthy influence on medical science. The old school have rubbed up considerably.—Our community, to their credit, are much interested in the course; and the opening lectures of the season are said never to have been so able.

But competition alone will not account for this improvement of our medical schools. There is a deeper and stronger principle at work. People are learning that the facilities for making a thorough Southern practitioner are greater in New Orleans than anywhere else. And they are feeling that other things being equal, to patronize Southern institutions is better than going farther and faring worse.

JUDGE J. C. LARUE died suddenly on Sunday morning. A post-mortem examination disclosed internal disease. Several years ago he came to New Orleans a practical printer.

ACQUITTED.—The jury in the case of Government vs. W. G. Kendall, accused of robbing the Post Office, returned a verdict of not guilty on Tuesday.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

A Visit to the President Elect.

A correspondent of the New York Times has been on a visit to Mr. Buchanan at his home in Wheatland, and thus describes him:

The first remark of a stranger concerning Mr. Buchanan, would naturally be, "What a fine old English gentleman!" I had been introduced to him many years ago at Gadsby's Hotel in Washington; but the interview then was of short duration. This time I had possession of him for several hours.—One of the first remarks he made, elicitated by the presentation of a New York caricature, was, that the portraits which were made of him during the canvass were mostly all caricatures; that "those who had not seen him must imagine him, from his effigies, to be as grim as an ogre, whereas he had scarcely ever known an uncheerful moment of his life." In fact, in spite of the weight of responsibility he evidently feels, his countenance is the mirror of happy thoughts, and a benignant disposition. He looks a hale, temperate man of sixty, of massive intellect, hard, undaunted energy; but with caution as the predominant trait of his moral and intellectual character. I judged him to be one of those naturally impetuous, daring characters who, by practical experience of the folly of yielding to impulse, had gradually acquired the habit of waiting for "sober second thoughts" to check and govern his every action. His countenance shows this. Occasionally his face will lighten up, both of his large blue eyes will distend, and listeners are compelled to sink their gaze before his profound, scrutinizing look. Suddenly, however, one of his eyes half closes, his head slightly inclines towards one side, and every word appears to be weighed in the balance before it is uttered. You always find that you are conversing with an emphatically great man, and his unpretending, unostentatious simplicity adds rather than detracts from this impression, while his unaffected amiability and hospitality win your heart, even where the judgement has resolved to make resistance. I am a Republican and he is a Democrat; but I pay him this willing tribute, that he approaches as nearly to my ideal of a gentleman of the old school as any one it has ever been my good fortune to meet.

Mr. Buchanan was kind enough to make me acquainted with his niece, the presiding grace of his fair domains; and, but that the sincerest homage to beauty, innocence, and every virtue and charm which can adorn a high-minded and intelligent young lady, is respectful silence, I would endeavor to show how grossly they have erred who have ridiculed, as a bachelor establishment, the future domestic arrangement of the White House.

Dr. Rae, the Aretic Traveler.

At the Lochaber Agricultural Society's dinner (says the Edinburg Courant) an incident occurred which formed a very interesting finale to the day's proceedings. A gentleman, apparently a tourist, arrived at the hotel just as the party were to sit down to dinner; he asked, and was immediately granted permission to join; throughout the evening he made himself particularly agreeable, and his health was proposed as "The Stranger," and very cordially drunk. On rising to return thanks he said, "In the course of my life I have seen some rough days and many pleasant ones. I have lived ten months in a snow house without once warming myself at a fire; I have had my moccassins cut off my legs with a hatchet; I have had to kill my own food with my own gun, and I have been reduced to the necessity of living on bones; but all these things are easily forgotten when I meet such a pleasant party as is now around me. As I am an entire stranger to you all, and as I have received so much kindness from you, it is but fair that you should know who I am; my name is Rae, and you may have heard it associated with the Franklin Expedition. At this announcement the astonished party started to their feet and gave Dr. Rae, almost enthusiastic reception. The cheering lasted several minutes, after which Dr. Rae showed some of the articles which had indicated the probable fate of Sir John Franklin and his party. These consisted of a piece of gold and two silver watches, a small anchor, several coins, a spoon, with a crest engraved on it, etc. Dr. Rae had been on a visit to Edward Ellice, Esq., M. P., at Glenquoich, and was on his way to Castle Menzies.

Sugar Making.

The sugar making season will be of short duration in this parish the present year. A friend who has taken some little trouble to inquire into the state of the sugar crop in a district embraced within four miles above Plaquemine and eight miles below it (including the bayous Plaquemine and Jacob) says, that in this portion of the parish there are eight plantations that will make no sugar at all, three that will make "a little," seven that will make forty or fifty hhds., two that will make about one hundred, and two about one hundred and fifty. These are mainly large plantations; our friend, however, does not enumerate all the planters in this section. We feel assured, nevertheless, that the statement will give a pretty correct idea of sugar making of the crop in Iberville for the year 1856.—Plaquemine (Ib. Parish) Sentinel, 15th.

INSURRECTIONARY RUMORS.—The papers in the northern part of the State have had frequent statements of late, in regard to insurrectionary rumors, and insurrectionary plots, both in that part of the State, and over the line in Arkansas. A few weeks ago a man named Hancock was arrested in Union county, Arkansas, on suspicion of being engaged in trying to incite the slaves to insurrection.

A President without a Grave-Stone.

PRESIDENT MONROE HAS NO MONUMENT.

There is a quiet, beautiful cemetery in the north side of Second street, in this city (New York) between First and Second avenues separated from the side walk by a tall iron fence, placed upon a granite foundation. The shrubbery is always clean and vigorous; the grass is always the greenest, and the walks are always scrupulously neat. There are many tasteful and appropriate monuments to the dead that sleep within this beautiful enclosure; but to the memory of the most famous of its dumb inhabitants there is no marble shaft, no obelisk, not even a headstone erected. But upon a simple slab of marble that lies flat some two feet square upon the earth, and is almost covered by grass, is the following inscription:

JAMES MONROE.

ROBERT TILLOTSON.

Vault No. 147.

There is nothing to indicate that the James Monroe, mentioned, is the Monroe who was in the battle of White Plains, and received a ball in the shoulder at the attack on Trenton, who fought by the side of Lafayette at Brandywine, who was Minister to France in 1794, and afterwards to England; who was Secretary of State in 1811, and for two full terms President of the United States. Yet such is the fact, and that weather-stained slab of marble, two feet square, is all the monument that Ex-President Monroe has.

It is a curious neglect that leaves the precious dust of one of the purest patriots that our country has been blessed with, to rest in such obscurity. Thousands pass every day by the spot, admiring the well kept grounds, pausing for the fragrance of the flowering shrubs, listening to the song of the birds that find this oasis in the city's desert, but never dreaming that the author of the Monroe Doctrine, the fourth President of the United States, lies within a few feet of them. Monuments to men of half his intellectual stature, and a tithe of his industry and goodness of heart, are going up all over the land. Shall he who was re-elected to the Presidency by a vote unanimous with a single exception, and who never disgraced his position, have no more than this?

As Mr. Monroe was a Virginian, it is the supposition of most people that he died and was buried within the Old Dominion, but this is an error.

Mr. Monroe, in his last days resided with Samuel Gouverneur, late postmaster of this city (New York,) who married his daughter; their residence was on the corner of Prince and Elm streets.

The venerable Dr. Francis tells us that he often met Mr. Monroe, walking out when the weather was fine, and that on these occasions he was the object of the most affectionate attentions. He has often met him making purchases for the family at Centre Market where all the stallmen knew and honored him. He was tall and spare, very modest in his bearing, dignified and gentlemanly. In his address he was hesitating and diffident, as polite to the poorest and humblest as to any. He was one of the most industrious of men, a hard student, and his cares left their marks on his face. The wound that he received at Trenton was felt for many years afterwards—indeed, throughout all his life he suffered from it.

His last illness was a long and tedious one. His attendant was his son-in-law's family physician, Dr. Berger. He expired at half-past-ten o'clock on the morning of the 4th of July, 1831.

Mr. Monroe shares even his grave with another man. He had no wealth when he died, and in his death go tomb of his own.

We owe it to his memory that we provide for his ashes a resting place that should be his own, or at least that a creditable monument be raised over them where they lie. Shall the dust be transferred to Greenwood, or, leaving it where it has rested for twenty-five years, shall a noble column of pure marble be erected in token of appreciation of the worth, excellence and services of one who had no enemies, or, if there were those who envied him, of whom the envious could say no harm? Who is ready to move in this matter?—N. Y. Times.

The New Process for Detecting Murderers.

We published lately an account of an experiment made by Dr. Sandford, of Auburn, New York, on the eye of a man who had been murdered near that place. It was stated that the experiment had been successful, but no particulars were given. We find, however in an exchange the following paragraph:

"Mrs. Bellamy and Sanford made this experiment in the case of Beadle, the printer, who was so foully murdered in Auburn a few days since, with the following astonishing result. They distinctly saw impressed upon the eye the rude figure of a man dressed in a light coat, holding a stone suspended in the air. The examination of Beadle's body after death, showed that he had been murdered by a blow from a stone."

The alledged discovery asserts the last scene recorded by a man will remain impressed upon the retinue as upon a daguerreotyped plate. The figure of the murderer is on the dead man's eye-balls.

How, if a person was assassinated from behind by a third person, while looking in the face of his friend? Might not an innocent man be liable to be hung upon such evidence?

JUDGE MCWHORTER.—Hon. George C. McWhorter, died at Natchez, 17th inst. at 12 o'clock. He had been ill for six or eight weeks, but up to the very last his friends did not dispair of his recovery. Was a South Carolina by Birth.—At an early age he emigrated to Mississippi, and was for several years a resident of Wilkinson county. Then he removed to Concordia parish, Louisiana. There, for some time he practiced law with much success. He was then elevated to the judicial bench of that section.

TELEGRAPHIC.

ILLINOIS ELECTION.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—Our State Legislature stands as follows: Senate—15 Democrats and 12 Republicans, besides the Lieut. Gov. Woody who is a Republican. House—37 Democrats and 38 opposition. The opposition consists of 33 Republicans and 5 Americans.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18. The steamer City of Washington from Liverpool, on the morning of the 5th of November, arrived at this port this morning.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Richardson, Spence & Co., quote cotton as very dull, with little inquiry and weak prices. Holders are willing sellers, but do not press sales. Prices declined 1-16d. under the Niagara's advices.

The sales of three days amounted to 13,000 bales, of which speculators took 1000, and exporters 1000 bales.

GENERAL NEWS.

The political news by the City of Washington is not of much importance.

The Neapolitan question is unchanged. The Neapolitan Minister still remains at Paris.

FOREIGN.

MISUNDERSTANDING BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

The mails by the Baltic are to hand, with foreign intelligence to Wednesday, the 29th of October.

Serious Misunderstanding between England and France.—The attack of the Paris Moniteur has created much excitement in England and France. In Paris, the effect is visible on the Bourse, and at home the public journals have taken up the subject with a seriousness unusual for by the general and indefinite nature of the accusations. The Times, in a long leader, says that, without pretending any sympathy for the manner in which the present Government of France was established, or with the principles on which it is based, it recognizes in his Majesty, the Emperor of the French, a faithful and honorable ally, whose good faith and effective co-operation with this country are embalmed in the glorious memories of a successful war.

ITALY.

There is nothing new to relate with reference to the Neapolitan question.—The dispatch that was expected to announce the departure of Baron Breider from Naples had not been received, and it is therefore a matter of doubt whether he has left, or whether he is still at his post waiting for some favorable change in King Ferdinand's intentions. A private dispatch states that he left the city of Naples on the 28th. According to the Journal de Frankfort the combined fleets will appear in the Bay of Naples if, within three weeks from the departure of the Embassadors, the King of Naples do not return a satisfactory answer to the Anglo-Gallic demands.

Accounts continue to come to hand respecting the recent earthquake. At Brindisi the people were so alarmed that numbers put to sea in boats, and others remained for days in the open fields.

Owing to the bad grape crop, the export of grapes, wines, vinegar, tartaric acid and potash is prohibited from the Roman States till the 7th of September, 1857.

Edict of the Holy Office, Rome.—Re-establishment of the Inquisition.—The following edict has been issued by the Holy Office at Rome. We give it in full, as published by the Correspondence Italienne of the 19th October:

"We, F. R. Thomas Vincent Airaldi, of the Order of Preachers, Master in Sacred Theology, and in the towns and dioceses of Ancona, Osimo-Cingoli, Jesi, Senigallia-Loreto and Recanati, Macereta and Talentino, and other lands and localities annexed, Inquisitor General of the Holy Apostolic See, especially appointed against heretical depravity:

"Being desirous, as imposed by our holy office, that the Catholic faith (without which, as the Apostle Paul writes to the Jews, it is impossible to please God) should be in our jurisdiction maintained pure and immaculate from all heretic contagion; and experience having proven unto us that many persons from malice, others from disobedience, and finally others from ignorance, do not fulfil the strict obligation they are under, of denouncing to the holy office the misdeeds which come under its attributions, and that serious inconveniencies and errors result therefrom, not only against good morals, but especially against the Catholic faith; nevertheless we, who have especially at heart the glory of God, the full conservation and increase of the holy faith, and the salvation of souls, to obviate all disorder, with the apostolic authority intrusted to us, command, in virtue of holy obedience, and under pain of excommunication, without prejudice to other penalties prescribed by the sacred canons, decrees, constitutions and bulls of the sovereign pontiffs, by this present edict, all and every person, whatever his station, rank or employment, whether lay or clerical, and within the delay of one month, ten days of which are assigned for the first, ten for the second, and ten for the third peremptory term, to inform against and notify to us judicially, or to our vicars or resident curates, all and each of such persons as may come under his or their acquaintance:

"Who are heretical, or suspected of being so; or harborers or supporters of heretics, or who may have adhered to or do adhere to Jewish, Mohammedan, or Pagan rites, or who may have become apostates from the true Catholic faith;

"Who may have committed acts from which sufficient proof might be deducted that they are in open or secret league with the devil, performing arts of sorcery, of magic, or necromancy, offering to the nyevo named (sic) perfumes, incense, or prayers for the discovery of treasurers or other unholy purposes; by invocations or promises of obedience, or by other practices in which name or others are invoked;

"Who are familiar with or who practice necromancy, or no matter what sort of magic, with the abuse of the sacraments, sacred or kallowed things;

"Who, not being ordained, should have usurped with sacrilegious temerity the right of performing mass, or who are suspected of administering the sacrament of penitence to the faithful of Jesus Christ;

"Who may have abused or do abuse the sacrament of penitence, or the beatity (huogo) of the same against the Apostolic decree;

"Who may have held or who hold secret meetings in contempt and to the prejudice of or against the Catholic religion;

"Who may have uttered or utter heretical blasphemies against God Almighty, the Most Holy Virgin Mary and the Saints, or who may have or do express contempt for sacred images;

"Who, despite a solemn oath in the profession of no matter what religion approved by the Church, or after having taken holy orders, may have, or do contract, or try to contract a marriage;

"Who, during the lifetime of a first wife, take a second, or who, during the life of a first husband, take or try to take a second;

"Who may have, or have endeavored to impede, no matter how, the functions of the Holy Inquisition; or who, no matter how, may have acted contrary to the bull of his Holiness, Pius V. of blessed memory, which commences us follows: 'Si de protegendis'

"Who may have published satires against the Sovereign Pontiff, the Sacred College, high church functionaries of established religious orders, or who may have published writings, no matter how, containing abuse or profanation of Holy Writ;

"Who, without the regular permission, should have in their possession writings or prints containing heresy or heretical works of an irreligious nature; or who read such, print such, or allow such to be printed; or who introduce them or circulate them, no matter what pretext or motive;

"Who may have, without reason or permission, eaten or given to eat to others meat, eggs or milk on prohibited days, in contempt of the precedents of the Holy Church;

"Who may have induced a Christian to embrace Judaism, or any other sect contrary to the Holy Catholic, religion, and who may have prevented, no matter how, Jews or Turks from being baptized;

"It is declared by this statement of cases specified by us as of a nature to be denounced to the holy office, other cases are not excluded which come under the sacred canons, decrees, constitutions and bulls of the Sovereign Pontiffs;

The present edict does not abrogate the apostolic canonical regulations and other edicts of the ordained clergy and inquisitors. It is, moreover, declared that those who do not inform as ordered by the present edict cannot be absolved from the excommunication incurred without having first informed judicially against the delinquents; and, although the month allowed may have passed, the obligation of informing remain the same under the same penalty until the person who has information has made a clean confession of it. That this edict may be brought to the knowledge of all persons, we ordain and command it to be placarded in all vestries and churches, and that no one may remain ignorant of these orders and endeavor to avoid obedience, we order all publishers, libraries, customs, hotel-keepers, shopkeepers, etc., to have a copy posted up in their respective establishments, in a prominent place, that it may be read by all comers, and we order all curates to read the same to their congregations at specified periods.

"EXHORTATION."

"As the principal or rather the sole object of the tribunal of the holy office is, as already stated, the glory of God, the exaltation of the holy faith, and the salvation of souls, we therefore, after having commanded and ordained as above, now exhort, paternally, all those who may be guilty of some offence against the sacred office to appear before us, or our vicars, voluntarily, before they are informed against by other persons, to make a full confession of their faults and errors. We assure them that should they not be under accusation already before some other ecclesiastical tribunal we will receive them with the bowels of compassion, and they shall be treated with that mercy which belongs to the sacred tribunal, and of will be allowed to depart in peace, without expense and penitence.

"SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS."

"In obedience to the orders we have received relative to the press, the introduction or circulation of perverse and forbidden books, and having much at heart that in the towns and localities under our jurisdiction the pure faith may be preserved which, by the grace of the Almighty, actually exists there, we expressly ordain and command that men shall beware of publishing, introducing, selling or circulating in the towns, or beyond the walls, or anywhere within our jurisdiction, any books that have not first been submitted to the examination of the sacred office under the penalties established by apostolic decrees, especially those of Clement VIII and George XV.

"Finally, we order and command that no one shall infringe the apostolic orders, decrees, constitutions and bulls, which prohibit Jews and Christians from entertaining certain private relations with each other, such as sleeping, eating, playing, disguising; and moreover, that all familiarity with them be avoided under the penalties, for Jews, as well as for Christians, expressed in the bull of Pope Clement VIII, of blessed memory.

"Given at the Sacred Office at Ancona, this 8th day of August, 1856.

F. R. THOMAS VINCENT AIRALDI,
Inquisitor General.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

I'M GROWING OLD.

The following beautiful stanzas first appeared in the Andover Advertiser, and were written, as we happen to know, by a lady of New York city. However it may be with the frail physical frame, the heart, we are sure, that gushes out in these lines, can never "grow old."—Ed.

I'm growing old—'tis surely so;
And yet how short it seems,
Since I was but a sporting child,
Enjoying childish dreams.

I cannot see the change that comes
With such an even pace;
I mark not when the wrinkles fall
Upon my fading face.

I know I'm old; and yet my heart
Is just as young and gay
As e'er it was before my locks
Of bright brown turned to gray.

I know these eyes, to other eyes,
Look not so bright and glad
As once they looked and yet 'tis not Because my heart's more sad.

I never watched with purer joy
The floating clouds and glowing skies,
While glistening tears of rapture fill
These old and fading eyes.

And when I mark the cheek, where once
The bright rose used to glow,
It grieves me not to see instead
The almond crown my brow.

I've seen the flower grow old and pale,
And withered more than I;
I've seen it lose its every charm,
Then droop away and die.

And then I've seen it rise again,
Bright as the beaming sky,
And young, and pure and beautiful—
And felt that so shall I.

Then what if I am growing old—
My heart is changeless still,
And God has given me enough
This loving heart to fill.

I love to see the sun go down,
And lengthening shadows throw
Along the ground while o'er my head
The clouds of crimson glow.

I see, beyond those gorgeous clouds,
A country bright and fair,
Which needs no sun: God and the Lamb
Its light and beauty are.

I seem to hear the wondrous song
Redeemed sinners sing,
And my heart leaps to join the throng
To praise the Heavenly King.

I seem to see three cherub boys,
As hand in hand they go,
With golden curls and snowy wings,
Whose eyes with rapture glow.

When I was young I called them mine—
Now Heaven's sweet ones are they;
But I shall claim my own again,
When I am called away.

Perhaps, when heaven's bright gate I've passed,
They'll know from every other,
The one who gave them back to God,
And haste to call me mother.

Oh! I am glad I'm growing old!
For every day I spend,
Shall bring me one day nearer that
Bright day that has no end.

OBITUARY.

Dunlap, in Choctaw County, Ala., Mrs. Elizabeth M. Dunlap, wife of Dr. D. M. Dunlap, aged 36 years.

In early life she professed religion and joined the M. E. Church; and from that period until her death she was recognized in the native circle of her acquaintance as a uniform and most devoted Christian. The world, with all its attractions, was not sufficient to draw her from the cross of Christ. Never did she degrade her holy calling, or compromise with worldly influences the principles of her religion. She felt a deep interest in the church; labored for and rejoiced in its prosperity. There was an ingenuousness of character, mixed with meekness and affability, which won the esteem of all who knew her. In the vicissitudes of life she acted well her part, and was remarkable for the ardor and tenderness of her affection. The disease of which she died was typhoid Enteritis. Her attack was unexpected and violent; progressed rapidly in opposition to medical skill, until she was pronounced beyond the hope of recovery. During the first part of her illness she did not so fully realize her acceptance with God as she desired. In answer to fervent effectual prayer, the cloud which overhung her spiritual sky, was rolled back, and God shined forth in His brightness. The soul was fully illuminated—the heart swelled with unutterable emotions of love—the tongue was employed in praise and thanksgiving. She remarked, "I have looked forward with some degree of dread to this hour; but I am happy; not a pain—not one pain; it is pleasant to die." As she stood upon the shore of life, about to embark for a better seaport, even the heavenly, the parting hymn was sung by weeping friends, in which she joined with composure and earnestness. Retaining her reason to the last, she continued to give increasing evidence of her willingness and preparation to depart. "Happy—happy,—glory—glory," lingered upon her lips as the spirit fled to its home. These were her last words on earth, and, doubtless, her first in heaven.

The above is written not so much to announce the fact of her death as the manner in which she died; and thereby prove through another witness the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

SOMETHING FOR BOYS.

Boys, listen to Uncle Toby, while he talks to you of the evils resulting from the use of tobacco, and resolve that you will never touch this poisonous weed.—

A Kind Word to Lads on Tobacco.—A boy named West, living in Swansey, picked up a bit of cigar, and, putting it into a pipe, smoked it. As a consequence, he was taken suddenly ill, and died in a few hours.

Tobacco has spoiled thousands of fine boys, (including a dangerous precocity, developing the passions, softening the bones, and injuring the spinal marrow and the whole nervous fluid.) A boy who early and freely uses tobacco, never is known to make a man, in the true sense; he generally lacks energy of body and mind. Boys, if you wish to be anybody, despise tobacco, name and thing.

Smoked to Death.—Three young men formed a smoking club, and they all died within two years after forming it. The doctor was asked what they died of. He said,

"They were smoked to death."

Who can see a group of boys, six or eight years old, in our streets, smoking, without anticipating such a depreciation in our posterity, in health and character, as can scarcely be contemplated without pain and horror?

LITTLE ROBERT REED.

I'll never use tobacco; no
It is a filthy weed;
I'll never put it in my mouth,
Said little Robert Reed.

Why, there was idle Jesse Jones,
As dirty as a pig—
He smoked when only ten years old,
And thought it made him big.

He spent his time and money, too,
And made his mother sad;
She feared a worthless man would come
Of such a worthless lad.

O, no! I'll never smoke or chew,
'Tis very wrong indeed;
It hurts the health, it makes bad breath,
Said little Robert Reed.

THE MOTHER'S PARTING KISS.

"I was but five years old when my mother died; but her immage is as distinct to my recollection, now that twelve years have elapsed, as it was at the time of her death. I remember her as a pale, beautiful, gentle being, with a sweet smile, and a voice that was soft, and cheerful when she praised me; and when I erred, for I was a wild, thoughtless child, there was a trembling mildness about it, that always went to my little heart. And then she was so kind, so patient: mothinks I can now see her large blue eyes moist with sorrow, because of my childish waywardness, and hear her repeat, 'My child, how can you grieve me so?'"

"I recollect she had for a long time been palo and feeble, and that sometimes there would come a bright spot on her cheek, which made her look so lovely, that I thought she must be well. But then she sometimes spoke of dying, and pressed me to her bosom, and told me 'to be good when she was gone, and to love my father a great deal, and be kind to him, for he would have no one else to love.' I recollect she was very sick all day and my little hobby-horse and whip were laid aside, and I tried to be very quiet. I did not see her for the whole day, and it seemed very long.—At night they told me mother was too sick to kiss me, as she always used to do before I went to bed, and I must go without it. But I could not. I stole into the room, and laying my lips close to hers, whispered, 'Mother, mother, won't you kiss me?' Her lips were very cold, and when she put her arm around me, laid my head upon her bosom, and one hand upon my cheek, I felt a cold shuddering creep all over me. My father carried me from the room, but he could not speak."

After they put me in bed, I lay a long while thinking. I feared my mother would indeed die; for her cheek felt as cold as my little sister's did, when she died, and they layed her in the ground. But the impressions of mortality are always indistinct in childhood, and I soon fell asleep. In the morning I hastened to my mother's room. A white napkin covered her face. I removed it; it was just as I feared. Her eyes were closed, her cheek was cold and hard, and only the lovely expression that always rested upon her lips remained. In an instant all the little faults for which she had so often reproved me, rushed upon my mind. I longed to tell her how good I would always be, if she would remain with me. She was buried; but my remembrance of the funeral is indistinct. I only retain the impressions which her precepts and example left upon my mind.

"I was a passionate, headstrong boy; but I never yielded to this turn of my disposition, without fancying I saw her mild, tearful eye fixed upon me, just as she used to do in life. And then, when I succeeded in overcoming it, her sweet smile of approbation beamed upon me, and I was happy. My whole character underwent a change, even from the moment of her death. Her spirit was forever with me, strengthening my good resolutions, and weakening my propensity to evil. I felt that it would grieve her gentle sprit to see me err; and I could not, would not do it. I was the child of her affection. I knew she had prayed and wept over me, and that, even on the threshold of eternity, her affection for me had caused her gentle spirit to linger, that she might pray for me once more. I resolved to become all that she could desire. This resolution I have never forgotten. It helped me to subdue the waywardness of childhood, protected me through the temptations of youth, and will comfort and support me through the busier scenes of manhood. Whatever there is that is estimable in my character, I owe to the impressions of goodness made upon my infant mind by the exemplary conduct and faithful instructions of my excellent mother."—Cottage's Friend.

What Did the Clock Say?

The clock upon the tower of a neighbouring church tolled forth, slowly and solemnly, the knell of the departed hour.

As the last sound died away, Willie, who was sitting on the carpet at his mother's feet, lifted his head, and looking earnestly in her face, asked,

"Mother! what did the clock say?"

"To me," said his mother sadly, "it seemed to say, gone—gone—gone!"

"What, mother! what has gone?"

"Another hour, my son."

"What is an hour, mother?"

"A white-winged messenger from our Father in heaven, sent by him to inquire of you—of me, what we are doing? what we are saying? what we are thinking and feeling?"

"Where has it gone, mother?"

"Back to Him who sent it, bearing on its wings, that were so pure and white when it came, a record of all our thoughts, words, and deeds, while it was with us."

"Were they all such as our Father could receive with a smile of approbation?"

Reader! what record are the hours, as they come and go, bearing up on high for you?

CENTRAL AFRICA.

A missionary of the Southern Baptist Convention presents a thrilling account of the openings for the diffusion of the gospel in Central Africa. His language is: "If extensive openings, populous cities and towns, ready and willing to receive the missionary, security of life and prospect of universal peace are signs of hope for Africa's redemption, then we have them. By some mysterious work of Providence this country does not seem to be what it once was.—There is a wonderful disposition of circumstances to favor the gospel. From Lagos, for hundreds of miles into the interior, I have scarce a doubt but the missionary of the cross would be received with acclamations of joy. The north, east, and west, stretching out through a country needing only the hand of the enlightened cultivator to become a second Palestine, invite us thither. The last tours to the interior, whatever Africa may once have been, exhibit it now in the most interesting aspect. Ishakki, Ogbomishaw, and Ilorin, together with other cities, have their gates standing open. The last mentioned city, whose population is perhaps half a million, two-thirds of whom are Mohammedans, and of whose opposition we had great fears, on a recent visit made by Mr. Bowen, invited him thither, and promised to appropriate lands for building purposes.—Who is it that is thus disposing the minds of men, and effecting a work of which the world is not even dreaming? As to security of life and property, I have no reason to desire a change for any country. A more harmless, inoffensive, kind, and hospitable people are scarcely to be found on the globe. I have travelled near two hundred miles to the interior from Lagos; sometimes through dense forest, at times alone, without ever seeing the sighs of danger from the beast of the forest, or receiving a harsh word from my travelling companions. I have declared openly and plainly the gospel of Christ, and denounced Orisha and other idols before hundreds and thousands who had never before seen the face of a white man, and that with such impunity as scarce ever to have met opposition. Are not these signs too plain to be overlooked?—Besides all this, universal peace seems now to prevail.—Southern Bap.

A Beautiful Signification.—"Alabama" signifies in the Indian language "Here we rest." A story is told of a tribe of Indians who fled from a relentless foe in the trackless forest in the south-west. Weary and travel worn they reached a noble river which flowed through a beautiful country. The chief of the band stuck his tent-pole in the ground and exclaimed: "Alabama! Alabama!" ("Here we shall rest! Here we shall rest!")

Our life is a passage to eternity: it ought to be a meditation of eternity.

SAW AND CORN MILLS.

PORTABLE CIRCULAR SAW MILLS,

WITH

Norcross' "Improved Rocker Boxes,"

AND LEE & LEAVITT'S

"IMPROVED HEAD BLOCKS."

The subscriber is now prepared to offer to the public, Circular Saw Mills, (usually called Dogs,) with all the recent improvements since their first appearance. The Mill now offered are made about one third stronger than those heretofore in use, and those made by them at present, considering as they do, all the improvements and the additional strength both in the iron and solid work—are undoubtedly the best Mill ever offered. Engines and Horse Powers suitable for these mills are furnished when required.

Norcross' Patent consists in suspending the saw so that it can have a lateral vibration, and, when thrown out of line, will recover itself by the action of the driving belt, and the arrangement of the parts by which it is sustained; while, at the same time, the arbor has no lateral play in the boxes, and is made to fit close with the shoulders, to prevent the oil from getting out, while in operation; a matter of great importance when the motion is rapid as in circular saws.

Lee & Leavitt's patent consists in guarding one side to move the log on the ways with the saw and with the greatest accuracy, thereby saving one man's wages, and making better work than mills with the usual Screw Head Blocks.

J. H. BURROWS'

Patent Plantation Corn and Flouring Mills.

THE BEST NOW IN USE.

This Mill differs from all others in the construction of the Upper or Runner Stone, which is composed of French Burr Blocks, enclosed in a Cast Iron Case, and forms the back and hoop of the Stone, with a Cast Iron Eye or Hub, that is of greater external diameter at the bottom than at the top, is secured to the back by four bolts, so that every block is in the form of a dovetail, which gives greater strength to a Stone than any other method that is required in small Mills where the stone is run with great speed and becomes dangerous if not strongly made; it also gives any weight to a Stone of small diameter that is required, without making it thick or high.

They can be run by either Gin Horse, Water or Steam Power, and require no Millwright to set them up.

ADVANTAGES.

1st. Sufficient weight in the Runner Stone to crush the Grist, without having to supply pressure to the Runner Stone from the Driving Power, as most Undulatory Mills have to do; this is of great importance when Horse Power is used.

2nd. When the Stone is running, its own momentum acts like the Fly Wheel of an Engine, affording regularity and speed to its motion. If a Mill does not run true and regular you cannot make good meal or flower.

3rd. The Stone is composed of four or five French Burr Blocks, because single blocks of sufficient size cannot be had without having cost or imperfect places in them.

4th. The Stone having this great weight is enabled to grind near the centre a larger quantity with less power than any other mill now in use.

5th. This Mill is a square frame, made of wood, in the form of a husk; the 24 inch occupying a space of only 4 ft. 5 feet square.

6th. This Mill is simply and strongly constructed, and less liable to get out of order than any other Mill, and does not require a Millwright to set them up.

7th. The Gearing and Pulleys of these Mills are all of Iron, and are preferable because there never is a necessity of cracking the band, or of extra pullies to keep it in place; the band does not get cut and worn as in the case of Single Geared Mills; nor is their danger in putting the band on or off the pulley as in Single Geared Mills.

By the steady application of Steam Power, the 24 inch Mill will grind 7 to 10 bushels per hour, of good meal, and will grind wheat as well as corn. The 30 inch Mill will grind 12 to 15 bushels per hour; the 36 inch 20 or more bushels per hour, with proper speed.

More than 2500 of these Mills have been used, principally in the South and West, and never have any been returned from failing in please. The above Mill is warranted to give entire satisfaction, or may be returned at our expense.

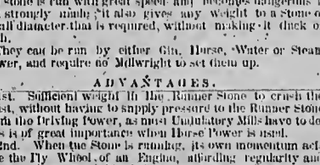
COLEMAN'S



PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING MILLS.

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block, seven different kinds of these Mills are manufactured, adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The Burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity to any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices of from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of the Burr, power applied, and velocity given.

The Mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (fourteen inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal, in four and a half minutes.

Those desiring such Mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor, WILLIS P. COLEMAN,

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

THE lands are situated in Morehouse Parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—navigable streams—and likewise in close contiguity to the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction, and in a fair way to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess great advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. [jan12-1y] JAMES H. BRIGHAM.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and by the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution is a religious point of view, will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July, at which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, etc., to be made to the President of the College.

BY IGNATIUS, JUN.

No. III.

One day I was troubled with the conviction that Christianity was regarded too much as a thing of history, handed down from heaven in a package eighteen hundred years ago, and left to get old;—not a life flowing out of God into every age, into every individual. I was displeased with the fashion of the churches, in referring every question of polity and morals back to the apostolic age for decision. I thought the traditionalism of the other churches, in cutting everything by old patterns, only a gilt edition of English high-churchism. I had been reading a book in Shakerism, and began to fear that Shakers were the only untraditional church. I knew they had a present and unhistorical christianity, such a one as it was. I thought I would go to see Aunt Polly, to see if she had not a better present christianity.

Ignatius, jun.—When I read the Bible, Aunt Polly, I feel as if I were reading a book of curious things that occurred long ages ago; so curious as to make it impossible they should ever again occur—how God talked with prophets, manifested Himself in cloven tongues of fire; and seemed to be very near men in their everyday life, for these old writers speak of "being led by the Spirit of God," "filled with the Spirit," partaking of the Divine nature," &c. I do wish I had lived in that day, for I so pine to know God as a present Being, alive with human sympathy.

Aunt Polly—After my conversion I was very unhappy, because of remaining sin. I wanted to do right in all things; but never having read the Bible much, did not really know in every instance what was right. Imprudences became sins; every little levity in talking made me miserable. I set to work to learn what God required of me as a school-girl learns her lesson, by conning the precepts of the Bible. But memory was treacherous, and the word was not present to determine every point in life. I was so unhappy! and began to learn why so many honest people gave their consciences to the priest. The question occurred to me, "How the old saints knew what was right?" They had no infallible priests; they had not the time and talent to learn as I had tried, by conning the precepts of the Bible. "If," thought I, "I can sustain a like relation with them to God, then will I, too, be delivered from this dubious life." But in what relation did they stand to God?—I could only think of this—"They made sure of utterly renouncing themselves, and having no will of their own; and thus did right spontaneously, God being their infallible priest." Then I thought how much the Bible talks of the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free; how we must become as little children and render our Father a service of wayward impulsive love, if we would enter Heaven; how keeping the commandments is invariably coupled with love; how, if we would know the doctrines, we must do the will of God; and how, if doing precede knowing, it must be because it is simpler than knowing; and how, finally, consecration to God is the only sort of doing that is simpler than knowing, and is the only prerequisite of knowing.

Ignatius, jun.—Is it indeed true that God will guide me into the way of all truth, as He did the saints of old, if I will stand in the same angle of vision and sympathy? Yes, I see it. God is pledged by the duties of His own nature to give man a sufficient and ever-present revelation of His will. The Bible is not merely a book of Religious Precepts, but of Spiritual Attitudes.

Aunt Polly.—It teaches us how we must stand—what attitude assume toward God, if we would be blessed. I see the depths of the prayer of Jesus—"That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." Scriptures come fast upon me, with a sudden light: "He that abideth in me and I in Him bringeth forth much fruit." "But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."

Ignatius, jun.—Instead of being a record of old past curiosities, the Bible becomes a chronicle of ever-recurring and present wonders. It is not merely a history of how God did manifest Himself to men ages ago, but of the conditions under which He manifests himself in every age. Then have I found the sympathizing God for whom I have so deeply sighed. Believe as Paul, love as John, be valiant as Peter.

Aunt Polly.—Let that mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. Then everything you do will be done as Jesus would have done it under the same circumstances, for his acts proceed from his mind.

Ignatius, jun.—Lo! Jesus is with us in every true Christian. To imitate Him it is not necessary that we ape his outward conduct, but that we drink in the principle whence issued His beautiful life. His childhood's only utterance tells what that was: "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" Consecration!—a word that embraces the incarnate life of the Infinite!

Aunt Polly.—

"Then the world shall always see Christ the holy child in me."

The truth that flashed on me from the experimental utterances of Aunt Polly, settled into three forms of expression, each of which amounts to the same thing:—The Bible is not merely a specific but a generic account of God's dealings with man;—Every record of promise fulfilled, of virtue rewarded, of hope gone into fruition, is a prophetic type of what God will do in all future time;—Every manna given by God in the creaturely form is a witness that points beyond itself to the immediate outgoing of God's life into the life of man—out of God's mouth into the believing mouth of man.

It is well for this priest-ridden world that our Methodist form of piety, of which Aunt Polly was a fit representative, ever dawned upon it. For hierarchism, which stands upon traditionalism, whether at Rome or at Oxford, tumbles into fragments beneath this truth:—God IS THE INFALLIBLE PRIEST OF EVERY CONSCIENCE THAT SEEKS HIM.

CLEON AND I.

Cleon hath a million acres—
Ne'er a one have I;
Cleon dwelleth in a palace
In a cottage I;
Cleon hath a dozen fortunes
Not a penny I;
But the poorer of the twain is
Cleon, and not I.

Cleon, true, possesseth acres,
But the landscape I;
Half the charms to me it yieldeth
Money cannot buy;
Cleon harbors sloth and dullness
Feasting vigor I;
He in velvet, I in fustian,
Richer man am I.

Cleon is slave to grandeur
Free as thought am I;
Cleon fees a score of doctors—
Need of none have I;
Wealth surrounded, care environed,
Cleon fears to die;
Death may come, he'll find me ready
Happier man am I.

Cleon sees no charm in nature
In a daisy I;
Cleon hears no anthems ringing
In the sea and sky,
Nature sings to me forever—
Earnest listner I;
State for state, with all attendants,
Who would change?—Not I!

Dying Words of Melancthon.

It is related that Melancthon, just before he died, expressed a wish to hear some choice passages of Scripture read; and this desire having been met, he was asked by his son-in-law, Sabinus, whether he would have anything else, to which he replied in those emphatic words: "Aliud nihil, nisi cœlum"—nothing else but heaven! and shortly after this he breathed his last. Well did one who sought to embalm his memory in verse say:

"His sun went down in cloudless skies,
Assured upon the morn to rise
In lovelier array;
But not like earth's declining light,
To vanish back again to-night;
The zenith where he now shall glow,
No bound, no setting beam can know
Without a cloud or shade of woe,
In that eternal day."

A Summary of Religion.

There is no salvation but by the free mercy of God; no mercy but through the mediation of Christ; no interest in Christ except by faith in him; no justifying faith but that which works by love and purifies the heart; no love to Christ which does not include love to his people, his example, his precepts; no genuine love to his people which does not influence a man to do good to them, as he has ability and opportunity.

An American on the Papal Throne.

A correspondent of the New York Post, writing from Rome on the 13th ult., says:

"This morning, Col. Hiram Pearson, of San Francisco, was fined one thousand piasters for setting himself on the throne of the Pope."

THE INSPIRATION OF THE ALMIGHTY IN GREAT DISCOVERIES.

MORSE AND THE TELEGRAPH.

The London Post contains a full account of a public dinner which was given on the 9th of October, at the Albion tavern, Aldersgate street, to professor S. F. B. Morse, of the United States, by the Telegraph Companies, in acknowledgment of his services in the electric telegraph, and with a view of publicly expressing an opinion of the importance of a submarine telegraph to America. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. Fothergill Cooke, one of the directors of the Electric Telegraph Company, who, with Professor Wheatstone, first practically established the system in Great Britain.

The circumstances were rather delicate for the Americans, considering that the Chairman was one who disputed with him the great discovery. Professor Morse, (or "Sir Samuel," if he chooses to be so called, since the King of Denmark has conferred a Knighthood of the order of Dannebrog upon him) made a capital speech. The manner in which he humbles his own father's pride before the Almighty, increased our respect for his abilities and character. In reply to the Chairman, introducing him to the meeting, Professor Morse rose:

When I confront here at this board men of mark, the dramatis personæ of this world's busy stage, names already illustrious, many honorably connected with other kindred grand enterprises of the age—may I not reasonably feel somewhat appalled before you? (Cheers.) I should be less or more than a man did I not feel with an ordinary intenseness of gratification, the applause so heartily uttered from such an assembly. But, gentlemen, gratifying as is applause—it is a cup that has intoxication in it; and I should have shrunk from it as from the excess of the wine cup, and have declined your honor this day, but that you have most happily connected with your grateful courtesy two other objects of vastly more importance than any which merely propose honor to me.

The objects you propose are—first, the expression of opinion on the importance of a direct submarine telegraph to America, and secondly, to testify to your friends across the Atlantic your high estimation of my contributions to the success and development of the electric telegraph. As more immediately connected with what I have previously said, bear with me, first, in a few remarks suggested by the latter proposition. If I seem to tread on delicate ground, I trust, before I am through, you will find it only a seeming trespass. It is indeed; true, that, among a large class in the United States—and that class, too, which may with great propriety be termed your "friends" (at least your natural friends)—there has been for a long period of time the strongest impression that, from some cause not easily explained, there was a great unwillingness on the part of England to give to Americans their just historical position in discoveries and inventions. Such an impression existing as a principle of action is surely of some political importance, becoming as it must become, if not removed, a festering thorn in the hearts of some of the most cultivated of the land. Such an impression, were it well founded, is fraught with danger to that good feeling which ought to exist, I say, between the citizens of the two countries, but between the citizens of all countries. And hence it is, gentlemen, that I can accept this demonstration towards myself upon broader and more comprehensive considerations than any mere individual gratification. The cause of international good feeling I will hope is somewhat promoted by it, and however humble may be the recipient of your attention, your motives, stand out in noble relief.

Before taking leave of this topic, however, there is one consideration connected with it, which, perhaps, ought to be brought forward here. I am sure it will tend to a more charitable solution of many of the difficulties that arise in contests for priority in inventions or discoveries, or in claims to distinction to such priority. Who that is versed in the history of inventions or discoveries has not observed and been struck with a singular coincidence, a simultaneity of invention of discovery in many minds far separated from each other, with no possible—at least, no traceable—knowledge of each other's thoughts or acts? (Cheers.) I am sure I may venture before a Christian British audience to suggest as its proper solution that the Great Author of all good, the giver of every good gift to the world, intends when such a boon is bestowed, that he first and prominently shall be recognized as the author; and so in his wisdom, he first prepares the way—he eliminates from hundreds of minds in various parts of his creation, the minor inventions and lesser discoveries necessary to be made before the greater and more striking invention is brought forth; and then it is that some thought struck out at the same time, or at least so near the same time that all perceive the impossibility of any intercommunication, leads one to exclaim as by an irresistible impulse, "What hath God wrought?" So, too, when the historian has made his search, and brought together the facts, if any one connected with a great invention or discovery has attracted to himself the more concentrated regard or honor of mankind, or of a particular nation, how significant it is that time and more research bring out other minds and other names to divide and share with him the hitherto exclusive honors. And who shall say that is eminently just? Did Columbus first discover America; or does Cabot, or some more ancient, adventurous Northman, dispute the honor with him? Is Gutlemberg, or Faustus, or Caxton, the undisputable discoverer of the art of printing? Does Watt alone connect his name with the invention of the steam engine? and Fulton with steam navigation? Did the French or the American explorers first discover the Antarctic continent? Or did Neptune in the planetary world reveal himself to Adams or Le Verrier? And why is this the usual course of discovery and invention? There is a lesson (and a consoling one, too) to be learned from this voice of history.—Man is but an instrument of good, if he will fulfill his mission. He that uses the instrument ought to have the chief honor, and he thus fulfilleth his purpose to have it. (Cheers.) It is surely sufficient honor for any man that he be a co-laborer in any secondary capacity to which he may be appointed by such a Head in a great benefaction to the world. You will not deem these remarks of too serious a character for this occasion. I confess to you I could not enjoy your hospitality without acknowledging, under this more elevated view of the origin of the telegraph, the secondary and subordinate position in which I feel it to be quite honor enough to be employed. Cheerfully let us leave, then, the past to the scrutiny of the future. Sufficient for us is the improvement of the present.

If we look now from the origin of the invention to its end—to its great intent—and keeping out of sight all mere personal views; if we think of the magnificent future, of a world brought and held together in one great telegraphic brotherhood, there is enough of enjoyment in the thought of being in any way a contributor to such a consummation to satisfy the most ardent mind. The telegraph, wonderful as has been its march over the world (and in this its progress, it seems to have borrowed a speed from the mysterious agent, which is its active soul, has a future which the past but feebly foreshadows.) To make it the world-wide blessing its Divine Author intends, we should be recreant to our high trust (to the great mission which we have received from Him) if we permit a narrow selfishness, be it national or personal, to interfere with its progress. A union of all is required, a willing surrender of prejudice or pride, or any other ignoble passion that may thrust itself in the way. (Cheers.) And have we met the most gratifying encouragement to go forward? A European unity, in a political sense, was a problem which once engaged intensely many philosophic minds. We are to resolve the question of a cosmopolitan unity, of more comprehensive importance, if not directly in a political, certainly in a commercial, point of view. Can the world be brought into union? What should prevent it? When I see at this table my generous friends of true Milesian energy and sympathy, whose labors in India have already prepared the far South to reach forth her electric hands to grasp the kindred hands of Europe stretched out to meet them; when I see in another place at your board the indefatigable projector of the submarine connections of Great Britain and the Continent, unhaunted by partial failures whose failures, indeed, not his own, are only made the forerunners of future success—when, again, I see near me my untiring, sleep-despising collaborators of the last Thursday night, through whose ingenious arrangements we were enabled to prove beyond a doubt the practicability of the annexation of Europe to America—you will not start at the word: it is an annexation which will awaken no national jealousy, but be the bond of a firmer peace and a better understanding; when I can also greet at this board my energetic fellow-countryman, whose perseverance knows no remission, and whose efforts in the enterprise are supported by kindred spirits in both countries, and by the Government of both countries, and all these minds and means concentrated and engaged with all their might to accomplish this great benevolent project, can there be rational doubt of the issue?

The telegraph has already achieved for itself the conquest of a vast domain. Its network covers the United States and North America with the meshes of more than 40,000 miles of conductors, and Europe is covered with a network quite as extensive. Shall its conquests be stayed within its present limits? I behold, Mr. Chairman, to a State of the American Union which bears upon its escutcheon, for its motto, a singular pregnant word, "Excelsior." In common with the pithy and beautiful sentiments which, more than all else, indow your time-honored armorial bearings, its significance is not confined to family, State or nation. Imbibing, then, the spirit of this motto, we must not look downward and backward, but upward and forward, until, by an united and harmonious effort, all nations shall be linked together in electric bonds, and the telegraph over the land and beneath the sea shall proclaim an universal union. Then may another national motto, made still more comprehensive by the substitution of a single word, to suit the new condition of the world, be fitly adopted as the universal telegraph motto—not "E Pluribus Unum," but "E Omnibus Unum." (Cheers.)

JOHN B. GOUGH.

Mr. Gough resides about five miles from Worcester, in a retired portion of the township of Boylston. Here, amid the bracing air of the Massachusetts hills, and with all the indoor comforts of a fine library and a happy household, he refits body and mind for next winter's new campaign against the Demon of the Bottle. Friend Gough is not rich save in moral trophies and the benedictions of the good; but he has managed to lay by enough to buy a very attractive house. The house is a white Italian cottage. Far up on a commanding elevation, with a retinue of royal hills about it, looking right down into waving groves of maple and chestnut, and into meadows knee-deep in verdure, with all the mending green of New-England uplands in full view, stands the summer-home of our young Boanerges. Here he throws off the panoply of the reformer, and turns practical farmer. His corn bespeaks good tillage; his "Mokeatoms" would grace a Jersey peach-basket. The humor that convulses vast audiences abroad makes our brother a most entertaining host, and quietly streams off him in abundance of pleasant sketch and anecdote. During my late visit, a deep and delightful revival of religion was in progress in the rural church of Boylston. I preached every evening to solemn audiences; after service a brief meeting was held for inquirers. Mr. Gough is an extemporized Bishop of the flock, as they are without a regular pastor. He superintends the Sabbath School, leads the choir, and addresses the inquiry meetings. What an April shower of blessings, to a church one layman can be, if he only has a heart to work and to give. The "Lee Avenue" Sabbath School in Brooklyn can testify to this.

Don't Worry.

When Bulstrode Whitelock was embarked as Cromwell's envoy to Swedru, in 1653, he was much disturbed in mind as he rested in Harwich on the preceding night, which was very stormy, while he reflected on the distracted state of the nation. It happened that a confidential servant slept in an adjacent bed, who, finding that his master could not sleep, said:

"Pray, sir, will you give me leave to ask you a question?"

"Certainly."

"Pray, sir, don't you think God governed the world very well before you came into it?"

"Undoubtedly."

"And pray, sir, don't you think that he will govern it quite as well when you are gone out of it?"

"Certainly."

"Then, sir, pray excuse me; but don't you think you may as well trust Him to govern it as long as you live?"

To this question Whitelock had no thing to reply; but, turning about, soon fell asleep, till he was summoned to embark.

Truth.

Dr. Chalmers, in a sermon, gives us the following.

The great lesson of the text, "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness, is the connection which obtains between integrity of purpose and clearness of discernment; insomuch that a duteous conformity to what is right, is generally followed up by a ready and luminous discernment of what is true. It tells us that if we have but grace to do as we ought, we should be made to see as we ought; or, in other words, that if right morally, we are in the highway of becoming right intellectually.

The Use of Big Words.

Big words pass for sense with some people, and sometimes may be very successfully employed when nothing else will answer. As when a man, in great alarm, ran to the minister to tell him he could see spots on the sun, and thought the world must be coming to an end.

"Oh, don't be afraid," said the minister, "its nothing but a phantasmagoria."

"Is that all?" said the frightened man, and went away quite relieved.

A very smart lawyer in Wilmington, North Carolina, had the misfortune to lose a suit for a client who had every reason to expect success. The client, a plain old farmer, was astounded by the long bill of costs, and hastening to the lawyer's office, said:

"I thought you told me we should certainly gain that suit?"

"So I did," said the lawyer, "but you see when I brought it up before the Judge; they said it was coram non Judice."

"Well," said the farmer, "if it was as bad as that, I don't wonder we lost it; and he paid the costs and a big fee besides, without another murmur.—Harper's Magazine.

A Good Motto.

The marker of a new clock for Temple Hall, London, was desired to wait on the benchers of the Temple, for a suitable motto to be placed upon it. After several intellectual applications, he came just as they sat down to dinner, and on asking for the motto, one of them testily replied, "Go about your business." Taking this as an answer to his question, he placed it on the clock.

It is not talking, but walking with God, that gives a man the denomination of a Christian.

PROPRIETIES IN THE HOUSE OF GOD.

Arthur in his "Tongue of fire," writing on the subject of expressing religious emotions in public worship, says:

With one class, the highest ideal of a Christian service seems to be, that nothing should pass that could, by any possibility, offend the taste of any human being who might look upon the whole scene as an assembly for some dignified purpose. As to the pulpit, their great desire is, that the pulpit should "behave itself;" and in this country of ours many a service may be found which is,

"Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly dull." That is, "faultless," in such eyes—"faultless," if the idea of a Christian service be not a scene of penitence, fervent prayer, bursting adoration; a triumph of spiritual power; an assembly, the atmosphere of which breathes of living souls and the present Spirit of God, of transgressors waking and penitents finding mercy, and saints standing truly nigh to the countenance of their Father; but instead of all this, a number of well-dressed people decorously meeting, and celebrating something that affects no one, and coolly listening to something not formed to affect any one, and, above all, not formed to offend any man, except him who wants to feel his own soul, and see the souls of his neighbors, moved to their depths as by a call from above.

The sanctuary of God ought undoubtedly, to be the highest scene and model of propriety; the pulpit to be its foremost and most shining example. He who, under any pretext, introduces trifling, oddity or courseness there strikes fearfully at a main support of power—true reverence. However offensive, want of propriety may be elsewhere, it is doubly so in the house of God. But the united praying of Christians, the delivering of a message from above, and the mingling of thankful voices in praise to the Most High, like all other peculiar actions, have a propriety of their own; and of all improprieties, none is more thoroughly alien to them than that, be it what it may whether stiff form of elaborate literature—which gives to the place a savor rather of the wisdom of man than of the power of God. At a marriage feast the solemnity proper to a funeral would be an impropriety. In a company of friends the precision of military movement would be improper. The noise of instruments is propriety in a concert, the sound of grinding in a mill, the clatter of shuttles in a factory, the ring of hammers in a forge, the laughter of children in a nursery.

And so the house of God has its own atmosphere; whatever would extinguish the reverent utterance of penitent or grateful emotion on the part of the simple and the poor, of the newly awakened or newly forgiven—whatever would train all Christian feelings to move there, in God's own house and in the assembly of His people, as if under the cold eye of a heathen world, is a more crying impropriety than those departures from taste which not only might flow, but must flow, from the utterance of feelings, where any multitude, composed of all classes, is deeply affected. When the noble idea of Christian propriety gives place to the paltry idea of properness—when intense reverence and love and joy, meeting and stirring the breasts of a multitude, are distasted, and men are set on having every thing square, well cut, and arranged before hand, then we have little right to expect the highest of all proprieties—the breaking of sinful hearts as if in pieces under the hammer of God's word, and the cry of awakened sinners, "What must we do to be saved?" In fact, many, who call themselves Christians, and whose claim we readily allow, would regard the utterance of such a cry in the house of God as not less improper than if raised in a theater. The people may say, "Amen," if it be just by rule; many murmur a response, if just where good men, long since dead, marked, "Respond here;" but any thing like the pentecostial scene—any general outburst of penitent emotion—would be intolerable; and even to see a solitary man, "unlearned and unbelieving," feeling himself judged and condemned, and "falling down upon his face and worshiping God," would be a disturbance of propriety, forsooth, because it would make a fracture in that icy properness wherein a long continuance of cold has encased many a branch of Christ's Church. Yet this scene is just as proper to the house of God, as the crash of a falling tree is to the forest where the woodman is clearing.

Spoiling the Marriage Ceremony.

The following statement is no jest, but a positive fact:—A young man in business in Liverpool, led his blushing bride to the alter in the Old Church in that town; and when the question was asked, "Wilth thou love and cherish," &c., he answered as is customary, and added "When she needed, he would hang her." The girl immediately stopped the clergyman, and turning upon her heel quietly walked out of church, saying that "A man who could say what he has said in such a moment, in jest, was most likely to put his threats into execution," and bade him choose another mate.

THE BRITISH ARISTOCRACY.

The Marquis of Breadalbane rides out of the house a hundred miles in a straight line to the sea, on his own property.—The Duke of Sutherland owns the county of Sutherland, stretching across Scotland from sea to sea. The Duke of Devonshire, besides his other estates, owns 96,000 acres in the county of Derby. The Duke of Richmond has 40,000 acres at Goodwood, and 300,000 at Gordon Castle. The Duke of Norfolk's park in Sussex, is fifteen miles in circuit.—An agriculturist bought lately the island of Lewes, in the Hebrides, containing 500,000 acres. The possessions of the Earl of Lonsdale gave him eight seats in Parliament. This is the Heptarchy again; and before the reform of 1832, one hundred and fifty-four persons sent three hundred and seven members to Parliament. The borough-mongers governed England.

These large domains are growing larger. The great estates are absorbing the small freeholds. In 1786 the the soil of England was owned by 200,000 corporations and proprietors; and in 1842, by 32,000. These broad estates find room on this narrow island. All over England, scattered at short intervals among ship-yards, mills, mines and forges, are the paradises of the nobles, where the live-long repose and refinement are hightened by the contrast with the roar of industry and necessity, out of which you have stepped aside.—*R. BRAZIL.

The Rev. J. C. Fletcher recently read an interesting paper on "Brazil and the Brazilians," before the New York Historical Society. Mr. Fletcher was for several years a resident of that country. Brazil, he says, possesses wonderful fertility and salubrity, which he attributes to the general elevation of the country and the constant trade winds upon her coasts, which cool the atmosphere and leave treasures of clouds from the ocean, which descend in rains which invigorate vegetation. The country has immense forests, garlanded with graceful wild vines and orchidaceous plants, or bearing the most brilliant flowers upon their own branches. The Victoria Regia blooms on the waters of the Amazon affluents, and the graceful palm lifts itself everywhere, imparting to the tropical landscape a very peculiar feature. Brazil, it is well known, is a diamond producing country, although its most prolific yield was in the eighty years preceding 1822—the era of Brazilian independence. In that time, three and a half million pounds sterling was obtained by the sales of the sparkling gem. It is rich, also, in other minerals, and in agricultural products. The single article of coffee, for the fiscal year 1854–55, amounted to more than twenty-five millions of dollars.

The climate is not so hot as in the summer with us, the average heat within the tropic of Capricorn being seventy-two degrees. The poisonous reptiles and the yellow fever have been greatly exaggerated; the latter has now left Brazil. Mr. Fletcher showed that the aborigines were among the finest who inhabited the New World, and proved that the earliest voyagers on the Amazon really believed that they had seen a nation of female warriors; for among the wild tribes found among the upper tributaries of that river to this day, the men wear their hair long, parted in the middle, braided behind, and done up with a comb. They pack out their beard, wear necklaces and bracelets, and with their shields over their breasts they present exactly the appearance of women.

According to Mr. Fletcher, the first Protestant colony in the New World was planted under the auspices of the French Admiral Coligni, upon an island in the bay of Rio Janeiro in 1555. The church at Geneva took a great interest in the enterprize, but through the treachery of its leader and the victories of the Portuguese it was completely broken up. The Hollanders occupied a portion of the Northern coast for thirty years, but were overpowered by the Portuguese. Some of them thereupon came to New York. The growth of Brazil may be dated from 1808, when King John IV., driven from Portugal by the French, took up his abode in this the greatest colony of his subjects, and opened its ports to the commerce of the world, and introduced other reforms.

The government of Brazil is a constitutional monarchy, and nowhere in the world are religious toleration, and the liberty of the individual better secured, unless in our own country. There is an imperial parliament, senators being elected for life, and representatives for four years (by electors.) There are twenty provinces, and twenty provincial legislatures. Brazil is free from revolutions, her commerce is constantly increasing, and slavery will be done away with in course of time. She has six lines of steamers connecting with Europe, but none with the United States, although we sell to her five millions of dollars worth annually, and purchase nineteen millions. The Emperor Don Pedro II., is an enlightened and able monarch, familiar not only with the literature of Europe, but of the United States, and is a man of great scientific attainments.

There is nothing so delightful, says Plato, as the hearing or speaking of truth. For this reason there is no conversation so agreeable as that of the man of integrity, who hears without any design to betray, and speaks without any intention to deceive.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

In another column, will be found a proclamation from his Excellency, Gov. Wickliffe, setting apart and appointing Thursday, 10th December next, to be observed throughout the commonwealth of Louisiana as a day of public thanksgiving and prayer; and bishops, priests and ministers of all denominations are requested to call their congregations together on that occasion, in order to offer up thanks and prayers to the Giver of all good for the bounteous and manifold blessings he has showered upon us as a people and as a State.

The proclamation of the Governor is in excellent taste, as well as beautifully written. It is creditable alike to his head and heart. We trust his recommendations will be faithfully and universally observed.

The Governor has not sent his proclamation to us for publication nor requested it in our colnmns, but the Advocate, being the organ of the majority of the ministers and church-going people in the State, we publish it abroad. We accept these acknowledgements of a Providence, and these proclamations of our rulers and majistrates, as of excellent omen to them and the commonwealth.

The day fixed npon is not the same with other States. Bnt Lonisiana is peculiar in her manners and blessings. It is a good day, and suitable, and we trust will be well observed.

DISCOURSES.

Messrs. Woolley and Mosely, Booksellers of Marion, Ala., have sent us a circular stating that Rev. Dr. Neely, has consented to publish a volume of his sermons, as soon as a certain number of subscribers have been obtained; and having obtained the snbscription agency for this forthcoming work, takes this method of saying to his friends and admirers, that the volume will consist of some three or four hundred pages, neatly bound in Cloth, and will be sold at $1 50.

Orders can be forwarded to their address.

Rev. E. D. Pitts.—This gentleman left the city with his family for Mansfield, on Tuesday last. He is Vice President of Mansfield Female College and Professor of Mathematics. He will enter immediately upon the discharge of his duties.

The Talks.—We hope those "Talks with Aunt Polly," may lead some bewildered soul out of the woods. By a coincidence, the obituary of the real person reached us for publication this week, with the last of the "talks."

Harper's Magazine and Story Book for December, have reached us, promptly, through 36 Camp Street. See Contents, as elsewhere advertised.

Drugs.—We took a look and a walk through the large establishment of E. S. Wheelock & Co., a few days ago. The things they advertise in another page, seemed to be there, and more too. Planters who would supply their medicine chests with fresh drugs, and Apothecaries laying in their stock, would do well to call at 43 Magazine street. They will find a various stock, and obliging gentlemen to show it and sell it to them.

A. J. Tully & Co.—The card of this excellent firm will be found in our advertising columns.

A Liberal Donation.—The Memphis Evening News learns that E. H. Porter, Esq., of that city, has made a donation of 10,000 acres of land to the LaGrange Synodical College—a very liberal and munificent donation.

The Texas Presbyterian.—This paper published at Huntsville, Texas, Rev. A. J. McGowan, editor and proprietor, for nine years past the organ of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of this State, was declared by the recent Synod at Round Rock, to be unacceptable, and is no longer endorsed, or recommended to the patronage of the people.—Tex. Adv.

Mormonism in Great Britain.—An English paper states that the Mormons are making numerous converts in Great Britain, by exaggerated pictures of life in Utah. They now teach openly their doctrine of polygamy; but it seems no impediment to converts from the gentler sex.

The Papacy in Jerusalem.—Some of the foreign papers state that the report is assuming more consistency relative to the translation of the seat of the Papacy from Rome to Jerusalem. It is now declared that this question had already been most seriously examined; even so far back as the time when the bishops met to determine on the immaculate conception of the Virgin, a large number of the members, and Pius IX himself, were favorable to the project.

BETTING ON ELECTIONS.

Perhaps this is the most favorable time to say a few words on this subject, with hope of heed. The losers on the late election are sore, and the gainers feel generous enough to admit a principle

The immorality cannot be denied. It is gambling in the full sense, and sin of it. Betting on a horse race is hardly so great an offense, because here a noble subject is degraded.

It is extravagance on one hand and extortion on the other. The gain is not healthy; the loss not legitimate. Neither party can afford it. When labor makes money, the facilities of using it well are generally acquired at the same time. But where money comes otherwise, it can hardly fail of corrupting. And if the winner lose, how must it be with the loser? His family wronged, his creditors cheated, himself chagrined and perhaps desperate.

It is unpatriotic. In the opening of an electoral canvass, or during its progress, a citizen makes a bet upon the issue. His patriotism is sold in that bet. A mercenary interest, henceforth, possesses him. A stronger stimulant than whisky fires his party zeal. The fumes of Mammon mingle with his patriotism. He can afford to spend $1000 in buying up spurious votes, or in deterriug lawful ones, if, by the issue, he make $2000. Corruption, in its worst form, is thus introduced into that vital part of the commonwealth—the ballot box. The temptation is strong, and few there be who, if their moral principle gave way in laying the wager, will not give way in the means to accomplish the desired result.

Suppose in the course of the searching discussion, his candidate is faced by some forgotten record, or assumes a position disastrous to the country. He must ignore these revelations; he must hoodwink the people; he must stand by his man and see him through—for his money is staked! Perhaps he will be ruined if he lose that bet. Perhaps his country will be ruined if he win it.

Did one ever know a man who had bet on an election, desert his candidate for his country's good. He is blind to all developments, impervious to all facts. Can such a man be a patriot?

Constitutional liberty is not safe in the hands of such patriots. They would gamble on its coffin, and cast lots for its vesture.

LOTTERIES.

A statute of Louisiana forbids lotteries. None are licensed in the State. The raffling system (which is a pinhook lottery) does a brisk business. But the selling of lottery tickets goes on openly and without rebuke in our streets. The monthly Havana lottery drains from our city, it has been estimated, a million of dollars, every year. Occasionally a prize is drawn, or reported to be drawn by some poor man, and this acts the petty speculators all agog to try their luck. One person, we are told, has been for years, buying a ticket every month for $20. Thus far he has only got back a $50 prize; but he lives in hopes of $50,000 some of these days. In many cases the dishonesty of clerks has begun here, ending in commercial disaster and personal disgrace. A laborer after laying up earninga in care of his wife for a year or two thought he must have a pretty good pile, and would inveat it in a home. She had spent it all in Havana lottery tickets! Poor woman, she dreamed of learning by arrival of every steamer that their fortunes were made, and no more use for hard work. Really, moral and political economy alike, call for some prohibitory regulator on this subject. These lottery ticket vendors are very vampires.

SEA SHORE CIRCUIT.

Bro. M'Tyeire—Permit me to give a brief account of this important work, it having a membership of 157 whites and 75 colored. This is a healthy and beautiful coast, and is twenty-five miles in length. Within sight are vessels of large tonnage, constantly loading with lumber for Europe and other parts of the world. One man here has shipped to Europe within 18 months, over six million feet of lumber. We have about twenty saw mills at work here, some of which can average more than 10,000 feet of well cut lumber per day. We have two large foundries and engine factories, making engines entire, of a large size, and superior kinds for mills and cottongins, as not a spark of fire is ever seen rising from the chimney; the steam being turned into them as it escapes.

The land is poor, but the live oak; cedar, magnolia and other evergreens, render the coast beautiful. The tide ebbs and flows almost all round this peninsula. Twenty-three ships have been loaded with lumber this year, one of which drew twenty-two feet of water, and was laden with over 1,000,000 feet of lumber for Australia. E. R. STRICKLAND.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

The Genius of Christianity; or, the Spirit and Beauty of the Christian Religion. By Viscount Dr. Chateaubriand. A new and complete translation from the French, with explanatory notes, preface and biographical notice by the Author, by Charles White, D. D. Baltimore: J. Murphy & Co. Philadelphia: Lippincott.—1856.

The publishers, through McGinnis, 36 Camp street, have laid this superbly printed work on our table—8vo. pp. 763, with a likeness of the author. Of course we cannot recommend Chateaubriand's ecclesiasticism or theology, who counted Protestants the "enemies of religion;" but his disquisitions in philosophy and poetry and his eloquence are truly captivating. These last make up the larger and they do, to us, the better portion of the volume. The English translation, reprinted in this country in 1815, it is here asserted, was faulty—the translator having taken "unwarrantable liberties with the original, omitting innumerable passages and sometimes whole chapters, excluding sentences and paragraphs of the highest importance, those particularly which gave to the author's argument its peculiar force in favor of (Roman) Catholicism."

From the Harper's, New York, we have through H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, a supply of their latest issues:

Harper's School History.

This is an attractively presented narrative of the general course of history from the earliest periods to the establishment of the American Constitution; prepared with questions illustrated with 150 maps and engravings.

A Child's History of Rome. 2 vols.

The author of a "Child's History of the United States"—Bonner—has tried his hand successfully on an earlier period and one that admits of great interest. These volumes to a reading child would be a welcome present and lay the foundation of historical knowledge deep and pleasantly.

The American Poulterer's Companion.

Hoi for Shanghais and all other sorts of roosters, turkeys and what not that has feathers. Model chicken houses are here. Besides treating practically of the breeding and management of various species of domestic poultry, this book has chapters on killing and preparing for market. A new edition, by N. C. Bennett, with 120 illustrations.

Westward Empire; or, the Great Drama of Human Progress. By E. L. Magoon.

People that read Mr. Magoon's books have little to do and less to think of. We have given him up, this good while. He is as windy, as if he had fed all his life time on sweet potatoes. His mental flatulence is unendurable; therefore we close this book where we wish we had closed several others of which he is author—at the title page.

REVIVALS.

Opelousas Cir. La. Conf., Nov. 17, '56.

Bro. McTyeire: We have just closed a very interesting meeting of three days continuance at the Junction of the Fusalier and Teche. We had the efficient help of Rev. J. H. Waters, and a number of his members from the New Iberia Circuit.

There were eight accessions to the church; five professed having faith in Christ, and the Missionary collection amounted to $68 25.

At my last regular appointment at Plaquemine Brules, four professed conversion; two joined the church, and forty-four (44) were baptized, not one immersed!

Yours affectionately.

B. F. ALEXANDER.

Harrisonburg Cir. Catahoula Pa. La.

This Circuit has been lately blessed with a good Camp Meeting—held at Black Jack, Nov. 24th to 28th.

Had rain the greater part of three days, but fortunately a large and excellent shed had been provided, under which our congregations were enabled to worship quite comfortably. From three to five hundred persons were in attendance. General good order prevailed. Visiting and laboring brethren present: Rev. U. Riley, A. E. Goodwyn and E. W. Griswold. Bro. Parvin, P. C., was at his post. Result of the meeting: 54 accessions and 60 conversions. Nearly all the converts were of persons between the ages of 10 and 30—only two or three that were old and gray headed were to be seen among the number. How melancholy the thought that so few of this class ever become the subjects of coaverting grace.

To those who, as the fruits of that meetiug, were privileged to rejoice together, and who may read this, the writer would say: "Keep yourselves in the love of God." "Stand fast, watch and pray," do this, every day, and then—

"Though all hell should endeavour to shake,
He'll never, no never, no never, forsake."

Three of the preachers—two Itinerants and one Local professed sanctification.

What is our callings glorious hope
But inward holiness?"

May the prayers of the Saviour for his Apostles, be answered to the church and her ministry, in this our day. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

BEDSIDE OF A DYING BELEIVER.

Let us pause a moment at the bedside of the dying believer, and mark the marvelous power of the Bible as manifested in the hour of nature's extremity—that hour so near to us all and so big with indescribable solemnity—the hour when heart and flesh shall fail us, when every earthly anchor shall be weighed, and every earthly joy shall fade—when we must go forth all alone through the valley of the shadow of death into the dread eternity beyond. In that awful hour surely it is only truth that can stand; it is only what cannot be shaken that will endure.

Search the records of the closing scenes of God's saints, and find, if you can, an instance of one who bewailed at that crisis that he had trusted the Bible—find, if you can, one whose dying breath testified that he had believed a cunningly-devised fable, which had proved as a bruised reed when he leaned upon it in his agony. I have read and heard of, yea, and witnessed, not a few who bemoaned, with bitterest regret, that they had not more prized and obeyed the Bible; but I never read, nor heared of, nor saw one who believed that he had too much valued, followed, and magnified it.

Many a time has it crowned the deathbed with a light from heaven, converted the flames of martyrdom into a chariot of triumph, and swallowed up death in victory. The testimony of the dying surrounds the word of God with a halo of glory; countless are the clouds of witnesses which attest its power! What should we do in the terrible hour without the lamp of life, the charter of salvation, the title-deed to heaven? —Hugh Stowell.

Language of the Bible.

Dr. Guthrie makes the following remarks on the strong language of the Bible, touching the condition of the ungodly:

"There are terrors enough in the Bible to make a man's hair stand on end. Surely were God but for one moment to let this world hear the weeping and wailing of the lost, that sound more terrible than Egypt's midnight cry, would rouse the student at his books, arrest the foot of the dancer in the ball, stop armies in the very fury of the fight, and calling a sleeping world from their beds, would bend the most stubborn knees and extort from all the one loud cry, "Lord save me, or I perish!" Still it is not terror which is the mighty power of God. The Gospel like most medicines for the body, is of a compound nature; but, what else enters into its composition, its curative element is love. No man yet was ever driven to heaven; he must be drawn to it; and I wish to draw you. The Gospel has teror in it no doubt. But it is like our atmosphere—occasionally riven by the thunder, and illuminated by the fatal flash; it is, at times, the path of the stealthy pestilence—charged with elements of destruction, and impregnated with the seeds of disease; but how much more is it not a great magazine of health filled with the most harmonious sounds, fragrant with the sweetest odors, hung with golden drapery, the pathway of snbeams, the womb of showers, the feeder of flowing streams full of God's goodess, and the fountain of all earth's life! And just as in that atmosphere, which God has wrapped round this world, there is much more health than sickness, much more life than famine, much more love than terror.

This terror is not only subordinate to love, but subservient to it. God, indeed, tells as of hell, but it is to persuade us to go to heaven; and, as the skillful painter fills the back ground of his picture with his darker colors, God puts in the smoke of torment and the black clouds of Sindi, to give brighter prominence to Jesus the cross of Calvary, and and his love to the chief of sinners.—His voice of terror is like the cream of the mother bird when the hawk is in the sky. She alarms her brood that they may run and hide beneath her feathers, and as I believe that God had left that another dumb unless he had given her wings to her little ones, and I am sure that He who is very pitiful, and has no pleasure in any creature's pain, had never turned our eyes to the horrible gulf unless for the voice that cries, "Deliver me from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom." We had never heard of sin, had there been no Savior; nor of hell and there been no heaven.—Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, and never had Bible light been flashed before the eyes of the sleeping felon to wake him from his happy dream, but that he might see the similar form of Mercy, and hear her, as she says with pointing finger, "behold, I have sat before thee an open door."

A Bishop Robbed.

We regret to learn that Bishop Cobb, of Alabama, was robbed of $140, as he was leaving the cars at Baltimore. We should not have had the beautiful example of the Good Samaritan, if it had not been for the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jerico, and fell among theives; and the misfortune of this excellent Bishop, will, we are confident, furnish, from some quarter, pleasing proof that the race of Good Samaritans is not yet extinct.—Banner of the Cross.

A Good Sign.—There are 600 students at the University of Virginia, the largest number ever seen there.

Traffic in Pulpit Talent.

The practice of frequently comparing one minister with another, to make up our minds which will do best for "our" pulpit, is as deleterious to the piety of the churches, as it is injurious to the character and standing of the ministry. We ought to listen to God's word from the pulpit with profound reverence, and with earnest desires for our personal sanctification. But how can we do this in a state of mind like that of men who are endeavoring to get the best of a bargain? Or how can the preacher make full proof of his ministry when he feels that all eyes and ears are scanning his form, features, intonations and everything about him, to see whether they can make money out of him, in the way of pew-letting and church subscriptions? The congregation which is in the habit of comparing the gifts of this and that minister to see which would do them the best service, become disqualified for edification under one more than another. They never get one so good, but the thought is ever present, can we not get a better? If they happen to hear one who speaks louder, talks faster, or makes more show than their pastor, they begin to think, and, perhaps, to whisper among themselves "What a grand thing it would be if we had that man! With him in our pulpit we should get all the young folks, outshine the neighboring churches, and be at once flush of money and overrun with people."

Now, we can hardly imagine anything in worse taste than such expressions of feelings. The offence which it offers to God, also, is equal to the violation of correct sentiment. Does God put a man into the ministry, to hold him as a star in his right hand, or assign him his place on the walls of Zion, merely as a means of pew-letting, money-making or sectarian rivalry? And the church which allows itself thus to barter in ministerial talent, is auch of a piece with those husbands who are ever comparing their wives with other women, and saying, "If such or such a woman were my wife, I should be, indeed a happy man."

The mercantile view of the relation between pastor and people must inevitably lead to the distruction of the usefulness of the ministry, by associating with it the idea of a profession adopted merely as a means of support. Thus, instead of engaging in the work actuated by a stern sense of duty, and resolved to consecrate the energies of life to it, young men should undertake it merely as a means of livelihood, and forsake it the moment a more profitable field of labor is open to them.—N. Y. Chronicle.

Sunday Schools and Crimes.

One of the greatest blessings conferred on our country is the institution of Sunday Schools. It is possible a few who attend may not be essentially benefited, but we believe the number is small of those who do not receive some benefit. Indeed we cannot see how it is possible for a child to attend a well conducted school for any length of time, and not have implanted in his mind some good principle, or have some resolution formed that will be of great use to him in after life.

How many a man, who tempted to sin, has been checked by some text of scripture, or some moral lesson which he learned in Sunday School! while it has been remarked that those boys who have not had the advantage of such a school are by far the most inclined to vice! And evidence of this fact is apparent in regard to the boys in the State reform school at Westborough. The Boston Journal lately stated, that out of one hundred and twenty-two boys now confined there, only five ever attended a Protestant Sunday School. A large majority of the whole number are children of foreign parents and many never attended any school whatever.

This is not only a very favorable comment on the utility of Sunday Schools, though, doubtless a very just one, but it also furnishes us with a lesson in regard to the population thrown upon our shores from other countries, particularly from Ireland. A great many of these children it is true are born in this country; but, as most of their parents are Catholics, they are never sent to their own Sunday Schools, and some of them are not sent to any school; and the consequence is, as might be expected, they grow up in ignorance, and destitute of those moral checks which would restrain them from vice.

Every encouragement, therefore, that can be given to Sunday Schools, and every successful effort to get the children of emigrants into them or in fact, into any school where truth and good principles would be inculcated, is so much toward preventing vice.

Let Sunday Schools be sustained, and let the children of foreigners be looked up and sent to school, if we wish well to our country.

"Heaping Coals of Fire on his Head."

A young girl in South Africa was seized in a wood by a savage enemy of her father's, who cut off both her hands, and then sent her, bleeding, home.—Many years passed, the poor girl recovered from her wounds, and the stumps healed. One day there came to her father's door a poor, worn-out, gray-headed man, who asked for alms. The girl knew him at once as the cruel man that cut off her hands. She went into the hut, ordered a servant to take him bread and milk, as much as he could eat, and sat down and watched him eat it.—When he had done, she dropped the covering that hid her handless wrists from view, and, holding them up before him, uttered a sentence, meaning, "I have had my revenge!"—the very sentence he had uttered when he so cruelly maimed her. The man was overwhelmed, deeply humbled, and filled with surprise. The secret was, the girl meantime had been converted, and had learned that lovely Scripture, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

NEW BOOKS.

BY THE BOOK EDITOR.

The Life of Alfred the Great. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. Price 30 cents.

It is generally admitted that King Alfred was, all things considered, one of the greatest and best princes that ever sat on a throne and swayed a sceptre. No genuine Englishman or Anglo-American will dispute his right to the title awarded him by history—"Alfred the Great." This admirable sketch of his character and account of his life and times will be read with interest and profit. It was originally prepared under the auspices of the London Religious Tract Society; but it has been carefully revised and adapted to circulation in our country by the Editor.

Characters, Scenes and Incidents of the Reformation. Revised by Thos. O. Summers. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. Richmond: L. M. Lee. Charleston: E. H. Myers.

This work traces the history of the Church of Christ through that gloomy millennium known as the Dark Ages. Dark, indeed, were they. It is not merely, as Romanists say, that we are in the dark concerning them; but they were dark in themselves—dark as night. Darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness covered the people. Here and there the light shined in the darkness; but the darkness comprehended it not. The light which shone in the middle ages, indeed, enlightened some minds, and serves to make the darkness visible to us. And we ought to look upon it. The perusal of a work like this heightens our admiration of the noble men—Culdees, Waldenses, Lollards, and the Reformers of the sixteenth century—who protested against the abominations of "man of sin," and in thousands of instances sealed their testimony with their blood, bequeathing to us the rich inheritance which we enjoy. Happy for us if we use it aright ourselves, and do all in our power to put all others who have it not, in possession of it. The first volume traces the dim outline of the reformers before the Reformation, from the rise of the Culdees to the times of Luther: the second continues the history from the times of Luther to the close of the sixteenth century. Both volumes may be procured for 60 cents. They should be put into every Sunday-School and Family Library without delay.

Wonders of Organic Life. Revised by Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen.

Here is, indeed, a book of wonders! The vegetable and animal kingdoms are stocked and stored with the marvels and miracles of infinite Wisdom, Power and Love. It is equally our duty and our delight to regard the work of the Lord, and to consider the operation of his hands. The phenomena of organic life in numerous interesting particulars, are happily brought to view in this admirable little volume. It has accordingly afforded us great pleasure to revise it for insertion in our Sunday-School and Family Libraries. The contents are as follows: The Vital Principle—the Blood—the Purification of the Blood—Organic and Inorganic Matter Compared—Repose; or Sleep—Hybernation—Hybernation of Birds—Torpidity of Reptiles—Æstivation, or Summer Sleep—Migration. Price 35 cents.

The Preachers, Tract Agents and Colporteurs, in ordering books, would do well to furnish themselves with a good supply of our larger publications, as well as those of the 18mo size. The binder, as we have noticed, has recently sent a good number of "The Life and Times of Jesse Lee," by his nephew, Dr. Lee—a very interesting biography—also "Wiman's Discourses," which we particularly recommend as a most elaborate, edifying, and thoroughly orthodox body of divinity. Some objections have been made to the mechanical style of this work and we confess it is not altogether to our own taste; but a large, bold type, and a broad, liberal margin, are prime recommendations to others. Let it be put into every reading family; and with it our standard revised edition of Wesley's Sermons, which are bound up in four and also in two duodecimo volumes; and, as no mean accompaniment to the foregoing, we add Dr. Cross's "Headlands of Faith," and the complete "Works of Bascom, edited by the Rev. T. N. Ralston." The character and price of these and other works are specified in the Southern Methodist Almanac for 1857, a copy of which should be in every house. We call attention to these works at the present time, as the navigation of the Cumberland has been resumed, and shipments of books can now be made in that direction; and the preachers and agents of most of the Conferences are just going to their respective fields of labor. The Discipline says, "Circulate the books;" and we have promised to keep the rules, and not to mend them or break them.

Ten Dollars' worth of Sunday-School Books, including the new Five-Dollar Library, has just been sent by the Board of Managers of the Sunday-School Society to another Sunday-School in Tennessee. Other schools needing donations of books, and applying for them through a proper medium, shall be promptly supplied. One of the best methods to secure the continuance of a school through the winter, is to supply it with new books in the autumn. By the way, this school raised eight dollars itself for the purchase of books. We like to help those who help themselves.

Death Will Come.

Death will come; he will certainly come. He cannot be put back; he cannot be made to take his step any slower. Oh, he will come! All that lives on earth will die—every beast, bird, and creeping thing; the humming bird, the insect that flutters in the sunbeam; every tree and shrub and flower—the oak, the pine, the acacia, the moss that grows over the wall; every monarch, every peasant; every rich man, every poor man; every slave, every master of a slave; every man, every woman, every child; every old man that prides himself on his honors and wealth; every young man prides himself on his talents or his strength; every maiden that prides herself on her beauty. Oh, all will die! I am in a world of death; I am amidst the dying and the dead; I see not a living thing in my rambles that will not die—no man, no woman, no child; no bird, no beast, no plant, no tree. The eagle that cuts the air cannot fly above it; the monster of the deep cannot dive below it; the tiny insect cannot make itself so insignificant that death will not notice it; the leviathan cannot, with his great strength, struggle against it. The Christian will die; the sinner will die—yea, the sinner! Your wealth cannot save you; your accomplishments cannot save you. Death cares for none of these things; they are all trifles—gewgaws beneath his notice. He no more "loves a shining mark" than an igaoble one; he has no more pride in cutting down the rich man than the poor man—the daughter of beauty and fashion than the daughter of ugliness and sin. He loves to level the thistle as well as the rose bud; the brambles as the magnolia; the brier as the cedar of Lebanon. He cares as little for the robes of ermine as for the beggar's rags; as little for your richest vestments and gayest apparel as for the blanket of the savage. You will die, and the fear of death will come upon you. Death comes just as he is—pale, solemn, fixed, stern, determined on his word. He hears no cry for pity; he regrets no shriek of terror. He comes steady, certain, unchanged and unchangeable in his purpose, to take you from your bed of down; to hurry you away from your splendid dwelling; to call you out of the assembly-room—to take you away from your companions, that will miss you for a moment, and then resume their dance; that you may die. Death will come. He has been advancing towards you ever since you began to breathe. He has kept on his way, always advancing to meet you, while you have been asleep or awake; and if you have gone North, or South, East, or West, he has always put himself into your path—how near or how remote you have ever known. Death will come. He has always been advancing, never receding; and soon his baneful shadow will fall upon your path; and that shadow will deepen and become more chilly, like an advancing eclipse; and then his dark form will stand right before you, between you and the light of the living world, and you will be in the dark valley. Death will come—fearful enough under any circumstances, even if you are a Christian—awful, unspeakably awful, if you are not.—Rev. Albert Barnes.

Two in Heaven.

"You have two children," said I.

"I have four," was the reply; "two on earth and two in heaven."

There spoke the mother! Still here, only gone before! Still remembered, loved and cherished, by the hearth and at the board, their places not yet filled; even though their successors draw life from the same faithful breast where their dying heads were pillowed.

"Two in heaven!"

Safely housed from storm and tempest. No sickness there, nor drooping head, nor fading eye, nor weary feet. By the green pastures, tended by the good Shepherd, linger the little lambs of the heavenly fold.

"Two in heaven!"

Earth less attractive. Eternity nearer. Invisible cords drawing the material soul upwards. "Still small voices" ever whisper, "Come!" to the world weary spirit.

"Two in heaven!"

Mother of angel! Walk softly!—holy eyes watch thy footsteps!—cherub form bend to listen! Keep thy spirit free from earth taints; so shalt thou go to them though they may not return to thee.

A Missionary Murdered.—The Rev. J. Thomas, a Wesleyan missionary, was lately murdered by the Kaffirs. The act was prompted by a blind revenge, in consequence of two natives who had offended Faku, the chief under whose orders the murder was committed, having taken refuge at Beecham Wood Station, the post of Mr. Thomas.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS CALLED FOR—10,000 to the Home Circle—3000 to the Quarterly Review, and not less than 50,000 to the Sunday school Visitor.

Shall we not have them by the first of January next? This is a grave question; and we submit it in confidence to the ministry, membership, and friends of the entire Connection. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you especially for a large increase of patronage to all our Publishing House Periodicals. The present is a favorable season for obtaining new subscribers, as well as for securing the renewal of old ones. On leaving your different charges, for the purpose of attending your respective Conferences, would it not be well to take with you from five to twenty new subscribers? This can certainly be done in almost every case, if the proper efforts be made. And on entering the new fields of labor to which you may be assigned, if you desire, as we knew you do, to see a great and glorious revival of enlightened, genuine, and enduring piety among the people of your several charges; and if you would bring all the available means and instrumentalities of the Church to bear on the accomplishment of this one great object, let all our prodical issues be fully and freely circulated in every part of your work; and see to it, that this be done at the earliest possible day. Confiding implicitly both in your ability and disposition to carry out this important enterprise, we have but to remind you that a strict, though prudent, adherence to the cash system, will be to the interests of all concerned. Be careful to receive the money, as far as practicable, at the time of taking the subscriptions and renewals; and dont fail to remit it to us, if possible, in connection with the names and post offices of the subscribers.—This will be a special accomodation to us, and a great relief to our clerks.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

AS IT IS THE DUTY OF MAN TO BOW DOWN IN HUMBLE submission to the chastening afflictions of Almighty God, and to bless and praise His holy name for the bestowal of benefits undeserved, so likewise, is it a solemn duty, incumbent on a nation and a people, to observe a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

And now, since God has bestowed upon this His favored land, His richest and choicest blessings—since we have such abundant cause to bless and praise His Holy name, I, Robert C. Wickliffe, Governor of the State of Louisiana, in pursuance of established custom, do set apart and appoint THURSDAY, the 13th day of December, to be observed throughout this State as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer, and I earnestly request all the good people of the State to assemble on that day in their respective places of worship, to give thanks and praise to Almighty God, the giver of all goodness. And I therefore issue this my proclamation, recommending and requesting all Bishops, Priests and Ministers of all creeds and denominations to call the faithful together on that day, that it may be made a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

Given under my hand and the seal of State at Baton Rouge, this 14th day of October, in the Year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, and the year of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-first. ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE.

By the Governor:

A. DUPLANTIER,

LOCAL NEWS.

THE WEATHER.—Fog, mist, and drizzle have prevailed during the past week.

ADDRESS OF COL. KEWEN ON NICARAGUA.—At the Lyceum Hall of this city, on Monday evening last, Col. Kewen, lately arrived from Nicaragua, and one of the staff of Gen. Walker, delivered a most eloquent address on the past, present and future of Nicaragua. The audience present, though not very large, was very respectable, and frequent rounds of applause demonstrated that their entire sympathies were with Walker in his South American enterprise. The address was delivered extemporaneous, and commanded the admiring attention of the patriot and the scholar. The Crescent, alluding to it, says, and truly:

"It was the outpouring of a manly, enthusiastic heart, clothed with all the beauties of a scholastic acquirement and the armor of genuine oratory. We never heard the past, the present and the future of any country portrayed with more beauty and ability. It was, in short, an address worthy of its glorious subject, and one which reflected the highest honor upon the speaker."

THE STEAMSHIP ALMA.—This vessel is one of the France-American line of steamships, to run between Havre and this port. She arrived here on Friday morning, the 21st inst. She brought passengers and a large amount of merchandize. The Alma is an iron-screw propeller, of about 1000 tons register, with two horse power engine. She is advertised to leave New Orleans for Havre on the 5th of next month.

HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION.—We have often wondered that here in New Orleans, the greatest floral city in the United States—where flowers gladden the eye and intoxicate the nostril, from their native stems, in the open air, all the year round—where October vies with May, and January with July, in the sweetness and beauty with which they clothe the gardens, the difference of the season being marked only by the predominence of each class of flowers, in its turn over the others—there has been no such organization as a regular horticultural society. In the Northern and Western cities, where the hot-house, with so much labor and expense, is made to counteract the asperities of the winter months, the horticultural displays are among the greatest exhibitions of the year; and this is because gentlemen of refinement and taste, genuine lovers of the beauties of nature, get together and strive in a friendly manner to see who can most successfully woo the beauties of Elora. It has often occurred to us that a similar spirit in the South would produce results compared with which the triumphs of colder latitudes would sink into utter insignificance. We love flowers; the ladies love flowers; the birds love flowers; every human being who is decently human loves flowers, and, to parody Shakspeare in his tribute to music, we hold that "he who hath no beauty in his eye, and is not moved by the odor of sweet flowers, is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils." We were however ignorant of the fact that a horticultural society was organized in this city a year ago. It now gives us pleasure to state that the society has not only been in existence about a year, but that at a meeting of the members held a few days since, steps were taken for the first public exhibition of the society. The meeting was held at the office of Greer B. Duncan, Esq., with Dr. Mercer in the chair. A resolution was adopted providing for an exhibition on the 20th of January next; a committee was appointed to procure a suitable hall and make other arrangements; and it was agreed that a circular should be issued, soliciting contributions to the exhibition. We hope our gardening friends, in and out of the city, will take notice of this and see what they can do on the occasion. We are satisfied that a proper degree of interest in this matter will produce results astonishing to the great mass of our citizens. We shall await the exhibition with the greatest interest.—Crescent.

THE SMELSER CASE.—This case, which has been in court so long, and excited so much interest in this city, was submitted to the jury without argument on Saturday evening last, at 9 o'clock.

At half-past 10 o'clock the jury came into court with a verdict against Scott of "guilty, without capital punishment." They could not agree upon a verdict as to Mrs. Smelser, and were accordingly discharged. Judge Robertson offered to take $5000 bail for her appearance upon a new trial, but as it was late, the bail was not furnished, and she was remanded to prison with Scott, whose counsel gave notice that they would move for a new trial in his favor.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT—Tuesday.—The application of Wm. H. Garland, for a change of venue, was yesterday refused by Judge Robertson, for reasons to be given and filed.

Mrs. Theresa Smelser was at last set at liberty, upon giving bail of five thousand dollars to appeal whenever the Court shall be ready to give her a new trial. A motion for a new trial was filed by the counsel of Adam Scott.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Dr. John Rice, an old man aged 76 years, and a native of Ireland, residing at the St. Charles Hotel, was found dead in his bed on Thursday morning, having been taken suddenly ill during the night. The Coroner held an inquest over this body. Verdict—Died of congestion of the lungs.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Wreck of the Steamer Superior.

THIRTY-FIVE LIVES LOST.

Below is the statement by the mate of the Superior of the terrible calamity.

The steamer Superior left the Sault St. Mary's canal at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 29th of October, wind from the southward, weather favorable.—Passed White Fish Point at 11 A. M.—At 8 o'clock P. M. wind canted round S. W. and blew fresh.—At 5 P. M. off Grand Marais, snow squalls, and wind blowing fresh from S. W. I then told Captain Jones we would have to run back. He made the reply: "We will wait and see how it is at 6 o'clock." Wind still blowing heavy from the S. W.—At 10 o'clock, wind hauled around N. W., blowing very heavy. At 11 o'clock made Grand Island light, bearing about W. S. W., distant about fifteen miles. It was the intention of the Captain to run under the lee of Grand Island.

At 11½ o'clock we carried away our rudder; sea heavy and making fast.—She then fell on into the trough of the sea. We then shipped our tiller, and tried our aft wheel, but found it would not work. At 12 o'clock her smoke pipes blew away. The deck load, consisting of flour, merchandise, thirty-four head of cattle and hogs, shifted to leeward. We then commenced throwing over the deck load. With considerable difficulty, got part of the hogs and cattle overboard through the gangway and by cutting away the bulwarks. Wind and sea increasing. At 12½ began to make water fast. Rigged the pumps, but could not free her. Water gaining fast. Engine kept at work until, at one o'clock, the water put out the fires.—Sea boarding her; cleared away the anchors; hove the lead but found no soundings; snowing; kept the lead going until we got seven fathoms of water. Made the land under our lee, close ahead.

We then let go the small anchor; could not get the large anchor off her bows. The small anchor would not hold her, when she immediately struck forward; her stern swung round, and the next sea carried her broadside on the rocks. After she struck, I left the promenade deck and went to the upper deck. Stood there a few minutes aft of the pilot house; then went down again on the promenade deck, where I saw Captain Jones for the last time. Then went through the cabin; saw no passengers in the cabin; went upon the hurrican deck again, aft of the wheels there found a number of the passengers and crew; I then went down on the main deck and stood in the gangway on the lee side; saw the large boat in the water, with a number of passengers in it. Cabin at this time cracking and pieces flying in every direction. I then jumped overboard and made for the boat and got into it. The first engineer had hold of the gunwale of the boat; hauled him in and also the watchman. Told the people in the boat to get out their oars and pull into the lake, which they did. A sea struck her and slewed her bows in shore. The next sea upset her.

I found that my feet touched the rocks. After a good deal of exertion among the floating timbers, portions of the cabin, freight, &c., I succeeded in getting a foot hold on the rocks.

The place that myself and others gained was formed by rocks that had fallen from overhead, forming a sort of barrier, behind which I succeeded in getting. Found some five or six already ashore. Waiting about fifteen minutes, the remainder of the survivors came ashore, making eighteen in all. It was very dark. The place where we reached was not more than twenty feet in length by five feet in width, at the foot of perpendicular rocks of the height of 150 to 200 feet, the seas sweeping at the base of the rocks on either side of us, and the water dashing up to the height of 20 feet.

With a good deal of exertion we managed to keep from freezing. At daylight we found that the boat was completely broken up, with the exception of the wheels, which were held together by the shafts and connections. They were distant from the rocks about one hundred feet. About one-third of the wheels were out of the water, on which we saw eight persons. The seas breaking over them, one after another they dropped off, and by 9 o'clock they were all washed away.

All attempts to make a fire failed; one look satisfied us that an attempt to escape was fruitless. We found the large boat thrown ashore, stove in.—We remained there from the morning of the 30th till the evening of the 31st, when we succeeded in repairing the boat, subsisting, in the mean time, on raw cabbage and raisins, with now and then a biscuit.

We took a portion of the saved in the boat, and landed them on a sand beach, about a mile and a half to the westward, then returned and got the remainder, and started for Grand Island.

The party landed on the beach started through the woods for Mr. Powell's house, on the main land and opposite the island—distance about twelve miles.

FIRE IN THIBODAUX.—The Thibodaux Minerva, of Saturday last, says:

Our town has again been the theatre of another awful conflagration, which broke out in "West End," on Tuesday evening last, at a few minutes to 8 o'clock, in the cooper shop of Mr. T. McInire, on Church street. The fire was the work of incendiaries—three of whom—one male and two female, all white, are now confined in jail on suspicion. There were six or eight buildings destroyed, owned by Mr. J. R. Van Lew, R. Oslet, Thomas McGuire and O. Conlin. No insurance.

STEAMBOAT SUNK.—A despatch from Rising Sun (Ind.) says the steamboat White Bluff, with a full load from Nashville, struck a snag, above Rising Sun, on Sunday morning, the 16th inst., and sunk on the bar opposite that town.

The Alabama State Fair.

On yesterday the Fair grounds were attended by many of the citizens of this and the adjoining States, entering for exhibition apparently every thing appertaining to the, wants or necessities of man. In the ladies' gallery may be seen silk and cotton quilts, bed spreads, coverlids, embroidery, piano covers of the value of one thousand dollars; in short, every thing useful of this department, or which can please the fancy; we noticed a magnificent silk quilt by a little girl of 12 years, which is surpassingly beautiful; also two baby quilts and two pair of stockings made by two little girls from Sumter county, one three and the other four years old. This branch of the State Fair, immediately under the control of the ladies, promises to be exceedingly full and interesting.

There was Daniel Pratt with his far famed Gins, and those by may be seen James F. Orr, of Orrville, Alabama, with with a new style of Gins, which is an improvement decidedly. New and improved Corn Mills, a Rope making machine, Shingle machine, Ploughs, and a splendid Buggy, from Griffin, Georgia, and many other articles belonging to the Agricultural, Mechanical and Manufacturing interests are there.

Those who are fond of domestic fowls may see there a variety from every quarter of the globe. The variety of fine stock is great, and the quality of stock on the grounds for exhibition has seldom, if ever, been surpassed.

There wines and cordials, jellies and preserves, hams and sides and every thing else calculated to excite the most fastidious epicure, may be seen on exhibition.—Mont. Advertiser, 14th.

WEST BATON ROUGE AND GROSS TETE RAILROAD.—The Baton Rouge Gazette, of Sunday last, says:

We are pleased to learn that two installments of the iron for the West Baton Rouge and Grosse Tete Railroad have been landed on the opposite side of the river. Our city is interested in the progress of this work, and we are glad to see evidences of a determination to push it ahead.

We learn from the Montgomery Advertiser and Gazette that the injunction granted by the Mobile city court, restraining the officers from disposing of the bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, has been dissolved by Chancellor Keyes, and that an appeal from his decision has been taken to the Supreme Court.

A NEW TELEGRAPH LINE.—A telegraph line is now in operation between Fort Gaines, Ga., and Apalachicola, Fla., and efforts are being made to extend it on to Columbus, Ga., which will unite with all the great lines in the Union. This, we believe, is the first telegraph that has been put into operation in Florida.

BEAUTIFUL MARBLE.—We noticed, says the Montgomery Journal, among the many beautiful specimens of the natural productions of Alabama, exhibited at our late State Fair, one of the handsomest articles of white marble we have ever seen. It was taken from the quarry of Doctor Edward Gant, of Syllacoga, in Talladega county. This gentleman, we are informed, is engaged extensively in the manufacture of marble, and we would recommend those who desire to purchase to examine the specimen, and give him a call.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN NATCHEZ.—The Natchez Free Trader, of Friday last, says:

Agreeable to the recommendation of the Governor of the State, yesterday was generally observed as a day of Thanksgiving, and our city presented the appearance of a Sabbath day. The stores were closed and all business suspended. There were services in all the churches, and the attendance was quite large.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN JACKSON, MISS.—The Mississippian, of Friday last, says:

Yesterday was the day appointed for thanksgiving by the Governor. Business of all kinds in Jackson was suspended, and the day was duly observed in accordance with the recommendation of His Excellency.

MR. VAN BUREN.—The Baltimore Sun, of the 18th inst., says:

Ex-President Van Buren, who was so severely injured by being thrown from a carriage on the 25th ult., is recovering. Apart from the effects of the injury he is in the enjoyment of his accustomed health.

IMPORTANT FROM KANASS.—The New York Tribune, of the 18th inst., has the following:

St. Louis, Monday, Nov. 17, 1856.—Our advices from Lawrence are to the 10th inst. Last Saturday, twenty prisoners were taken at Hickory Point, and found guilty of manslaughter. They were sentenced to five years imprisonment at hard labor.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—By the bark Gipsey, from Buenos Ayres, which arrived at New York, Nov. 17th, we have advices to the 27th of September. The British Packet of Sept. 13th, says "that "the misunderstanding between the Confederate Provinces and the Republic of Paraguary, has at last been brought to an amicable termination, by what is technically styled a 'treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation,' but might with equal and perhaps greater propriety be called a reconciliation of the estranged members of a common family.

Among the recent deaths in the city of New York is one bearing an honored and revolutionary name—Ann Jay, daughter of the late John Jay; departed this life on the 3d inst., at the age of seventy-three.

A Fearful Accident.

The Savannah Georgian, of Thursday last, says:

A wedding party last night, at Trinity Church, in this city, was the occasion of a lamentable casualty by which two young ladies narrowly escaped the loss of their lives. The facts, as we have learned them on reliable authority, are these:

Four or five members of the party were taken to the church in a carriage from the livery establishment of Mr. Stevens, corner of Barnard and Broughton streets. On their arrival at the church, the driver, in getting down to open the carriage door, dropped his reins on the box. The horses took fright and ran off with two ladies (Miss Thompson and Miss Saussy) in the vehicle. Wheeling around from the church, they dashed into Barnard street, and made for the stable, slackening their pace as they approached it, with the evident intention of stopping there.

Marmed, however, by the cries of persons in the streets, they again quickened their speed, running furiously up Broughton to West Broad, thence along West Broad to Margaret street. Turning down this last, the carriage was soon arrested by coming in collision with a pump, by which it was upset and smashed, when the horses became extricated. The young ladies, we rejoice to learn, though badly bruised and scratched, and one of them, seriously cut, had none of their bones broken. It is hoped they will soon recover from their injuries.

The accident is traceable entirely to the unaccountable negligence of the driver (a white man) in not holding on to his reins. He has not been heard from since its occurrence.

LOOK OUT FOR COUNTERFEITS.—We learn that there are some skillfully executed counterfeit $10 bills in circulation, on the "Central Railroad Bank" and the "Merchants' and Planters' Bank." They are executed by the Photographic process, and are likely to deceive those who are not on the lookout for them.

GINHOUSE AND COTTON BURNT.—The Jackson (Miss.) Flag of the Union learns that the ginhouse of H. E. Sizer, of that city, at his plantation on Baker's Creek, was consumed by fire on Sunday night, the 16th inst., with between forty and fifty bales of cotton. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

RESPECT TO SENATOR CLAYTON.—On Thursday, the 13th inst., at Wilmington, Del., all the bells of the city were tolled, flags suspended at half-mast, and most of the places of business closed, in respect to the memory of the late Senator Clayton, whose funeral took place on that day, at Dover. The day previous the citizens of Wilmington held a town meeting and adopted resolutions complimentary to the deceased.

THE SUGAR CROP OF IBERVILLE PARISH.—The Plaquemine Sentinel, of Saturday last, says:

We have been informed by a gentleman who has given his attention to the subject, that the sugar crop of our parish the present year, will not exceed 3,500 hogsheads, which is less by 1,500 hogsheads of being a quarter of the usual yield.

UPPER RED RIVER.—The Washington (Ark.) Telegraph, of the 12th inst., says:

Red River is at a stand at Fulton.—We have had no boat up as yet, nor do we think there is any immediate prospect for the arrival of one.

FIRE AT JACKSONVILLE, FA.—The Jacksonville News, of the 15th inst., gives the following account of the disastrous fire in that place:

A large part of the business portion of our town is again in ruins. This morning, a little before day, the fire was discovered issuing from the upper story window of the long wooden building owned by T. O. Holmes, Esq., and in a few minutes the whole building was in flames. The fire of course could not be checked so closely jammed were the buildings, and in less than an hour, the whole row known as Holmes's Row extending down to and including the store and warehouses occupied by Messrs. Bisbe & Canava, was consumed. Most of the goods we believe were saved.—The principal losers are Messrs. Bisbee & Canova, J. A. Barbee, J. B. D. Hamman, T. O. Holmes, T. McMillan, C. DeWall, Mr. Vanness, Capt. H. E. Clark, Henry E. Holmes, Mr. Lucas and Mr. Holloman. We have not learned whether there was much insurance on the property or not, but presume most of the goods were covered. The fire was beyond donbt the work of an incendiary.

UNFORTUNATE OCCURRENCE.—On Sunday night last, between 7 and 8 o'clock, an affray occurred between one Valentine Robbien and a boy named Adam Martel, aged about fifteen years, which resulted in the death of Robbien. There has been no arrest or examination, the matter being left to the action of the grand jury, which is now in session. The facts, so far as we can ascertain them, are that the boy Martel on going home for the night, was met at the door by Robbien, who, without any provocation, knocked him down with a stick, and proceeded to administer a rather serious castigation. While in this situation, underneath Robbien, he drew his pocket knife and reaching over cut him in two places, the blade penetrated the thorax and lacerated the lungs. After being cut, Robbien released the boy and went to his lodging, where he died on Monday night. A post mortem examination was held by Drs. Clark, Allen and Gray.

The parties were Germans; Robbien, who had been here but a short time, kept a cigar store next door to the Jewel. The universal opinion is that it was clearly a case of self-defence.—Shreveport Gazette 15th instant.

TELEGRAPHIC.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, Nov. 25.—The royal mail steamship Persia, from Liverpool on the afternoon of the 12th instant, has arrived off Sandy Hook.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Cotton.—Our Liverpool correspondent quotes the market as inactive, the last advices from the United States causing a depression in lower qualities, and giving the market a turn in favor of the buyer. Middling qualities, however, being scarce, have advanced 1-16d.

The sales of the week amounted to 44,000 bales, of which speculators took 5000 and exporters took 24000 bales.

The sales of Friday amounted to 6000 bales, of which 500 bales were taken by speculators and exporters.

The stock in port at Liverpool amounted to 395,000 bales, of which 208,000 bales are American.

Breadstuffs are generally inactive, and the market is slightly cheaper.

The weather has been favorable for crops.

THE MONEY MARKET.

Consols for money closed at 92¼. Money is decidedly more stringent.

The Bank of England has advanced its rates of interest to 7 per cent.

The bullion in the Bank of England has decreased £65,000.

The bullion in the Bank of France has decreased 3,000,000.

MARKETS.

New York, Nov. 22.—Cotton closed buoyant. The sales of today amounted to 1000 bales. Prices are stiffer, but quotations are unchanged.

Flour closed firm. State is quoted at $6 10 a $7. Wheat is active white is quoted at $1 67 a $1 72, red $1 50 a $1 53. Freights are firm.

FOREIGN.

The steamship City of Washington, from Liverpool, arrived at Philadelphia on the 18th inst., with dates to the 5th inst.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord Palmerston had delivered an address on education before a large assembly in the Free Trade Hall at Manchester. He also made two speeches in defence of his foreign policy.

An address had been presented to him by the President of the Chamber of Commerce, in which the following passage occurred:

"It would be doing injustice to the commercial community of Liverpool were no mention made of that question which most deeply affects it—the late difficulties or threatened difference between this country and the United States. There is, my Lord, but one expression of feeling amongst us as to the manner in which your Lordship and Her Majesty's advisers disposed of that, which at one time threatened to be a question that might involve us in a desperate contest with America. We feel, by the manner in which your lordship and Her Majesty's advisers settled that question, you not only consulted the dignity of this country, but, in spirit and in fact, satisfied all the interests concerned. My Lord, for that we feel deeply indebted to your Lordship and to Her Majesty's Government."

To this Lord Palmerston replied with considerable embarassment of manner, as follows:

"I was sure gentlemen, that the polley which we recently adopted in our differences with the United States, must meet with your approbation. We felt that while on the one hand it was necessary to maintain the dignity of the country, that it was also necessary to show that even the calamities of war with a neighboring race would be encountered, if there was a necessity for it, upon adequate grounds. We felt that while it was necessary to show this, we ought to waive all minor and party considerations, that we ought not to take advantage of circumstances which might perhaps have justified the expression of angry feelings—that it was more dignified to look at what we believed to be the friendly feelings of the great mass of the people of the United States, rather than to take too much notice of circumstances in a narrower sphere that might perhaps have justified feelings of irritation. The result has fully borne out, I think, the wisdom of that course. I am sure that in proportion as your prosperity increases, and in proportion as your enterprize is developed, in the same proportion we may look to cementing permanently those ties of friendship and good will which exist and ought to be perpetuated between the people on the two shores of the Atlantic."

FRANCE.

Rumors continue of a probable modification in the Ministry. It is said that M. de Persigney's visit to the Emperor is connected with these rumors.

The Emperor continues the revels at Compiegne, where his third and last batch of guests have just arrived, including the Ministers of Russia, Sweden and Holland, and Marshals Pellisier and Baragnay D'Hilliers.

These protracted country entertainments give offence to the Parisians, and among the placards surreptitiously posted on the walls are some headed "Le Roi Samus."

SPAIN.

A plan of finance will be laid before the council of ministers without delay.

Nothing as yet is decided as to the creation of a ministry of colonies.

The Espana, a ministerial paper, decries the Anglo-French alliance, and recommends the alliance of Spain with the Northern Powers.

The law of the press requiring a heavy deposit as surety money from editors is re-established.

ITALY.

Regarding the Neapolitan difficulties we have nothing definite. It is rumored in Paris that the King of Naples has ordered his representatives in France and England to demand their passports in case an amicable arrangement cannot be made at these courts.

COMMERCIAL.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Nov. 26, 1856.

COTTON.....We have but little change to notice in the market since our last review, excepting a restricted demand from the advance established in the freight market, and the consequent necessity of factors occasionally making slight concessions from last week's currency. The sales comprise 4500 bales on Saturday, 6000 on Monday and 8,000 yesterday, making an aggregate for the three days of 18,000 bales. The tone of the market yesterday continued low, the demand exhibiting but little animation, and the bulk of the business consisting of large lots, while prices, particularly for the lower grades, continued to rule in favor of buyers without resulting in a quotable decline.

The receipts since the 21st inst. comprise 20,998 bales, against 20,795 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 7113 (3638 to foreign ports and 3475 coastwise,) embracing 3078 to Havre, 200 to Marseilles, 750 1450 bales and 610 half bales) to Vera Cruz, 1838 to Boston and 1577 to New York, leaving on hand a stock of 281,728 bales, against 242,996 bales same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 931,432 bales against 809,925 same time last year—showing an increase of 17,507 bales. The increase at all the ports up to the latest dates reported, is 16,026 bales. (388,040 against 370,014.) Referring to our remarks as above we repeat our quotations as follows:

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Autumn leaflets gently falling
To the soil which gave them birth,
With their gorgeous colors blending
Like a rainbow dropped to earth,
Speak, in accents, sad but truthful,
Of those hopes we hold most dear,
Whispering, like the sweetest music,
Blessed thoughts the heart to cheer.

First, in vigor bright and healthful,
With their emerald beauty dressed,
Fanned by zephyrs richly laden
With the odors of the West,
Sunny skies above them bending,
Sport they all in life's young morn,
To each beauteous scene bestowing
Eden's freshness with the dawn.

Now, with vestures richly varied—
Russet, orange, green and red,
Crowning all the woods with glory
Ere they seek their mossy bed;
Thus they leave a welcome picture
As a parting gift to all,
Lest we mourn too long their absence,
Or lament their lowly fall.

One by one they droop and wither,
Touched by Autumn's chilling frost,
Till bright leaves with silver linings
Are in all their beauty lost:
Lost to sight, not dead forever—
For in memory's hall remain
Fairest landscapes fresh and fadeless,
Till glad spring shall bloom again.

So life's scenes are often changeful,
Varying with the light and shade;
Where the fairest flowers blossom
There the thorn its home hath made.
But though clouds may dim our prospects,
And our fondest hopes decay,
Brighter is the day before us,
When the night is chased away.

Like cool autumn's fading leaflets,
We must heed our final call,
When the silver cord is loosened,
And the shadows round us fall;
Then, with pure, angelic beauty,
Free from every earthly stain,
Then the soul shall find its treasures
When its spring-time comes again.

OBITUARY.

DIED—In Allenton, Wilcox Co., Alabama, on the 19th Sept., MARY M. ELDRIDGE, daughter of Robb Eldridge, Sr.; born in Buckingham Co., Va., on the 4th Sept., 1776, aged 80 years and 15 days. She joined the M. E. Church in 1806; removed from Virginia with her brother-in-law, John P. Williams, in the fall of 1846, where she lived to see buried, the following members of her family: two sisters, Martha and Courtney; her brother-in-law, John P. Williams, and nieces, Miss Pocahontas Williams.

In noticing the Christian life and character of this mother in Israel, I can only speak knowingly of the last ten years, since she lived here in Ala. During that period her pious character was not only acknowledged to be of the purest cast, but was ever regarded by saint and sinner as worthy the imitation of all. Constant and regular in all her duties; enjoyed religion all the time, and it was a general remark "If Aunt Polly (as she was called) did not get happy at church, it was a cold meeting, or a cold sermon." Religion with her was an every day's business; she made the world, its work and business subservient to a life of godliness. One thing I must mention which will illustrate more fully the character of her piety. I give it in her own words. While on her death bed, she said to me, "I have been fifty years a member of the Church, and I do not recollect ever to have failed, unless providentially hindered to attend church, to attend my class meetings, or to attend punctually to my prayers, or to fail to pay my quarterage." And this I know to be correct since she lived in this country. She delighted much in conversing about the preachers, especially the Virginia preachers; among them Bishop Early occupied in her esteem, a prominent position. It is said that the last time she saw, and heard him preach in Virginia, she got happy, and took his hand while in the pulpit preaching, when he remarked that "thirty years had he been shaking the hand of that good sister."

She once met with Dr. J. Hamilton in Selma, and heard him preach; after service she made her way to, and spoke to the Dr. and commenced conversing on religion; rather I suppose in an ecstacy. The Dr. not knowing her asked her who she was; being somewhat absent minded, or being carried off in her thoughts of the sermon he had preached, or the joy of meeting a Methodist preacher, she had forgotten her name, could not recollect it, and after an effort to get at her name, said, "I'm a Methodist, that's enough."

Truly it may be said of her, "Her conversation was in heaven." She died as she lived "full of faith and the Holy Ghost." Much more might be said of the Christian virtues of Aunt Polly, all of which would go to show that the "life she lived she lived by faith in the son of God."

A. C. RAMSEY.

OAK HILL, ALA., Nov. 12, 1856.

DIED—In Rankin Co., Miss., WILLIAM W. RILEY, in his 25th year.

The deceased had secured to himself the friendship of all who knew him. He attended a protracted meeting at Pleasant Grove in this county in the fall of 1855, at which he became concerned on the subject of religion, and then sought a fond place with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. He was shortly afterwards taken with a lingering and painful disease under which he labored until his death. For weeks before his death he was confined to his bed, and after talking with his friends of his departure from life with joy and satisfaction; and early in the morning of the day before his death he called his step mother, (but a mother in all that constitutes a mother) to his bed side and asked her what occasioned those gasps. Was it death? She told him it was; he then raised his eyes, and said, "Thank God, I hope the next will be my last." She remarked to him "that he must not be impatient, but wait the Lord's time." Yes; "but it will be so long before I shall be at rest." Shortly afterwards he called his father to his bed and with a smile, asked him "if this was death." He told him it was. He replied, "so it cannot be, I feel no pain and I am so happy." His father said to him that "it was victory." Yes! "Victory! victory!"

He then bid them farewell, and turning to his wife to whom he had been married a little more than a year, took an affectionate leave of her.

He shortly afterwards closed his eyes and seemed in a quiet sleep, and occasionally spoke of the glories of the upper world. Thus he remained until the next day when he breathed his last.

The last word was the name of Jesus.

Sweetest carol ever sung,
Sweetest note on mortal tongue
Jesus, Jesus, flow along

J. S. C.

DIED—On the 2nd of November, A. D., 1856, MRS. MARY BICKLEY, consort of Samuel Bickley and daughter of Barrock and Elizabeth Snellgrove. Sad and unwelcome is the messenger of death when he visits us in life's brightest hours. Although he is an unwelcome visitor, he is a true friend to those whose hope is in Christ, because he takes from them mortality and gives them immortality—removes them from a darksome vale of sorrows to a city whose gates are not shut at all by night, and where they need not the light of a candle, the moon or the stars, for the Lord God lighteth it. We should thank the Lord that when this tabernacle of the soul is no longer fit for its abode He takes it home where death and decay can never enter, and fashions it a body like His own.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

CLOSE TO AN ANGEL.

LET me tell the children who read this column of the Advocate about little Katy Coach. Surely all the children read this column. The Editor takes pains to make it up for them. He thinks, while putting in a piece, how their hearts will be made better by it.

A few Sundays ago I preached at Moreau-st. Church, and went home with a friend, Mr. Brewer, to dinner. Katy met me at the door, told me her name, and said she heard me preach just now. Her father is the captain of a vessel; he and her mother were at the same house. They have three children; but Katy being sickly, they took her a trip over the ocean to see if she would not get well.

"What is your name?"

"My name is Katy Coach."

"Where do you live?"

"In Newburyport, Massachussetts."

How lively she was, and loving! Auburn hair, in ringlets; bright eyes—very bright; fair skin—very fair.

Katy was hard of hearing from a spell of scarlet fever. That made me love her more, because I have a little girl, about the same age, much like her in manners, and afflicted in the same way.

She was very fond of books. She read Sunday-school books. Her infirmity made her a closer reader than otherwise she would have been. Those who do not hear well are not so distracted in attention as others. Besides, they are driven for entertainment to those silent, sweet companions—books.

In a half hour, after acquaintance, Katy was reading to me. She read well. She understood what she went over. It was about the Tabernacle made by Moses, and the Ark, and the things put in it by the command of the Lord.—You can find the substance of it in Exodus—the second book in the Bible. Also about the garments made for the priests, and how Aaron and his sons were clothed with the garments.

When she had finished reading of those things, I said;

"Now let me see if you remember what you have just read to me."

So, taking out my pencil, I made a rude drawing on the blank-leaf of her book, to represent the Tabernacle.

"What place is that?"

"The holy place."

"And that?"

"The most holy, or the holy of holies."

"What was in it?"

"The Ark of God."

Then she told what was in the Ark, and on top of it.

In another division of the Tabernacle Katy told where stood the altar of incense and the table of shew-bread, and how many loaves were on the table, and how often they were changed for fresh ones; and so forth.

I was surprized that she knew so well what she had read.

Then we got to talking about the place—Heaven—represented by the "Holy of Holies."

"How big is it?"

"Big enough to contain all the angels and the good people, and little children."

"Do you think you would go there, if you were to die?"

"I hope I would. The Lord loves me and I love the Lord."

Thinks I to myself—Katy, you'll very soon be there: you are not long for this world. Her eyes sparkled with unnatural brilliancy. She was as merry and chirping as a bird.

I left her at 4 o'clock. Katy kissed me. In thinking of her, as I walked away, I wondered how a child whom I had only known for a few hours, got so deeply into my heart.

Next day Mr. Brewer stept into the office of the Advocate, with grief on his face—

"Katy is dead! Her parents wish you to bury her."

My first thought was, O! how close to an angel, and I didn't know it! Katy is an angel! She was an angel within a few hours after I left her. That evening she was taken with convulsions, and died.

Her mother goes home to the other children, and her father sails away on the wide ocean, leaving the little body in our cemetery. Precious dust! Their hearts are grief-stricken, and, I trust, drawn up to Heaven after their child.—May her sisters be drawn there too. The oldest and wisest lead the way in this world, and the rest follow. But to heaven the youngest oftener goes first.

My thoughts ran on Katy. She described the veil which divided the holy place from the holy of holies with evident delight; thought it was very beautiful. She now has entered within the veil. The curtained glories of the spirit world are all disclosed. How much, at a glance, she sees and knows, that sages of earth have vainly searched after.—With the cherubim that stretched their wings over the golden mercy-seat, she dwells and moves and praises.

We know not when we shall die. The morning may be bright that lights us to the tomb. Why should it not be bright? Death is dreadful to none but those who do not love God.

Pray and live every day, children, as though you might die before night; and when you are near a sweet-tempered child, remember that you may be CLOSE TO AN ANGEL.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

THE lands are situated in Morehouse Parish, Louisiana, and are what is known as the "Prairie Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the south, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Mississippi rivers, and are traversed by the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction, and lead-ing to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation, the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess great advantages, and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at the residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. [jan12 1y] JAMES H. BRIGHAM.

SAW AND CORN MILLS.

PORTABLE CIRCULAR SAW MILLS,

WITH

Norcross' "Improved Rocker Boxes,"

AND

"IMPROVED HEAD BLOCKS."

The subscribers is now prepared to offer to the public Circular Saw Mills, (usually called Rigs,) with all their recent improvements since their first appearance. The Rig, now offered are made about one third stronger than those heretofore in use, and the Head Blocks by Price supposed combinations they do, all the improvements and the additional strength both on the carriage and head-work, are considered the best Millwright offered. Engines and Horse Powers suitable for these mills are furnished when required.

Norcross' Patent rollers is in our opinion the saw so fitted it can have a lateral vibrationary and, when thrown out of line, will recover itself by the retention of the dividing teeth, and the arrangement of the parts by which it is so framed while, at the same time the saw has no lateral play in its bearings and is made to fit close with the boulders to prevent the oil from getting out, while in operation. A number of great improvements when the motion is rapid as in circular saws.

J. H. BURROWS'

Patent Plantation Corn and Flouring Mills,

THE BEST NOW IN USE.

This Mill differs from all others in the construction of the Upper or Runner Stone, which is composed of French Burr Blocks, enclosed in a cast iron Case—and forms the back and bridged the Stone, with a Cast Iron Eye or Bush, that is of greater lateral draw per at the bottom than at the top, and cut to the back by four bolts, so that every block is in the form of a dovetail, which gives greater strength to a stone than any other method that is required in small Mills where the stone is run with great speed and becomes dangerous if not strongly made. It also gives any weight to a Stone of small diameter that is required, without making it thick or high.

They can be run by either Gin, Horse, Water or Steam Power, and require no Millwright to set them up.

ADVANTAGES.

1st. Sufficient weight in the Runner Stone to crush the first, without having to supply pressure on the Runner Stone from the Driving Power, as most Ordinary Mill-leave feels the loss of great importance when Horse Power is used.

2nd. When the Stone is running, its own momentum acts like the Fly Wheel of an Engine, affording regularity and speed to its motion. It a Mill does not run true and regular you cannot make good meal or flour

WEAR YOUR BEARDS.

MR. EDITOR—I was gratified in the perusal of the article of your correspondent "L." on Shaving, and will crave a corner of your paper for a short communication on the same subject.

It seems, from the prohibitory command of the Scriptures, that attempts at shaving were practised by the heathens in the time of Moses, for then the Lord commanded the Israelites not only to refrain from marking their flesh, but that they "should not mar the corners of their beard." Even the smallest corner was not to be touched.

Especially was this observed by all the pious Jews, and we find that when David's ambassadors to a foreign prince returned dishonored (i. e. shaved), he commanded them to tarry in Jericho till their beards be grown.

Every pious Nazarite permitted his beard to grow to its full size, whilst others cut or trimmed it to a comfortable length. Hence we find that Absalom polled his hair or beard once a year.

If it be objected that Joseph is said to have shaved once, we answer that it was merely trimming the beard to prevent it becoming a burden or an inconvenience, for he had then been in prison two years, and it doubtless needed cutting; and this is certainly our Scriptural duty—not to permit it to fall over our bosom no more than we allow our hair to cover our shoulders. In other words we should cut or trim the beard, but never shave it.

The beard is the distinguishing mark of the sex; it adorns, protects and ennobles man, and gives a beautiful variety to the human face; and while I dislike imperials, moustaches and whiskers, and consider them but "marrings," I hold that a full beard is dignified, graceful, and becoming.

Nor need we confine ourselves to the Old Testament, and reason for proof and arguments to wear beards. Jesus and his Apostles set us the noble example by wearing theirs; and the primitive Christians and their successors disclaimed the barbarous innovation of shaving—so much so, that one of the early fathers declares "that shaving is blasphemy against the face."

A number of years ago I was expressing my views on this subject, and while I defended Nature's noble gift for the face, all ridiculed, but one. He was a gentleman of fine taste and acquirements who spoke as follows:

"I agree with you, sir, on the propriety of wearing beards. After I graduated my father sent me off to see the world. After several years spent in the East I took a steamer amid the flowing beards of the Orientals, and when I landed at Venice and saw shaved men, I was heartily disgusted at the silly practices of my own people."

Hoping that we shall all soon return to patriarchal, Apostolic and primitive customs, and be governed in this matter again by Scripture, reason and common sense, I am, &c.,

VINDEX.

Covenant of Salt.

"And every oblation of thy meat offerings shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering; with all thine offering thou shalt offer salt." Lev. 2: 13.

"It is a covenant of salt forever before the Lord, unto thee, and to thy seed after thee." Num. 18: 19.

"Ought ye not to know that the Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to Daniel for ever, even to him and to his sons, by a covenant of salt?" 2 Carnuicle 13: 5.

An anecdote is related of Mr. Layard illustrative of this idea of using salt in a covenant, when he was passing from Bokhara, in the Upper Province of India, to the site of Ancient Nineveh. It is said that,

"On his journey down to Assyria, he had to pass through the territories of the hostile Khan, who had already taken the lives of several Englishmen, and was trying to get hold of our traveler, now roaming through his dominions. Mr. Layard knew this; and one day, while drawing near his enemies, he waited till the hour of tiffin, when they were in their tents at the forenoon meal, when putting spurs to his horse, he dashed into the midst of the hostile encampment, rushed into the chief's tent, and plunged his hand into a bowl of salt, which he immediately put into his mouth, exclaiming,

"Now I am safe!'

"Well," said the chief, "you ARE SAFE.'

"He admired the boldness and dexterity of the Englishman, but, above all, the faith thus reposed in the covenant of salt. Having tasted the chief's salt, he had now a claim, not only on his hospitality, but on his protection, and he was safely escorted on his way to the scene of his future discoveries."

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Honor, then, to whom honor is due. We call upon the Church to recognize all the noble deeds and lovely traits that humanity displays. We call upon her to concede their existence, not grudgingly, and with suspicion, but cordially and thankfully, as the providence of God, and the benefit of man. We summon nature's noblemen to look upon his own virtues, and take their fullest gauge. We will exult in his princely honors. He shall feel that we at least are willing to take his virtues for what they are.

If then, with a filial reverence and sorrow, we should express to the amiable and honored moralist, a fear in his behalf, we have a claim upon him for a manly candor and a generous forbearance, as he has a claim on us for careful consideration of his dearest honors. We shall not blame him in that he shrinks from the sense of shame; nor will we attribute this to the depravity which we lament. Self-respect is not pride; and humility, even in its Scriptural spirituality, implies no insensibility to the degradation of moral pollution, nor a tame and apathetic submission to the charge of vileness. Humility, indeed, is willing to abide wherever the will of God may place us; but, conscious that moral depravity is not of his appointment; but a desecration of his purposes, humility can but feel the brand of guilt an insult if it be false, and a bitter humiliation if it be true. God, who made us in His image, has his own felicity in conscious holiness, and seeks a "hallowed name;" and that deep sense of the worth and glory of moral excellence, is the essential mould in which every virtue is to be cast—the base and socket, from which every column of moral beauty rears its majestic form. It is not all of pride, therefore, that a generous spirit should shrink from the consciousness of sin, or struggle against the conviction of his guilt: it is the voice of his indestructible nature, against the sin itself. And he who has no sympathy with that unwilling and astonished soul; he who can lightly avow his own depravity, or affix the stigma on a fellow-man—he has never yet been made to realize the "shamefulness of sin," nor felt how godlike is God's image.

Yet, humiliating as is the consciousness of debased affections, there is still that which amid the wreck has somewhat of dignity, and whose loss were a deeper degradation still. Whatsoever we are, and whatever may await us, we need not be deceived as to our character or our fate, and add to the guilt of a transgressor the imbecility of a dupe. A manly spirit, even where ignorance is bliss, will choose the woe of knowledge. That is indeed a pitiable weakness, which fears, to face reality, and yields itself to be cajoled by a lie. Cowardice, as the strained vessel plunges like a dying monster, may break into the spirit-room, and drown all sense of danger in blank stupor, or in maniac exhilaration; but Manliness and Reason stand upon the bow, and watch the nearing breakers on the reef of doom. It was a splendid dignity which graced the Roman senate, when, as the barbaric hordes entered the very gates of the eternal city, the conscript fathers, smitten by no panic of useless flight, and roused to no frenzy of vain resistance, listened in calm silence in their curule chairs to the roar of approaching vengeance, and struck Destruction as it burst into the Capitol, with momentary awe. If the weak and the ignorant brand us, we may let it pass unheeded in our conscious worth. But if an oracle that cannot err denounce our doom, let us not stop our ears, nor resent the threatening. Let us hear it all, and weigh each separate charge, and make our strongest plea, and yield our hopes of refuge calmly, if we must, and realize each coming woe, and meet it at least unsurprized. We need not lose all manliness, though godliness be gone. Let us be honest with ourselves; let us know the truth, even though the searching light reveal every virtue and affection of the soul prostrate in the dust, and Jerusalem "become a heap," and the abomination of desolation stand in the holy place forever! Much more: let us know the worst, and feel it, when amid the lingering echoes of the prophecy that blasted, a voice of promise whispers of returning grace, and a rebuilded glory.—National Goodness, (Mercein)

Old Age.

The neglected portion of the great American family is old age, we are sorry to say, not that we as, a nation, are disrespectful to the old, or that they are denied or grudged anything. We perform the negative duty to them by avoiding all which shall occasion to them offence or deprivation, but we do not perform the duty of assiduously seeing that they occupy, always and only, the places of honor and prominence; nor, more particularly do we study to contrive, unthingly and affectionately, how to comfort, cheer, strengthen and recuperate them. The old man in one house may have his chair in the drawing-room, and his place at the table, and be listened to when he speaks, and obeyed when he commands. But in another house he will have his easy-chair cushioned and pillowed, and his arm-chair at the table, and the cook will be busied most with what will newly nourish or refresh his most delicate appetite; while all listen first to his words, and address conversation to him as a centre, and eagerly seek for his commands as an authority. This (we assure the reader, from our own well-weighed observation in both countries) is a fair picture between age in America and old age in England. We have been sad to admit this to the commenting traveler. It is an unconscious fault in our country, an oversight of our life too busy, our attention too overtasked, and our plans of home and pleasure too unsettled and immature, but the feeling for the better things is in use, and time will bring this feeling into action.—*N. The Loss of a Wife.

No man but one who has been called upon to mourn the loss of a dear and beloved companion, can fully appreciate the beauty and truthfulness of the following article, which we copy from an exchange:

"In comparison with the loss of a wife all other bereavements are trifling. The wife! she who fills so large a space in the domestic heaven; she who busied herself so unwearedly for the precious ones around her: bitter, bitter is the tear that falls upon her cold clay! You stand beside her coffin and think of the past. It seems an amber-colored pathway, where the sun shone on beautiful flowers, and the stars hung glittering over head. Pain would the soul linger there—no thorns are remembered save those your hands may unwillingly have planted. Her noble, tender heart lies open to your inmost sight. You think of her now as all gentleness, all beauty, all purity. But she is dead! The dear head that has lain upon your bosom rests in the still darkness upon a pillow of clay. The hands that have ministered so untiringly are folded, white and cold, beneath the gloomy portals. The heart whose every beat measured an eternity of love lies under your feet. The flowers she lent over in smiles bend now above her in tears, shaking the dew from their petals, that the virdue around her may be kept green and beautiful."

Frightful Death by a Lion.

On Friday morning, the 13th of June, several wagons, forming part of the second division of the commander, left Mod River Dorp for the lager at Marjko. They rode the first evening as far as Rict Sprnit, a noted place for lions. Mr. Phillip VanColler and his brother wishing to proceed, inspanned their wagons about midnight, although they were strongly advised by their companions not to ride before morning. They had scarcely ridden an hour when the oxen were suddenly frightened. Phillip Van Coller jumped off his wagon and endeavored to turn them, but not succeeding in doing so, sprang upon the wagon trap, from which he must have been immediately dragged by a large lion with such force as to break one of the trap rims. He was heard to cry out for help twice, but in the confusion of the moment, was not missed, his brother Adolphe being busy at the time on horseback, endeavoring to stop the oxen, which were going at a fearful rate through the field. With much difficulty he succeeded in doing so, and then returned to look for his missing brother, whose body he found about daybreak, and the lion crouching about twelve yards from it. With a feeling of desperation he levelled his gun and fired at the animal. The aim was good, and as the ball passed right through its head, it fell down on the spot. On coming nearer to his brother's body, the poor man was sadly shocked at its mutilated condition, the lion having carried it a long distance, and then devoured the greater portion. The remains were hastily conveyed to town and upwards of eighty persons attended the funeral. Poor Phillip VanColler leaves a widow and several children to deplore their loss and his melancholy end.

P. S.—We have since learnt that, previous to the oxen becoming frightened, the lion first attacked, without any provocation, Adolphe Van Coller and three other men who were riding on horseback some distance in front of the wagon. Having, unfortunately, no guns with them, they jumped off their horses and stood between them and the lion. The lion, however, appeared more anxious to attack them than the horses, on which they shouted and threw their hats at him, and, afterwards fired the grass, when he left them and went to the wagon. The surrounding country being all occupied, the lions appear to have concentrated themselves at this spot, where they are extremely bold!—Cape of Good Hope paper, June 23.

One-Tenth of a Second From Death.

It will be remembered that the Rev. Mr. Sellwood, of the Episcopal Church, missionary to Oregon, was in the Panama massacre, and reported among the dead. In a letter just received from him, he says that he received four wounds, and is disfigured for life. His narrow escape from death is thus described:

After I had recovered, and previous to leaving the Hospital, one of my medical attendants said to me; "I look upon your escape as a miracle; that the ball passed so near the heart, that it must have passed at the instant of its contraction, for if it had passed at its expansion, you must have been killed: Just one-tenth of a second made all the difference in your case between life and death."

THE GOOD OF ILL FORTUNE.—Franklin used to say, to be thrown upon one's resources is to be cast in the very lap of fortune; for our faculties then undergo a development and display an energy of which they were previously unsusceptible.

God will bless your endeavors, not your idleness.—Bridges.

CITY AGAINST COUNTRY.

The removal of Dr. Neville from the parish of St. Thomas, in New York, to that of St. Thomas, Taunton, is one which we cannot pass by with an ordinary notice. At a period when most clergymen, if not seeking, are really responding to calls to metropolitan fields, this eminent minister, with pulpit and pastoral gifts which have been rarely surpassed, leaves, in the meridian of his strength, a commanding city parish, where his popularity is at its height, and retires to the same village congregation in which, years back, his ministerial labors began. The sight is a rare one, when contrasted with the usual tendency of clerical migrations. And it is one which for this very reason we are glad to pause one moment to consider.

There is, we cannot but help thinking, an entirely false view now prevalent among the clergy as to the comparative usefulness of a city and of rural or semi-rural parishes. To what an extent preferences for the city over the country exists, is manifest from the way in which the clergy lists of all our large cities are crowded, as well as from the fact, to which such an instance as we now record is almost the sole exception, that the movement to the metropolis is considered a sort of promotion, which few or none can be found to resist. Now it is just because we think it not to be a promotion, that we bring the subject now before our readers.

If the observations be correct of those who watch from inside—from the pew rather than from the pulpit—there is no post which a clergyman should more reluctantly assume than the rectorship of what is called a fashionable city congregation. Unless a man possesses tact the most discriminating, genius the most unquestioned, devotion to the cause of Christ the most single, and courage the most indomitable, he will be crushed by that hard and remorseless wordliness which in such congregations is so rife. For congregations of this class too often unite together, not that they should be preached to faithfully, but that they should not. They are formed, at least in part, of families who in passing to a new and commanding part of the city feel that to an imposing house, and to splendid furniture, a pew in an Episcopal Church is an essential accompaniment. In this pew they are just as unwilling to be disturbed by a rude knock at the conscience as in their mansions they are by what they consider vulgar acquaintances at the front door. They think of being religious in the future; at present their main aim is to be comfortable and genteel. Hence, they have always a shield of one kind or another lifted to ward off the darts which the minister is aiming at them from the pulpit. One of these shields is a frivolous dislike to his person. Little peculiarities are seized upon and magnified so as to give an excuse for resolutely shutting to him the ear. Then, if he be faithful, a party cry may be raised against his doctrine. Or, what is much more common, he is resisted with a dull and easy indifference which interposes its adipose layers in the way of the javelin of conscience to such an extent as to keep it from ever reaching the vitals.

Now, how does this affect the minister? Obviously it greatly deadens and chills him. Sometimes he himself becomes affected by the same contagion, and is in his turn afraid that he may be trying to convert the people too hurriedly. His evangelization becomes curvilineal, not direct. Gradually, he himself becomes alarmed at Calvinism, or Methodism, or Revivalism, or whatever may be the particular form of earnestness to which he may be constitutionally the most opposed. And in the end, the ice inside the refrigerator becomes as solid as the ice without.

There are other difficulties which are incidental to the constitution of large city rectorship which we cannot here pass over. One of these is committeeships. The man who has enough legitimate duty to absorb twice his time, is called off to preside at this Society or that, and to serve on half a dozen committees on subjects secular and political. The result is that the pastoral office is extinguished, because there is no time for its discharge. Powerful orators the metropolitan rectors may indeed be, but it becomes out of their power to obtain that hold on their people which pastoral intimacy alone can give. The consequence is that in a few years, when his pulpit powers decay, the minister who thus loses the pastor in the preacher is cast away by his people. There are few sights more melancholy than that of the city minister whose elocution is waning, or whose style once popular, has lost those charms which are required to retain the attention of the volatile. And there are few contrasts more impressive than that between the declining years of such a man, and those of him whose life, in less artificial states of society, has been devoted to the nurture of a flock that has gone along with him through his ministerial life—whose members he may have baptised in infancy, blessed in marriage, or followed to the grave. And when old age comes, those to whom he has been faithful are faithful to him; love, spent on them individually is not lost but is returned; and when at last he goes to his own grave, he is followed as a dear father, and not as an alien and stranger.—Episcopal Recorder.

Effectual Preaching.

We received the following from a distinguished minister, and commend it most sincerely to the attention of all ministers, but especially those who are trembled with anxiety in regard to the success of their pulpit labors:

"In preparing for the pulpit I have sometimes desired that my sermon should be a good one, rather than that it should bring sinners to Christ; and have labored more to give it this quality than I have prayed for the Divine blessing to give it success. I must avoid this error, for without God's grace what will human efforts avail towards saving souls?

"I now see that I have relied too much on the simple power of truth to convert sinners, and too little on the influences of the Holy Spirit to give effect to that truth; hence my sermons have often been addressed to the intellect, rather than the heart. It has followed that I have not expected nor enjoyed the presence of that Spirit in the act of preaching. What is Divine truth but 'the sword of the Spirit?' In preaching I have not generally looked for immediate results in the way of conversions, but have endeavored to satisfy myself that I was sowing seed that, at some time, would produce a harvest; but if God is always willing to save sinners, and if the preaching of the Gospel is his chosen instrument for this purpose, why might I not always have looked for immediate results?

"When I had done what I could, both in my study and in my pulpit, I have not been, as I now think, anxious as I should to see the fruits of my preaching; and, therefore, have not followed my public labors with much earnest closet prayer. I must avoid this error. How can I expect God to give me success if I do not ask it?"

Non-Suiting a Creditor.

There was a lawyer in Cape Cod, a long time ago, a man well to do in the world, and, what was surprising, averse to incur litigation. One day a client came to him in a violent rage.

"Look a here, Squire," said he, "that shoemaker down to the Pigeon Grove has gone and sued me for the money for a pair of boots I owed him."

"Did the boots suit you?"

"Oh yes."

"Well, then, you owe him the money honestly."

"Course."

"Well, why don't you pay him?"

"Why, cause the anold went and sued me, and I want to keep him out of his money if I kin."

"It will cost you something."

"I don't care for that. How much do you want to go on with?"

"Oh, ten dollars will do."

"Is that all? Well here's an X, to go ahead," and the client went off very well satisfied with the beginning.

"Our lawyer next called on the shoemaker, and asked him what he meant by instituting legal proceedings against M.

"Why," said he, "I knew he was able to pay, and I was determined to make him. That's the long and the short of it."

"Well," said the lawyer, "he's always been a good customer to you; I think you acted too hastily. There's a trifle to pay on account of your proceedings, but I think you had better take these five dollars and call it square."

"Certainly, Squire, if you say so, and glad to get it," was the answer.

So the lawyer forked over the V and kept the other. In a few days his client came along and asked him how he got on with his case.

"Rapidly," cried the lawyer; "we've nonsuited him! He'll never trouble you."

"You don't say so! that's great! I'd rather gin fifty dollars than had him got the money for them boots!"

Action of Sugar upon the Teeth.

The Charleston (South Carolina) Medical Journal states that M. Latez, in the course of his investigations on the teeth, arrived at the following conclusions:

"First. Refined sugar, from either cane or beets, is injurious to healthy teeth, either by immediate contact with these organs or by the gas developed, owing to its stoppage in the stomach.

"Second. If a tooth is macerated in a saturated solution of sugar, it is so much altered in the chemical composition that it becomes gelatinous, and its enamel opaque, spongy, and easily broken.

"Third. This modification is due, not to free acid, but to a tendency of sugar to combine with the calcareous basis of the tooth.

The foregoing conclusions are correct, and candies and condiments should be avoided. They should be kept from children especially. It is well known that maple sugar renders the teeth tender and sensitive.—Scientific American.

A WITTY PLAYER.—A celebrated comedian arranged with his grocer, one Berry, to pay him quarterly; but the grocer sent in his account long before the quarter was due. The comedian, in great wrath, called upon the grocer, and, laboring under the impression that his credit was doubted, said: "I say, here's a pretty mul, Berry; you have sent in your bill, Berry, before it was due, Berry. Your father, the elder Berry, would not have been such a goose, Berry; but you need not look black, Berry, for I don't care a straw, Berry, and I shan't pay you till Christmas, Berry."—Anglo-Saxon

From the London Record.

THE SIN OF COVETOUSNESS.

MR. EDITOR.—I have long been of opinion that the sin of covetousness is, in point of Christian morals, generally overlooked by preachers, of all classes.

There is no one of our Lord's injunctions which speaks in a plainer or more explicit tone than this: "*Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth; * * but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.*" I have heard hundreds of sermons from preachers of the gospel upon other sayings of our Lord, but I never heard a single discourse upon this. By this general silence I learn that, in the opinion of Christian ministers generally, this particular injunction of our Lord, among the English people, is not needed. Some passing allusion, or brief reference to it, I have occasionally heard, but coupled with such explanations and qualifications as went to show that our Lord did not really mean what his words seem to imply.

The apostles followed their Master.—Paul, in all his epistles, denounces covetousness as a kindred sin to uncleanness or idolatry. John, Peter, and James, all use the strongest language. "Filthy lucre" is a common expression with them. The abhorrence which they seem to feel is a feeling which is very rarely met with among modern Christians.—Yet, if we saw things in the light of heaven, we should feel the same disgust at this "filth" as they did, "hating even the garment spotted by the flesh."

The apostles never wrote an epistle without denouncing covetousness.—When do we hear like denunciations now? I mean not that every preacher, under all circumstances, should denounce the love of money. In some congregations, cautions against petty dishonesties would be more in place; but among prosperous people continual warnings against the love of money are needed. When do we hear such? In my whole life I have never heard one faithful sermon of this kind!

One of your correspondents seems to imagine that the accumulation of money is a good thing. But our Lord teaches it is a bad thing—an unwise thing—a foolish thing. He explains to us that it is not prudent. Treasures laid up on earth are in an insecure place; they cannot be safely kept. Lay them up in heaven, he counsels, for there they will be safe.

How constantly do we see this warning realized! Thirty years ago I had a neighbor who, in his last annual inventory, summed up his possessions to a total of $3,750,000. He felicitated himself on his wealth; and when he died his neighbors admired the pile of gold which he had left behind.

Where is it now? Three connexions divided it among them. Two of these have already failed in business, and of them disgracefully. The third is still in good circumstances, but the problem of success is yet to be solved, and, in one respect, it is still very doubtful.—But half a million out of the three-quarters has been already lost.

On the other hand, had a Christian man laid out in faith, $3,000,000 of it on Christian objects, what a treasure in heaven might he have laid up!

There was a world of practical wisdom in the epitaph which one of old wrote for himself:

"What I gave, that I have:
What I spent, that I had:
What I left, that I lost."

Surely, this is the practical truth, which Satan strives to prevent us from seeing. If God has given me the means, I may take a journey to the Lakes, or to Switzerland, and may improve my health, delight my eyes, and gain profitable knowledge and some devotional meditation. I can look back on $100 or $150 so spent as not unwisely employed. Still better, if $300 has been given to employ a city missionary, or to educate six poor Hindoos. Here the bread cast upon the waters may be found after many days. "What I spent, that I had: what I gave, that I have."

But what if the $150 or the $300 has been invested? What if the treasure has been laid up on earth, contrary to our Lord's advice? Why, then, a day will come in which I must lose it.

The wisdom of the children of this world is great, up to a certain point.—But, at that point, it becomes the greatest folly. Few men, if any, will deny that this life is a journey; that we occupy the body as a vessel, which is carrying us to a land where we shall dwell forever. Yet, if this be so, what sort of conduct is it, in beings calling themselves rational, to collect together a heap of treasure, in or about the vessel, knowing that when they land they must leave their hoard behind; and to take no care to send any treasure before them into that land in which they are going to live. Supposing, as we must suppose, that souls are conscious after the death of the body—what must be the feelings of that man whose whole soul has been wrapped up in his hoards for fifty or sixty years, and who suddenly finds, as he steps out of the vessel on the shores of the eternal world, that he is penniless; for that treasure, which he has spent a life in accumulating, has been left behind! The vessel has sailed away, his treasure was in it, and he stands upon the shore of that land where he must dwell for ever, without a single farthing! "What I left that I lost!"

No, our Lord's counsel was not merely figurative, or romantic, or exaggerated. It was plain, sound common sense. And so men regard it in worldly things. If a man has determined to dwell for the rest of his life in Australia, he remits, before he starts, the bulk of his property to that country, in order that when he reaches it he may find house and home and substance ready for him. Our Lord plainly teaches those who have wealth to take a similar course. "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." YOURS, SIR, &c., PRUDENS.

The Zulu Women.

An African correspondent says—"The labor of digging, planting, harvesting, getting fire-wood, drawing water, grinding, cooking, care of the children, indeed, all the hardest of the work among the Zulus, is performed by the women. The men build the huts and fences, milk and take care of the cows, watch the gardens, and drive away the birds and wild pigs, hunt, lounge, and drink beer, and this is pretty much the extent of their employment; but the degraded women work from morning till night, and if one of them shows any symptoms of laziness, she is sure of a beating from her unmerciful husband, who gives as a reason for his conduct, 'I paid too many cows for you to let you remain idle; you shall work and pay me by your labor all which I paid for you.' I have often seen a native woman digging without cessation from morning till night with her heavy pick (native hoe) in the hard hillside, having an infant suspended in a leather sack on her back; and after her day's work, she would return home with a large bundle of fire-wood on her back. It is no uncommon sight to see a company of native women going into Pietermaritzburg, or D'Urban, from their Kraals in the country, distant thirty miles, each carrying on their head a basket of Indian corn, holding little less than a bushel. A man, usually the husband, leads this company, gives orders when to rest and when to march, carrying himself only his shield and spears; and when they reach the market, he greedily takes the money, with which he pays the government tax, or buys cows, and with them augments the number of his wives. The Zulu women are so severely beaten for laziness and unfaithfulness to their husbands that they run away and attach themselves to other men at a great distance. But if they are found they are most cruelly treated.

Writing for Newspapers.

The columns of a Newspaper present to the well qualified writer, one of the finest fields for usefulness; a field to enter which, should be a matter of intense desire. To write well for a newspaper, however, is no easy task. But very few can do it. It requires knowledge, judgement, taste and practice.—The American Presbyterian speaks thus on the subject:

"As a general rule, short pieces are best liked. A gentleman in a bank once told us when we asked him to subscribe for a certain Quarterly Review, 'Read a Review—why I never read anything longer than a telegraphic dispatch!—But I will take it and send it to my brother, who is a minister in the country.' The public like a short article when it is a condonsation.

"This introduces a second idea. An article to be printed should absolutely have something in it. If professed argument, it should be conclusive; if pathetic, it should moisten the eyes; if an anecdote, it should have a sharp point; if philosophy, it should go to the primitive race; if practical, it should go like an arrow to its work; if spiritual, it should awe the soul that reads it.

"A good newspaper style is not as easy as it seems. Its Scylla lies on the side of attempting a popular manner, and succeeding only in being more familiar than a man ought to be at his own table, or degenerating into slang, or becoming very childish. Its Charybdis yawns for those who, shunning Scylla, are determined to have real thought, pith, and value in their writing, and so become too learned, or profound, or imaginative, or philosophical for any but scholars or highly cultivated people.—*Presb. Beautiful Answer.

Those who have had much intercourse with children, cannot fail to have remarked with what simplicity they frequently put questions, which even those of mature years and extensive knowledge are puzzled to answer. The following is one of those questions, with an admirable answer. A child said to his parent, "Father, where does God get the color to make the cherries so beautiful and red?" "My child," says the father, "I will tell you as soon as I have been informed how he tinged all the leaves so beautiful a green."

TRUTH.—"It requires all our learning," said Archbishop Usher, "to make truth simple."

THINGS TO BE SOUGHT.—Four things a Christian should especially labor after, viz: to be humble and thankful, watchful and cheerful.

AMBITION.—The road ambition travels is too crooked for love or friendship, too rugged for honesty, and too dark for science.

Faith is like the wing of an angel soaring up to heaven, and bears our prayers to the throne of God.

God's faithfulness performed what his mercy promised.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DEC. 6, 1856.

TRACT CAUSE.—Rev. R. J. Harp, President of the Conf. Tract Society, and, at this time, acting agent, spent last Sabbath with us, and presented the claims of this cause to two of our Methodist congregations, realizing from collections rather over $300. Bro. Harp has quite an extensive depot of tract publications at Waterproof; also, a large number of the works issued by the publishing house. Preachers and people are invited to send their orders to him. This depot will, probably, be transferred to New Orleans in February.

MISTAKE.—Last week, in our notice of Thanksgiving Day, the wrong date was given: it is not the 10th, but the 18th instant.

REV. J. E. COBB.

This gentleman, late editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate, and member of the Arkansas Conference, has been transferred to the St. Louis Conference, and stationed at Lexington. We congratulate him on his escape from the tripod to the pastorate. The St. Louis Christian Advocate says:

It will be remembered that at the last session of the St. Louis Conference, Lexington Station was left to be supplied. A letter just received from Rev. James E. Cobb, of the Arkansas Conference, late editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate, announces that he has been regularly transferred to this Conference, and appointed to the charge of that Station, and will, providence permitting, be at his post at no very distant day.

We take this opportunity to congratulate the people of Lexington on the prospect of having their pulpit supplied by one who has proven himself to be a sound Methodist, and an indefatigable laborer, and we congratulate ourself and the other members of the Conference on this accession to our ranks.

Bro. Cobb is a good man, and has proven himself to be an able writer; one who knows and loves the Methodist doctrine and Discipline.

We bespeak for him and his little family "a brother's hand and a brother's welcome" among the good people of Lexington, and also among the members of the Conference and preachers, and people generally.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

THE BIBLE IN THE WORKSHOP; OR, CHRISTIANITY AND FRIEND OF LABOR. By Rev. John W. Meers. New York: C. Scribner. For sale by A. Mygatt & Co., Camp-street, N. O.

The title-page leads us quickly and truly into the very heart of the book. Clear, large type; 344 pages; and judiciously chaptered for the night and morning reader. It is such a book as the working and the busy man ought to read. At this writing we have finished the fourth chapter with growing interest. The place where we looked for "dead flies," is remarkably conservative, considering the author's stand-point. In these times it is refreshing to read such sentiments as the following from an avowed anti-slavery man: "The institution (of domestic slavery, was never directly attacked; was, in fact, tolerated; was never directly interfered with by the Christian writers, except to ameliorate the condition of the slave in his existing relation." On p. 321, we find this foot-note: "There are several features of modern slavery which greatly relieve its odious character, and put it in able contrast with that of ancient classical civilization. Modern slavery, in this New World, seems to have sprung from an actual and a pressing need of laborers, and not from a disposition to shift the burden from indolent shoulders; a love of luxury and a contempt for labor seem not to have called it into existence and are not the chief causes of its continuance; its subjects are true inferiors, such as are elevated by contact with their masters, and philanthropy itself is puzzled to choose between the starving, thriftless free negro, and his well-fed brother in slavery."

Messrs. Mygatt & Co., of Camp-street, have laid upon our table, from the house of Chas. Scribner, a handsome volume, with the taking title of "Jesus upon Earth." The writer says the work was suggested by the necessities of an infant S. S. class, of which the author was, for several years a teacher. It is designed to give a connected narrative of the every-day life of Jesus upon earth, expressed in terms adapted to the understanding and tastes of children.

The Edinburgh Review and the Westminster, for October, received from Leonard, Scott, & Co. Good numbers.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., Nov. 27, 1856.

LEAVING New Orleans at six o'clock, Monday morning, by the G. N. and J. R. R., I reached this, the seat of the Mississippi Annual Conference, on yesterday. Koscinsko is court house village of Attala county, in a hilly region. It is a small and hospitable village, and quite in the run of ecclesiastical meetings. Last year the Presbyterian Synod was held here; this year the Methodist Conference; next year the Baptist Conference; The Great Northern Railroad is to run within three miles of this place.

I came by Railroad to Summit—without running over any cows, which is counted the best luck of the season. The passenger cars stop at the Magnolia, 98 miles from New Orleans; but the locomotive, with an open platform car, takes passengers about ten miles further, to Summit. We arrived there by 11½ o'clock, and after dinner took stage for Jackson, Miss., ninety miles distant. On Railroad we pay three cents per mile; on a rooty, pineywoods road, ten cents. But staging is old fashioned, has varieties and is pleasant. Twenty-two miles, and we are at Brookhaven, following the line marked out for the Great Northern. Here we sup, and what a feast for jolting and fasting men! The landlord called in passengers and boarders to a table spread in neatness, and furnished richly, and to my pleasant astonishment lifted his hand, bowed his head and asked a blessing on the meal. A true, godly man who will not consent to be crowded out of his place as head of his house, by strangers. Fit is he to be head of a house, whose store God has blessed.

Bro. Whitworth made himself known to me during the evening—reads the Advocate—is a Methodist—invited me into his parlor and introduced me to his family. His agreeable daughter played a tune and gave us a religious song to the piano. The stage driver was coaxed out of being in a great hurry—and altogether I found Brookhaven to be a green spot.

A night in the stage, and by 11 o'clock next morning we are in the Capitol of Mississippi. People along the road are busy. A contractor was, for the first twenty miles, a fellow passenger in the coach. Such internal improvements set all the capital in the neighborhood into productive activity. Getting out ties was all the go. It takes about 1100 of these to a mile. This piece of timber is nine feet long, and six inches depth of heart—pine. The company pay 32 and 33 cents a piece for these ties, delivered on the track. A "hand" can get out ten or fifteen ties a day.

Jackson was getting astir for the meeting of the legislature. We wait here till 4½ P. M. for the coming in of the Vicksburg train; then leave on the cars to Canton, 25 miles distant. This is a fine track, and we whirl along. The depot, after the heavy rains, was under water. Water, water all about. A buggy from the Pearce House saved me from wading a full quarter, much of it ankle deep. Here the excellent refreshments for way-faring men, which I have on a former occasion proved and approved, are done justice to, by a hungry score.

"I expect," said a New York dry goods clerk, on the look out for customers—"I expect the Methodist preachers have taken up all the buggies, hacks and stages in town." This I found to be nearly true. A company with Bishop Pierce had left that morning (Tuesday) for Kosciusko—forty-five miles. I hastened to secure a seat in the stage, leaving in a few minutes. But the extra means had been so run upon, that, as it happens in other things often, the ordinary means of transportation were not crowded. A snug coach, with brothers Campbell, Dew and Thornton for companions, was at my service. A dark night—rain! rain!! rain!!! Creeks up—bridges doubtful. By sun-rise we overtook the Bishop's carriage, sixteen miles short of their destination—water bound. The carriages must go round and head the stream. The Bishop logged the stream, took horse, but the elements were too strong for him. He did not reach the Conference in time to open or preside over the morning session.

The Conference opened Wednesday morning 26th ult.; Rev. J. G. Jones was appointed President, Rev. W. H. Watkins, Secretary, and H. J. Harris, assistant Secretary. The main body of the Conference arrived during the afternoon. The preachers seem to have good health and are bringing up good reports. The venerable J. I. E. Bird and Peter James are present. They are enjoying a green old age. Among the patriarchs, Hardy Mullins deserves a mention and a place. His long, flowing white beard would grace a synagogue. Old doctor Light (for there is a young doctor) is among the men that were and are.

Rev. F. A. Owen is blandly doing that not very bland work—collecting debts due the Conference. He looks in the best health, and has had a long tour.

This is my first sight of Bishop Pierce in the chair of an annual Conference. Accompanied by his little nephew, he is finishing up calculations round that will be productive of more of his racy notes. His voice is the only part of him that complains; it is hoarse. The people have no mercy on him and he has none on himself. He leaves a wake behind him that does not close up soon. His deportment is at once easy and dignified. He keeps the Conference in a pleasant mood, while now and then putting in a very tight remark. His manner is short without abruptness. He shuts off a rambling, irrelevant debate capitally.

A considerable number of recommendations for the traveling convention is on hand. Several have been declined. Up to this time the admissions and re-admissions, stand thus:

RE-ADMITTED—Lewis A. Sims, Benjamin Jones, Wm. Price.

ADMITTED ON TRIAL—Richard T. Henningtton, James McNabb, Wallace W. Graves, Thos. C. Raynor, Vernon H. Johnston, Hervey Copeland, Wm. H. Scalet, Wm. H. Mullins, Richard Abbey, Jno. W. Jones, Albert Becton.

WITHDRAWN—Calvin McGuffio (gone to the Episcopalians.)

DISCONTINUED—Benjamin Avent, Leander Cately (on account of ill health.) Thos. McGraw (at his own request,) John J. Millsaps (ditto) Jeptha S. Collins (do.)

ADMITTED INTO FULL CONNECTION—W. S. Townsend, Wm. B. Johnston, D. W. Dillahay, Whitfield Harrington, H. D. Berry, J. J. Wheat, Elisha B. Mullins, James S. Harris, Nov. 28th, 1856.

Bishop Pierce was careful in his address to the class about to be received into full connection, to call for volunteers to Foreign Missions, if any profess themselves willing, their names as discipline directs, are to be put on a list and held for required service.

This Conference is now quite large—stationing over a hundred preachers. There are nine Joneses in it and four of them Johns.

The weather continues bad, so that the religious meetings are thinly attended, and likely to be.

Dr. Hamilton, Tract Secretary, arrived to day.

From the reports of Stewards, now being brought in, I should judge the preachers had been well supported the year past. The widows and necessitous not likely to fair so well.

I will drop a line before leaving here for Alabama Conference.

NEW BOOKS.

BY THE BOOK EDITOR.

A MOTHER'S PORTRAIT: being a Memorial of Filial Affection; with Sketches of Wesleyan Life and of Religious Services: in Letters to a Younger Sister. Especially intended for the Youth of Methodism. By the Rev. Frederick J. Jobson. Illustrated by Twenty Engravings, from Original Pictures by J. Smetham and F. J. Jobson. Revised by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen.

The author of this beautiful biography is favorably known in the United States as a minister of the British Wesleyan Conference, having visited this country as a representative of that body, with Dr. Hannah, in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held at Indianapolis, during the present year. Mr. Jobson is a man of generous, benevolent and catholic spirit—of artistic tastes and capacities, as well as scholarly acquirements and habits—a most excellent, devoted and successful minister of the Lord Jesus—just what one might expect him to be, knowing his parentage. The Son has drawn the Portrait of the Mother in a masterly manner; and well did she deserve this memento of filial affection. Mrs. Jobson was a fine specimen of the woman of Wesleyan Methodism. Her character cannot be surveyed without admiration—we would hopefully think, not without imitation too. By an ingenious method, without diverting attention from his Mother's Portrait, the author has given us a truthful and attractive picture of Methodism, with descriptions of persons and places connected with its history. Some of the engravings—all of which are faithfully reproduced by our artist—are from designs by Mr. Jobson, who has several times visited the continent of Europe, particularly Switzerland, for the purpose of sketching its peerless lake and mountain scenery. The edition is an extract reprint of a copy of the original work, bearing the autograph of Mr. Jobson, by whom it was presented to our excellent friend, the Rev. Dr. Sargent, of Baltimore, whose courtesy in favoring us with the volume, and with interesting particulars concerning its author, is duly appreciated by the Editor. The agents have spared no pains to get up this work in the most handsome style. It contains twenty admirable and costly engravings, making it, with the subject-matter of the volume, a capital holiday present. We hope it will find its way, at least, into every cultivated Methodist family. Price $1.

ST. PETER'S CHAIN OF CHRISTIAN VIRTUES. By the Rev. C. D. Oliver, of the Alabama Conference of the M. E. Church, South. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D.D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. Price 40 cents.

The author of this treatise is an estimable minister in the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He writes in a plain, easy, unambitious style—the edification of the reader being his great design. The scriptural nucleus of his essay is well chosen—St. Peter's chain of Christian virtues has always been greatly admired; and much use has been made of it in the teachings of the pulpit and the religious press. The elements of Christian character are brought to view in a striking light, as so many qualities in a compound, every one being needed to give character and efficiency to all the rest. Thus there can be no faith—saving in its influence unless virtue or courage be united with it; and neither faith nor courage can be genuine or available, unless blended with knowledge; and so of all the rest. The language of the apostle does not imply that these virtues are brought into being at successive stages in the Christian life. They are all implanted in the heart in the moment of regeneration, and none has precedence of the other, except faith, which is the instrument as well as the effect of that great change. But their existence as elementary principles is one thing: their practical development is another; and it is to this we are exhorted by the apostle. The manner in which this is to be done, and the importance of doing it, constitute the material of this edifying treatise.

METHODISM IN CHARLESTON: A Narrative of the Chief Events relating to the Rise and Progress of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston, S. C., with Brief Notices of the Early Ministers who labored in that City. By the Rev. F. A. Mood, A. M., of the South Carolina Conference. Edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. Price 10 cents.

The principal part of this work appeared in successive numbers of the Southern Christian Advocate, published in Charleston. A strong desire having been expressed for its appearance in a book, the author revised and enlarged it, and very kindly submitted it to our disposal. Being a member of the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a native of Charleston, the preparation of the work was a pleasing task to the author. He has not, however, unduly magnified his subject. He has paid less attention to the graces of style than to the faithful narration of facts. This is a matter of vast importance in works of this class. By referring to old records, and by consulting old members of the Church in Charleston, he has secured a great deal of reliable information concerning the introduction and progress of Methodism in that city, which will not be only interesting to the reader in its present form, but will also be available to the future historian of the Church. The pictorial representations of Charleston Methodist Churches, old and new, give additional interest to the volume.

SERMON ON THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY; delivered before the Kentucky Annual Conference, in Winchester, Ky., Sept. 1856. By the Rev. T. N. Ralston, A. M. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen. Price 10 cents.

This sermon, making a pamphlet of twenty-three pages, has been published by order of the Kentucky Conference. The author avows a change of his views in regard to theological institutions—against which he argues at considerable length in this discourse. Some who are not in favor of their introduction into the M. E. Church, South, may not, perhaps endorse all his arguments; but we hope they will be duly weighed, and the rather, as they are not presented in a polemical spirit. We should deprecate a controversy on that subject.

THE GREAT COMMISSION: or, The Christian Church constituted and charged to convey the Gospel to the World. By the Rev. John Harris, D. D. With an Introduction by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen.

Of this masterly work it is not necessary to say much. The Introduction gives a bird's-eye view of the Missionary operations of the Methodist Church among the people of color in our Southern States, partly as an offset to certain passages in the book which are not so well adapted to our meridian and latitude, and partly as a matter of important information. The statistics of the principal Missionary Societies, noticed by the author, are brought down in the Introduction to the present time; and a revised and enlarged Index has been appended. The constant demand for "The Great Commission," as a standard Christian classic, justifies the labor bestowed on this new edition by the Editor, and the expense incurred in stereotyping by the Agents. All ministers and others interested in the Missionary cause—and what Christian is not?—ought to have this great work. Price $1.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Aug. 26, 56.

REV. H. N. McTYEIRE:

Dear Brother—I again write a few words, and hope it is not troubling you. Myself and family are in good health, for which I thank God. Sister Jenkins is not in good health, but I believe the rest of the mission families are all in good health. The weather is very warm and oppressive at this time, and much sickness prevails amongst the Chinese. Many are dying of cholera in the interior. No doubt you will hear of much distress before a great while from this part of the world. There has scarcely any rain fallen this season, and a famine is almost inevitable. That is now the supposition of many of the Chinese. The water in the canals is now at such a low state that even the smallest Chinese boats pass with difficulty. The insurgents seem to be still progressing and gaining the favor of the people—establishing themselves wherever they go into a government, requiring allegiance from the people. They are destroying idolatry, forbiding the worship of ancestors, and causing the people to abandon their vices. We hear such news from them almost daily. They are expected to come in this direction as soon as there is sufficient water on the canals. It is now time to renew the treaty with this government. The treating powers are all here at this time and upon a stand. They know not what to do. The present government is in such a critical situation, it would be folly to go to Peking and renew the treaty with the present emperor, whose light is about being extinguished, and whose sun seems to be fast falling behind the hills to rise no more. Still it would not be good policy, on the other hand, for the treating powers to approach the new government at Nankin, or to acknowledge the insurgents as such until more is known of them. I think, perhaps before the close of this year, matters will be brought to a close.—The present government is not able to support her officers and men upon the field of battle, and they are rebelling continually, thieving and plundering poor, innocent people of their property. The emperor's soldiers and officers at this time are not well spoken of by the people; but the insurgents are praised for their justice and morality. The insurgent emperor has sent out from Nankin to call sinners to repentance and to worship the "Heavenly Father," and money is collected for their support from the people after preaching.—This is indeed strange that such a thing should take place among a heathen people. I hope the day is dawning when Christianity shall shine forth with all its splendor in China, and she shall be remembered with other Christian nations.

This month has been exceedingly warm; but, blessed be God for His kindness in preserving my health and strength, I have not missed one of my appointments. Five days in the week I am in the city, at our church, with our assistant Liew, preaching and meeting enquirers after truth. I have distributed many tracts and testaments, and visited quite a number of poor people, and furnished them with books. I have not had so much to encourage me this month as I had last. Our congregations are not so large now as formerly, and I have not so many diligent and earnest enquirers after truth now as I had some months ago. But I trust the time has not been thrown away and entirely lost. May God bless the Word that has been preached among this people, and make us His servants more faithful.

There is but little business of any kind done at Shanghai just now. Many large houses are closed for want of silks and teas. Quite a number of ships in port; some lately in have been dismasted in the China Sea in a Typhoon. There are several men-of-war in port, American, English and French, waiting for a favorable opportunity to renew the treaty, and open the entire country. In the last few weeks there has been some disturbance at Ningpo, a port south of Shanghai. Report says, two French priests have been mobbed by the people. I am told the French, in trying to establish their religion at that port, are overdoing, and have, by their imprudence, excited that enmity and jealousy which the Chinese have so long had for foreigners. I hope, hereafter, to give you the news by every mail, and inform you of my progress in the work.

Below you will find two pieces—the first directed to foreigners at Shanghai, and the second directed to Chinese in the employment of foreigners. You will see by them the position we occupy in this empire in the estimation of the Chinese, and it will be evident that we are not rising in their estimation. These two pieces were found posted up in the foreign community, written in Chinese and translated by one of the members of the London Mission. It came out in the Chinese Herald last week just as I send it, and will, no doubt, afford considerable amusement to your readers, and show them the bitterness which they (the Chinese) have against all foreigners.

I.

How ridiculous it is for barbarians to come to Shanghai, thinking, by preaching, to gain the heart of the people! For us to deem this a good deed is, alas! too late. Twenty years previously they might have preached with more chance of success. But, in the first place, Opium, the brigandizing cause of the evil, has ruined the minds of the people; and then, having deliberated with no good heart, soldiers came out, and, without any reason, brought desolating sorrow upon the place, reduced the city suburbs, and slew ten thousand people. Their hearts penurious, their counsels short-sighted, formerly they erred. Now they circulate tracts; but their doctrine is not good. The people, in their heart, hate them; aye detest them to the very backbone. They should speedily assemble and destroy those asses. As far as I can see, truly there is no good thing about them. They would purchase what kind of reputation? In their hearts they wish the people to praise them. Though they have a treaty of commerce and say they wish to do business peaceably yet this is only the profession of the lips; their hearts are false; the treaty is no security for their good conduct. Besides this, the imaginations of their hearts are like snakes, full of poison. They deprive the people of their dollars, in some cases of hundreds, in others of thousands and tens of thousands. Nor do they pay their heavy debts. Under these circumstances, what can be said? At length the doctrine of Jesus must be laid aside. You foreigners cast anxious eyes upon China; wish to take it by force, and consider it your own property. You destroy tombs and clear away graves; your sin, therefore, is not light. All these things are sins against Heaven. How could good-hearted and superior men do these things? It is altogether inconsistent for you foreigners to preach the way to Heaven. How can such conduct delude the minds of men? Investigate to the uttermost the conduct of a Chinaman, and you will find it different. Your manner of acting is like the brutes. Unable to remedy your own faults you proclaim yourselves virtuous!—Your sins are so numerous that it would be impossible to punish one in every ten thousand. How many things of a licentious nature are you guilty of? Yourselves sinful, you pretend to correct other men! If you would discourse concerning sin, tell of your own misdeeds, which are pre-eminent.—Though every one of you were cut in twain, the punishment would be too light. Hypocritically proclaiming a foreign doctrine, you come as devils to turn everything upside down. Corrupting the people to the very core and praising yourselves as virtuous, you esteem a good deed!

At present you erect many houses without any respect for propriety—the low man must have as grand a house as the highest. You are proud, licentious, shameless, openly and forcibly doing things of the worst description. You provoke to anger wise men in distant parts, whose rank in the civil service, whose scientific attainments and military tactics, are of the highest order. These men are coming, majestic in their appearance, full of zeal, and will, in no time, bury you foreigners in one hole. Having thrown away thousands and tens of thousands in erecting houses, your funds being exhausted, miseries will come upon you. You need not remain here, courting troubles and calamity. While you may, return to your native lands and escape the coming woe. By your residence here you have obtained many blessings, you ought therefore to return. Having had your wishes fully gratified, you ought to walk at once. But those who have recently arrived look into the mirror of their predecessors, and follow their example. Everything has a beginning but some things have no end! Do not imagine that your prestige will always protect you. Even the walls of a strong city, if always relied on, will certainly decay. Having related the long and the short of it, ye ought to hear. With the deepest earnestness, as if from the feeling heart of a woman, I have spoken words of the purest sincerity. Cast away from you every one of your former wicked practices, come to a stop, repent, renovate yourselves, and day after day still more renovate yourselves.

The Central Flowry Kingdom is the land of sages and holy men; therefore, we will not punish you so severely as you deserve; we do not wish to contend and quarrel with you. You ought to know you are thus favored, and thank us for it. Do not say the middle kingdom has neither men nor resources. The Flowery Land has abundance. At present our warriors, who are refreshing themselves on their hills and forests, are about to come upon you. Because you see no soldiers before your eyes, do not say we have none. Your strength and fierceness I estimate at a low rate. The superior man is gentle, and yet performs great deeds; he is unwilling to learn the manners of the fierce man. You, presenting a ferocious front towards this country, have long acted the part of an enemy. I call on you to try your power, and then we shall see who is the braver. I now exhort you not to trust in your own self-conceits, but quickly to return home.—This is honest advice. If you continue to delude yourselves, and no one behind him of having come to this land, there will be no escape; your garments will be stained with your blood. Please yourselves; but, though you think you are intelligent, you may be deceived. Calamities will come upon you like a whirlwind. Wolves shall come first, tigers will follow; fire and water will be used everywhere; the passes will be thoroughly stopped up—though you take rhubarb, there will be no relief; you must die of constipation. I have repeatedly told you of these things. My words are urgent; whether you hear or not, it matters not; you may please yourselves. Things in general are ominous. This paper is an omen come to warn you. When our soldiers meet this Jesus he will cut a poor figure. It is not to your credit to have him.

II.

On the Lord of Heaven's holy day foreigners, dwelling in our own Central Flowery Land, do preach barbarian doctrine, and instruct the people with a view to their conversion. These men are altogether wanting in ignorance for the gods, . . . devoid of faith, of intelligence, and of charity. But they devise a Jesus to deceive whom? Educated men, agriculturalists, artizans and merchants have followed their respective occupations from ancient times to the present, without any interruption. Let every man and woman, therefore, with unwearied diligence, shunning laziness, discharge their duties, and listen not to corrupt discourse, and permit not a bad heart to grow up. If you desire to act the upright man, it is necessary that you study the ancients, rectify your heart, be sincere in your intentions, and cultivate personal virtue. At the present day let each rest contented with his lot, attend to his business, and avoid reverencing Jesus, and then you will do. If you wish to know what kind of creature Jesus is: he is merely an animal of the monkey tribe, which jumps about on the shores of the lakes and rivers. There is no proof that he is a God. We, therefore, look upon the sayings and doings of foreigners as a play invented to amuse us.

Whilst I now give my views of the Christian religion you must not laugh, but attend to the matter.

Alas! men of learning of the Central Flowery Kingdom, in company with these barbarians, foster a heart altogether corrupt. They ridicule our sages, insult our holy men; so that their sin is not trivial. They cherish a heresy, and so injure ten thousand people. They stuff their minds by constant reading, but their learning is worse than useless; it stinks like withered grass. They abandon their nationality, and compose crafty discourse; they are covetous men, and, to fill their mouths and their bellies, make a false profession. In their minds there are no virtuous propensities; hence they injure the people. Before our very eyes they declare the doctrine of Jesus. But those who listen are few. Why is this? Because, admitting that the statements and doctrines of their books agree, their way of doctrine has no verification connected with it. The common people are in the full possession of their five senses, and therefore must distinguish stinks from perfumes when they are placed before their noses. Consequently, when the ancient holy men preached, friends came from far distant places to hear their discourses; but now, though these men are in close contiguity with the Chinese, they will not enter their doors.

I now question the doctrine of their books; whoso composed them, let him give me his serious attention. Though you have exerted your mind to the utmost, of what advantage is it? A corrupt religion can never surpass our orthodox doctrines. Already your sin is like the heaven in its height. The invisible world, on its book, has decreed for punishment, that you be cut right through the wrist; ere long, fearful calamity will come upon you. He, who has discernment to perceive that misery is in store, is a hero. Things past and future rise up before my mind, and therefore I write this warning to save you from destruction. I, as it were, push out a boat to save you from drowning. To-day you ought to make haste and return to the old ways, lest calamity overtake you. If you persist in remaining though you flee to the temples, and embrace Buddha, your safety will be precarious.—At the present time Confucius stands in the presence of Yuh-Te, and delivers to him memorials of the state of affairs. Yuh-Te having read them is filled with profound indignation and hatred. Seeing foreigners abounding, destitute of intelligence, fit for any imaginable thing, and wild in the extreme, he quickly ordered fire from heaven to destroy their literature. Do not say these statements are only false pretences. Already the book store is burned to the ground.* Consider; this occurred that all you men might get a clear understanding of these things, and collectively and individually repent. First, now it is possible for your return to the ancient way with your money and your life, and so enjoy a good old age. Although in the possession of your money, if you are deprived of your life, what then?—When your sins, great as mountains, have covered you, your escape will be impossible.

I have thus warned you sufficiently. You ought to think seriously whether you ought to return or not. If really my words are truly correct—by thus throwing away your property, your happiness will be boundless.

* Meaning the book bindery of the London Mission which was burned down some months since. But he was not aware that the press, the most important part, had been saved, and which would enable the foreigners soon to have more books and tracts in circulation.

We are well acquainted with the success of the missionary among his people. And no doubt more persons come within our doors to look after truth than he is perhaps aware of. The word of God will go on and prosper, blessed be His holy name. I look soon to see an outpouring of His spirit upon us and a revival of His work in this part of the earth. Let all the Church pray for us.

WM. LAMBATH

YOUNG MEN OF THE CHURCH.

There are many young men in the Church. Some of them have been communicants for many years. They have grown strong in their religious principles. Their hearts are fixed to its altars; they delight in its services; they live for its honor, and delight in its success. Many young men were added to the Church in the glorious revivals of the past summer. They are warm in their first love, diligent in their religious duties, fervent in spirit, and zealously striving to please God, to do good, and lay up a good foundation against the time to come. In many important respects these are the hope of the Church. They have begun life right, they seek to live wisely and well. When the fathers are gone these are to fill their places, as leaders, stewards, trustees; and helpers generally of the cause of God in the earth. Some of them, by industrious habits, and the economy superinduced by correct religious principles, will grow rich. Let such learn to give, that they may attain to the standard of Christian liberality, and be glad to distribute. Some will engage in trade and commerce, the mechanic arts, and the learned professions. Diligence, industry and perseverance in their callings will bring competence, wealth and fame. When these come, let them not forget the God of their fathers. In all the relations and conditions of life let them "hold fast the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end." Thus "an abundant entrance will be administered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

But we have a word to say to these young men on another and a graver subject. It is from these pious young men the Church is to be supplied with ministers. It is in the early and forming state of their religious character that men are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to enter the sacred ministry as a life's calling. Can it be that among the thousands of young men now in the Church none or only a very small number are thus moved? The fields are white. The harvest is ready. The laborers are few. Thousands are wanted to cultivate Immanuel's land. More are needed here, than in the trades and professions; and the demands are more urgent. For years the Protestant Churches of our country have been calling for "more laborers." Their cries, and the cries of the heathen world have penetrated heaven for more laborers to gather the harvests of the world. Can it be that God does not answer these prayers? No. Why, then, are the laborers so few? The young men of the Church do not, or will not hear the call of God to them; or they misjudge what the Spirit that is in them signifies when it moves them towards the ministry. Their minds are sometimes drawn to the subject; but they dismiss it. Or, they weigh it, and conclude they are unworthy, or incompetent, or the cost is too great, and they turn aside to struggle against their convictions, or lure them among the flesh-pots of wealth or fame.

The Church needs more laborers. The need is great now, and it is constantly increasing. Why this scarcity of ministers? Is the church mistaken as to her need? Has its glorious Head forgotten His promise? Can these things be! Are there any other sources of supply than from the young men of the Church? No; the demand can be met no where else, in no other way.

Young man, reader of these lines, look to this matter. The Church needs you. Calls you. Can you say your mind was never drawn to the ministry, your heart never moved by God in this direction. Can you say you never have "resisted the Holy Ghost" in this matter? The Church needs you. Shall she plead in vain? God calls you. Will you disobey the heavenly calling? Perishing souls are waiting for you. Shall they go down to the grave without seeing your face, or hearing your voice. Time is flying. You will be soon too old to start, or it will be too late to begin. Young man what sayest thou? Go preach my gospel, says Christ. What do you say?

NEW SUBSCRIBERS CALLED FOR—10,000 to the Home Circle—3000 to the Quarterly Review, and not less than 50,000 to the Sunday school Visitor.

Shall we not have them by the first of January next? This is a grave question; and we submit it in confidence to the ministry, membership, and friends of the entire Connection. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you especially for a large increase of patronage to all our Publishing House Periodicals. The present is a favorable season for obtaining new subscribers, as well as for securing the renewal of old ones. On leaving your different charges, for the purpose of attending your respective Conferences, would it not be well to take with you from five to twenty new subscribers? This can certainly be done in almost every case, if the proper efforts be made. And on entering the new fields of labor to which you may be assigned, if you desire, as we knew you do, to see a great and glorious revival of enlightened, genuine, and enduring piety among the people of your several charges; and if you would bring all the available means and instrumentalities of the Church to bear on the accomplishment of this one great object, let all our prodical issues be fully and freely circulated in every part of your work; and see to it, that this be done at the earliest possible day. Confiding implicidly both in your ability and disposition to carry out this important enterprise, we have but to remind you that a strict, though prudent, adherence to the cash system, will be to the interests of all concerned. Be careful to receive the money, as far as practicable, at the time of taking the subscriptions and renewals; and dont fail to remit it to us, if possible, in connection with the names and post offices of the subscribers.—This will be a special accomodation to us, and a great relief to our clerks.

Hostetter—Three bottles of Hostetter's Vegetable Stomach Bitters will cure the Dyspepsia; one bottle will create an appetite, force out the impure bile, purify the blood and invigorate the system; two bottles will cure the worst form of liver complaint; one bottle will dissipate that weakness at the pit of the stomach, give color to the countenance, impart tone and strength to the system, and lend cheerfulness to the mind. No article is so peculiarly adapted to the depressing effects of our climate.

Sold by druggists and dealers generally. 46 ft

Who is Hostetter?—What dyspeptic and nervously unstrung invalid that ever tried his celebrated Stomach Bitters, but can rely with pleasure. In all cases of Dizziness, Flatulency, Palpitation, Prostration, great Fatigue, Constipation, Dyspepsia, Physical and Mental Inability, it is surprising how soon the patient finds relief. They correct the appetite, impart tone to the system, force off the bile and impure secretions, regulate the bowels, give new strength of body and vigor of mind. No family can afford to be without Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Sold in quart bottles by all Hotels, Grocers, Druggists, etc. No additional spirits required.

Immense mass of testimony in favor of Hoofland's German Bitters convinces us that the article is all it is represented to be, and in consequence, we advise a trial of it by those afflicted with diseases for which it is recommended.

R. CHAPMAN, Esq., of Lowell, Dodge County, Wis., under date of Nov. 1, 1851, says: "Over a year ago I sent some money to you from Canada, and received some of your German Bitters, which I used and found great relief from. My health has improved to such a degree that I am again able to attend to my business. A large number of dyspeptics in this neighborhood have to send to Milwaukie for the medicine. An agent here could sell large quantities, as I know it to be a sure cure."

Samuel Moore, Plattville, Wis.; James L. Manville, Jefferson, Wis.; Holden, Kemp & Co., Janesville, Wis., and others in that State, have also expressed their great confidence in the virtues of the Bitters. See advertisement ddit

LOCAL NEWS.

New Mail Route to California.

At a meeting of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, held Tuesday evening, convened specially to take into consideration the importance of taking early steps to open and secure a Mail Route from this city to and from California, via the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the following preamble and Resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz:

Whereas, the Tehuantepec Company organized under the laws of the State, propose, in accordance with the terms of their grant, acquired from the Government of Mexico, by virtue of a decree of the Supreme Government, dated February 5th, 1856, and recognized by the 8th article of the Gadsden Treaty, to open immediately the right of transit and passage across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and for general commercial purposes, therefore be it

Resolved, That the New Orleans Chamber of Comaerce deem the opening of said Tehuantepec route, by wheel or carriage road, a subject of vital interest to our citizens, forming, as it will, an important link in the chain of internal improvements, now progressing to completion in our own and neighboring Southern States; that we regard the control of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec as of incalculable importance to the general interests and prosperity of our country in every respect,

Resolved further, That the Government at Washington, through our Representatives, be requested to contract with the Tehuantepec Company, in accordance with law and upon liberal terms for carrying the mails to and from the Pacific.

Resolved further, That the delegation from New Orleans to the Southern Commercial Convention at Savannah, Georgia, be and are hereby respectfully requested to present the Isthmus Route prominently before that body, and to exercise their influence in awakening the people of the South to the important fact that we have within our reach the nearest and most expeditious route to command the valuable commerce of the East and California.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in our daily papers, and a copy be forwarded to the President of the Southern Convention shortly to assemble in the city of Savannah; and this Chamber address the various Chambers of Commerce of the West invoking their representatives in Congress to favor the object contemplaated.

C. J. MANSONI,
Secretary.

FAIR FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE SEAMEN'S BETHEL.—Several benevolent ladies of the Third District have lent their industry and attention to get up a Fair in behalf of the Seamen's Bethel. No more worthy object could employ their leisure hours. The "gallant tars" have always the kind sympathies of the ladies, and most grateful do they appreciate those kindnesses. And who ought not to be a friend to the sailor?

For four successive nights this week said Fair has been held at the Masonic Hall; and, we think, the ladies must have fully realized their expectations, as a goodly number visited the Hall each evening, and seemed generously disposed to let loose their cash at the winning invitation of the fair vendors.

FRANKLIN TEMPERANCE HALL. THIRD DISTRICT.—We are informed that this projected building will be commenced this month. Persons desirous of taking shares have still an opportunity, there being some yet to be disposed of. When finished, this building will stand out in happy contrast to the Gomorrah of beer-saloons and coffee-houses that are to be seen everywhere in the Third District.

We wish the enterprise success.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Weekly report of deaths in the city of New Orleans for the week ending the 30th of Nov, 1856: Apoplexy, 2; asthma, 1; cancer, 1; catarrh, 2; casualties, 1; cholera, 1; do. infantum, 1; congestion of the brain, 2; do. of the lungs, 2; consumption, 10; convulsions, adult, 1; do. infantile, 7; croup, 1; debility, infantile, 2; diarrhœa, 2; dropsy, 1; dysentery, 4; enterites, 2; fever, congestive, 2; do. hectic, 1; do. puerpal, 1; do. remittent, 1; do. typhoid, 2; do. typhus, 1; gas. ent., 2; marasmus, adult, 1; meningites, 1; old age, 3; pleurisy, 1; softening of the brain, 1; stillborn, 6; sucide, 1; teething, 3; tetanus, 2; tris urscentium, 3; unknown, 1; worms, 1; not stated, 1. BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.—This body held a special meeting on Saturday evening, for the purpose of acting upon the new or revised ordinance for taxing trades, professions, etc. There was a full meeting of the members; and the ordinance was adopted in such shape as to raise the taxation generally, in anticipation of the deficiency of the coming year. A fair indication of the increase may be given by citing the rise on two lines of business—the coffee-house tax being raised from $150 to $175, and the cotton press tax from $125 to $150. The ordinance has to be ratified by the Board of Aldermen yet.

SHOCKING AFFAIR IN THE THIRD DISTRICT.—Two Young Men Killed.—Two young men, named Michael Fannin and Alexander Bennett, were shot by James Cruise, at his house on Victory street, near Enghien, in the Third District, on Sunday night, at nine o'clock. Fannin died in a few minutes, and Bennett died at 1 o'clock on Monday evening.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The President's message was delivered to Congress today.

The President claims that the result of the recent Presidential election is an emphatic condemnation of a sectional policy and an equally emphatic declaration in support of the equality of the States, in the Union.

The President condemns generally the slavery agitation, a history of which he gives.

He defends the Kansas Nebraska act and the repeal of the Missouri compromise, which he argues was no breach of faith.

The President then reviews the recent events in the Territory of Kansas.—The disorders which prevailed their, he says, were grossly exaggerated for parto effect. The real trouble was that a political party turned Kansas into a battle field for the purpose of influencing the Presideatial election.

The President then announces that all disorders are suppressed, and that civil war no longer exists in Kansas.

Nearly the entire message relates to this subject.

The reference in the message to foreign affairs is brief and unimportant.

During the fiscal year the receipts into the Treasury from customs duties, amounted to more than sixty-four millions of dollars ($64,000,000,) and from all sources, to seventy-three millions nine hundred aad eighteen thousand dollars ($73,918,000,) which, with the balance on hand on the first day of July, 1855, made the total resources ninety-two millions eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($92,850,000.)

The expenditures during the fiscal year, including three millions of dollars ($3,000,000,) in the execution of the treaty with Mexico, and excluding the sums paid in liquidation of the public debt, amounted to sixty millions one hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars ($60,172,000.) The public debt has been reduced to thirty millions nine hundred thousaad dollars ($30,900,000.)

The President recommends such an alteration in the tariff as will reduce the revenue from customs duties to fifty millions of dollars, ($50,000,000.)

Certain changes in the policy of distributing the troops are alluded to, and an increase in the naval force is recommended.

The advaatage and desirableness of new contracts for the conveyance of the California mails by the Tehuantepec or Nicaragua route is urged upon the attention of Congress.

The President announces the conclusion of a supplemental treaty with Great Britain, whereby the controversy as to the construction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been settled.

The Sound dues question, the President announces, is not yet settled, but is in a state that leads him to hope it will ere long be satisfactorily arranged.

With Spain, the President says, no new difficulties have arisen, but he regrets to add that little progress has been made in the settlement of the pending questions between the two countries.—The negotiations with a view to the relief of our commerce with Cuba from some of its burdens, and to provide for a more speedy settlement of local disputes, he says, have not yet been attended with my evident results.

The President assents to the abolition of privateering, proposed by the seven powers represented in the Paris Conference, provided the proposition be so awended as to exempt the private property of belligerents, except articles contraband of war, from capture. He expresses a hope that this amendment will be adopted.

The President informs Congress that he has refused to receive either of the recent Ministers sent from Nicaragua to Washington, because it is impossible at present to tell which is the Government de facto.

He also announces that he will resist the Government of New Granada in any attempt to levy her tonage or mail taxes on us.

The President expressly charges the Government of New Granada with being responsible for the Panama riot in April last. He states that he has demanded full indemnity and prevision for the families of the American citizens who were killed in the riot, and that he has appointed a special commissioner to negotiate with the New Granadian Government for indemnity for the past, and securities for the future.

IMPORTANT FROM NEW GRANADA.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—Private advices from Bogota, received in this city, announce that the difficulty between New Granada and Great Britain has been arranged, and that, in consequence, the British blockade of the New Granadian ports will not be inforced.

ALABAMA RIVERS.—We learn from different parts of Alabama that the principal rivers of that State, the Tombigbee, Warrior and Alabama, are up and in good navigable condition.

The Legislature of Florida Assembled on the 24th ult., at Tallahasse. A United States Senator will be elected, as Mr. Mallory's term expires on the 4th of March.

REFUSES FOREIGN HONORS.—Lieut. Maury has refused the Cross of the Order of Dannebourg on the ground that the laws of his country forbid its officers accepting presents or titles from a foreign power.

The suspension bridge about to be erected over the Mississippi, at St. Louis, it is said, will be the most costly in the world. It will cost about $2,000,000, will be eighty-four feet above high water, and over a mile in length. The bottom of the towers will be sixty feet below the water.

Later from Texas.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP ATLANTIC.

The steamship Atlantic arrived Monday morning from Texas port, with dates to the 25th inst.

The county seat of Centon has been located by a vote of the people—290 to 56—at "Centre," five and a half miles north of Alton.

The Dallas Herald states that quite a number of immigrants have passed through that town recently, most of them going farther west. It is said that large numbers are en route, and may be expected in a short time.

A letter states at the recent fire in Lagrange, every house on the north side of the public square was burnt, except the brick store belonging to Mr. Sinks. The loss is estimated at $20,000. The County Surveyor, the Sheriff, and one Justice had their papers burnt.

Reports from the interior speak of some cold weather up the country.—Sleet fell at Rutersville, week before last, and at Waco, it is said there was now ice four inches thick.

THE GROWING WHEAT CROP.—We should judge that twice as much has been put in the ground the present season in this country, as during any previous year.—There is a corresponding increase in all the wheat growing counties. The growing crops look finely where we have been, and without some untoward casualty, will turn out more than an average yield. Without some such accident, the wheat crop of this region the ensuing year will be immense.—Dallas Herald.

PRICE OF PORK.—Owing to the abundant mast this year, pork will stand at a rather low figure, say 3 to 4c per pound. We have heard of but few engagements even at these figures, buyers believing they can secure their supplies at lower rates. Anderson county still maintains an enviable reputation for its abundance of provisions. Never since we have been in the country, has it failed to produce more than enough for home consumption, and invariably assists less favored portions of country.—We are informed by some of our "eldest inhabitants" that in former days our country was called "Egypt" from its proverbial abundance of the staff of life.—Palestine Advocate.

Kansas Affairs.

It appears from a correspondent in the St. Louis Republican that some difficulty has arisen between Governor Geary and Judge Lecompte, Chief Justice of the Territory of Kansas. The question at issue, as related by the Republican's correspondent, is this:

A man named Hays was under indictment for the murder of Boffum. He applied to Judge Lecompte for a writ of habeas corpus, and asked to be admitted to bail. For reasons shown, and which were sufficient to satisfy the Judge, after two careful examinations, he did admit him to bail in the sum of $10,000. Gov. Geary ordered the Marshal to re-arrest Hays, on the ground, that murder was not a bailabe offence. The Marshal refused. He then ordered Col. Titus to make the arrest with the military under his command, which order the Colonel promptly obeyed.

The question will be referred to the President, and both the officias says, if it is decided against them they will resign. So we are, it seems to lose one of two most excellent officers, whose places could scarcely be se well filled.

My informant also states that the country is completely cleared of robbers, and that inmigrants and travelors can go any where and everywhere in safety. The question then, here suggests itself to my mind, who were the robbers and assassins? Were they Freesoil or Pro-slavery men? The Pro-slavery men are still in the country, while the Freesoilers who came in under the auspices of Parson Beecher, Miss Dutton, &c., have fled, and all the robbers and assassins have gone except those who are under trial, and those who are suffering the penalty of their crimes.

There were one hundred and eight indictments found against them at the term just adjourned; and of those, thirty-seven were tried, twenty-two were convicted of robbery and attemps to kill, and twenty were sentenced for five years in the penitentiary, and one for two years and one for six years.

From the Mexican Frontier.

THE REVOLUTION.

The Corpus Christi Nueces Valley, of the 22d ult., has the following:

The last reliable information which we had from the Mexican Revolution, and which was published in our issue of the 8th inst., gave a brief account of the battle of Damargo, and announced the entire success of Gen. Vidaurri. We then stated that the forces under Gen. Garza were completely routed and dispersed, many of his men taking refuge on this side the Rio Grande for safety; and that Gen. Vidaurri, with his entire force, had, since the victory at Camargo, taken up his line of march for Monterey.

From information which has reached us by a private letter from the frontier, it would appear that subsequent to that date, Gen. Garza had again rallied his forces, and undertaken to intercept the march of the victorious army. On the 6th instant, the two forces met and a pitched battle ensued, which resulted in the complete dispersion of Garza's forces, the capture of three pieces of canon, a large amount of ammunition, one hundred and fifty pack-mules, his Secretary, Don Pedro Hinojoso, two officers and about two hundred and fifty privates, with their arms, etc.

This statement can be relied upon as strictly correct.

The letter was written in haste, however, and does not give any further particulars. We are consequently uninformed as to the number of killed and wounded on either side, and the numerical strength of the two armies.

Vidaurri's artillery, under command of Col. Jordan, our former fellow-citizen, is said to be the bulwark of the revolutionary party; and Col. Jordon, more than any other officer of the army, has the entire confidence, not only of the commanding General, but also of the citizens and soldiers.

The public is anxiously gazing in the direction of the Mexican frontier, and news from that quarter is eagerly sought after. But what is to be the result of bidaurri's success yet remains untold; his objects and aims are still enveloped in profound mystery.

NEW GRANADA AND ENGLAND.—It is stated that England had suspended diplomatic relation with New Granada, in consequence of the latter failing to liquidate the Makintosh claim, and that the English fleet had been ordered to enforce the claim. This claim arose under the Columbian confederacy, more than thirty years ago, and amounts to $485,295. The British Charge recently made a peremptory demand for payment.—New Granada as peremptorily refused to comply, whereupon she was informed that her ports would soon be blockaded by the British West India fleet. It is said that the threatened blockade will not affect the ports of the isthmus; that no interruption will be occasioned to our communication with the Pacific.

IMPORTANT FROM NORTHERN MEXICO.—Vidaurri, the chief of the insurrectionary movement in New Leon, has entirely succumbed to the forces of the General Government, and on the 19th ult. he entered into a treaty with Gen. Laadi, Chief of Division, by which he acknowledges the authority of Comonfort's Governments, and agrees for himself and his partisans to yield it henceforth a cheerful and ready obedience.

This event will have the effect of strengthening greatly the cause of Comonfort in the Central and Southern portions of Mexico in the struggle which is going on against him on the part of the priesthood and other dissatisfied parties or factions.

FROM RIO JANEIRO.—Advices from Rio de Janeiro to October 6, state that the markets at that port were dull. Coffee continued to come in freely, and was immediately engaged for European account. No news of any interest—nothing having occurred save a slight suspension of good feeling feeling between the French Minister and the Government, arising out of a point of etiquette at the Court of St. Cloud, of which the Brazilian Minister complained. The matter was, however, amicably adjusted.

FOR LIBERIA.—Two vessels will soon depart from the United States for Liberia; one from Baltimore, the other from Boston. The New ship built by the liberal donation of the late Mr. Stevens, of Maryland, and named the Mary Caroline Stevens, will leave Baltimore on the 29th of November, and, Hampton Roads on the 4th of December. This vessel will first go to Monrovia, and then to other settlements on the coast. She will take out over two hundred passengers. The vessel from Boston has been chartered by the Massachusetts Society, to carry out the materials for a college to be erected on a beautiful site by the government near Monrovia.—Baltimore Sun.

ARRIVAL OF FRENCH REFUGEES.—We find the following in the local column of the Baltimore American of the 24th ultimo:

There arrived here on Friday night last on board of the bark Amazon, Capt. Kirwin, nine Frenchmen who had been transported from their native land for political offences, and who escaped from Cayenne, one of the islands of French Guiana. The manner of their escape was both novel and dangerous, the mode of conveyance from the island being on a raft constructed by themselves, and made of drift wood. After a perilous voyage of five days they reached Demarara, and from thence were brought to this port by the bark above stated, and were taken charge of by the French Benevolent Society of this city. Quarters were procured for them at the "Stranger's Home," on High street, near Watson, and Mr. Muirhead, the superintendant, paid every attention to their comfort and convenience. During Sunday they were visited by the French and English Consuls, and also by a large number of our French citizens, to whom they communicated freely all the facts relating to their escape and sufferings, speaking very highly of the kindness extended to them by the officers of the Amazon. They will leave Baltimore this afternoon for New York, where they have friends, and will be able to obtain employment.

SHOCK OF AN EARTHQUAKE IN KENTUCKY. The inhabitants of this city were aroused from their slumbers about 4 o'clock on Sunday last, by the somewhat appalling shock of an earthquake. The vibration, which was accompanied by a heavy wind, was very sensibly felt in several adjoining towns, and lasted for a time, variously estimated from ten seconds to one minute. This was the fourth shock that has been felt in this region during the last five or six weeks, and was the loudest and longest of the series. We only hope that the slight visitations we have had may not inaugurate another such convulsion of nature as occurred in 1811, when the mighty waters of the Mississippi were stopped in their onward course, and their current made to reverse its flow.—Hickman Argus, Nov. 14th.

VIRGINIA AND MASSACHUSSETS.—According to a statement of Col. Smith, the superintendent of the Virginia Military Institute, it appears that the number of college students in Virginia has increased from five hundred in 1839 to nearly fifteen hundred in 1855; so that Virginia, with a white population less than Massachusetts, has actually the greater number of students in colleges.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.—On the 16th instant a fire broke out in the Rice House, in St. Paul, which was occupied, with the exception of four rooms, by Messrs. Rich & King as an upholstery establishment, and which was entirely consumed. A large amount of merchandize belonging to the above named firm was saved. A new building adjoining the Rice House was slightly injured. The total amount of loss is set down at $19,500, of which $9,500 is covered by insurance.—The Rice House, (says the St. Paul Democrat), was one of the "ancient landmarks" of our city. It was erected in 1849 by Hon. H. M. Rice; was one of the first, if not the very first, brick buildings erected in St. Paul, and, when built, it was looked upon as an excessively visionary enterprise. The building in its early days was occupied as a hotel. The second session of the territorial legislature, and of the supreme court was held in it.

COLD WEATHER IN WESTERN MISSOURI.—The Lexington Citizen says that sleighs have been running freely in that town, and that the boys have fine skating on the ponds. So cold a spell for November has scarcely ever been known.

IMMENSE GROWTH.—The population of Cincinnati, within the corporate limits, is stated to be 470,000. The exports from that city, for the year 1855-56, amounts to $50,744,786; in 1851-52, to only $33,234,896. This gives an idea of the great increase of business within four years. The imports into the city the last year amounted to $75,295,901.

RARE GENEROSITY.—A gentleman who died in Botecourt, a few months ago, devised his entire property, estimated at $10,000, to one of his sisters. After his death, that sister destroyed his will and divided his property equally between a brother and sister and herself. A rare and noble exhibition of the unselfishness of sister's love.

VERDICT AGAINST A RAILROAD COMPANY.—A verdict of $175 damages was, on the 21st ult., rendered against the New York Central Railroad Company, at the suit of A. W. Page, for having been forcibly ejected from the cars in October, 1855, and seriously injured. He got on the wrong train, it seems, and was told so at Syracuse, but continued to ride on until it reached Vienna, when he was ejected by force.

NATIONAL ART ASSOCIATION.—An Art Association has been started in Washington, the first society of the kind at the seat of Goverment, which is certainly very creditable to those engaged in it. The following are the officers: President, Horatio Stone; Vice President, W. D. Washington; Corresponding Secretary, Chas. Lanman; Recording Secretary, George R. West; Treasurer, Robert S. Chilton; Librarian, Rufus Dawes.

DEATH OF A POETESS.—MRS. Elizabeth J. Eames, a lady of some celebrity as a poetess, died a short time since at the residence of her brother in Charben, Ohio. Mrs. Eames was a contributor to Graham's Magazine, and for many years resided in this city.

SEMINARY BURNT.—We are truly sorry to learn that the Cottage Grove Seminary, in the Parish of Bosnier, was entirely consumed by fire, on Tuesday night. This institution was under the control of Mr. T. W. Abney, and was in a very flourishing condition. The loss of Mr. Abney, we are informed, will be considerable, besides the loss to citizens, who had an interest in the property. The school will be resumed on Monday next, in buildings near that which was consumed, and it is the intention of the patrons of the school to rebuild immediately on a more extensive and permanent plan. The fire originated by accident.

It is a misfortune, and one which we deeply deplore.—Caddo Gazette, 22d.

SOMETHING NEW.—In the Charleston Evening News' report of the Institute Fair, a new use of Cotton is mentioned:

"Mr. J. M. Legare, of Aiken, sends a stand, rustic chair, table, Emperor Adrian's cabinet, pieturo frame, library screen, etc., which he made of cotton, to imitate carved wood work, by subjecting it to a chemical process. It is an invention of his own, entirely new, for which he has received a patent. In its use it is phant and duetile, and may be moulded, if desired, but with still greater facility may be worked up by hand and without moulds. When dry it is moderately elastic, is not effected by heat, cold or moisture, and possesses a hardness and tenacity beyond the hardest wood. These articles are certainly great curiosities, and will well repay a careful examination by all who visit the Fair.

SUFFERING IN LIBERIA.—The New York Colonization Society has received intelligence from Liberia that the inhabitants of Sino were in a very distressed condition, arising from the late war in that section of the country—four towns have been destroyed and the inhabitants left in a most destitute condition. The people of Mourovia and some other places have done all in their power to relieve the most urgent wants of the sufferers, yet much is still to be done. The New York Society have issued a strong appeal for aid in behalf of the sufferers.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.—Three men lost their lives in a shocking manner on the 22nd ult., in a shaft of the tunnel building on the New York and Erie Railroad, at Bergen Hill. The shaft is nearly 80 feet deep, and five men were being hoisted up in a tub, suspended by a rope, when, just as they reached the top, the rope parted and they were precipitated to the bottom. Three were instantly killed, and the other two were dangerously if not fatally hurt.

COMMERCIAL.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Dec. 3, 1856.

COTTON.....We noticed in our last review that factors having met the demand freely, the market had assumed more animation towards the close, and that the sales on Friday amounted to 14,500 bales, subsequently to which we heard of further transactions which swelled the business of that day to 16,000 bales. On Saturday buyers again came forward with unabated spirit, and notwithstanding a downward tendency in Exchange, and an advance in Freights, took fully 16,000 bales, at prices showing an improvement of ¼c. On Monday the demand was still more active, and the sales summed up 22,500 bales—the heaviest day this season—at prices again in favor of factors, showing a further advance in the Ordinary and Middling grades of ¼c. This heavy business (making a total for the previous three days of 54,000 bales) having materially reduced the supply on sale, and the demand being moreover checked both by more stringent freights and a drooping Exchange market, the business yesterday was confined to 5500 bales, prices easily falling in favor of factors, who were enabled for desirable lots to realize ¼c higher than could have be established on Monday. Thus the sales of the three days sum up 44,000 bales. The buoyancy of the market has been increased by the receipts from the principal shipping points on the Mississippi not being up to the general expectation. The bulk of the business continues to be in the Middling qualities, but a fair amount of business has been done in the finer descriptions at 13c and upwards.

The receipts since the 28th ult. comprise 23,261 bales, against 20,185 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 17,716 (15,484 to foreign ports and 2232 coastwise,) embracing 6385 to Liverpool, 2310 to Grimsby, England, 4279 to Havre, 2480 to Barcelona, 1761 to Boston and 700 to Providence, R. I., leaving on hand a stock of 267,014 bales against 238,695 bales same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 551,780 bales against 542,709 same time last year—showing an increase of 9071 bales. The increase at all the ports up to the latest dates reported, is 8725 bales, (918,405 against 914,880.) THE GREAT REFINER.

'Tis sweet to sit like he who tries
The silver 'fore his desk,
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest too intense a heat,
Should to consume the base alloy,
The precious metals, too, destroy.

'Tis good to think how well he knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal to which it goes,
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire when fit,
For his own hand to polish it.

'Tis sweetness to know that he,
The piece he has begun,
Will not forsake, till he can see—
To prove the work well done—
An image by its brightness shown
The perfect likeness of his own.

But oh! how much of earthly mould,
Dark relics of the mine,
Lost from the ore, must be beheld,
How long must he refine,
Ere in the silver he can trace
The first faint semblance to his face.

Thou Great Refiner! Sit Thou by
Thy promise to fulfil;
Moved by Thyhand, beneath Thine eye,
And melted at Thy will,
O may Thy work for ever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as Thine.

ONLY WAITING.

A very aged man in an alms-house was asked what he was doing now; he replied, "Only waiting."

Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown,
Only waiting, till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is flown;
Till the night of earth is faded
From the heart, once full of day;
Till the stars of heaven are breaking
Through the twilight soft and grey.

Only waiting till the reapers
Have the last sheaf gathered home;
For the summer time is faded,
And the autumn's winds have come.
Quickly reapers, gather quickly
The last ripe hours of my heart,
For the bloom of life is withered,
And I hasten to depart.

Only waiting till the angels
Open wide the mystic gate,
At whose feet I long have lingered,
Weary, poor, and desolate.
Even now I hear the footsteps,
And their voices, far away;
If they call me, I am waiting,
Only waiting to obey.

Only waiting, till the shadows
Are a little longer grown,
Only waiting, till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is flown;
Then from out the gathered darkness,
Holy, deathless stars shall raise,
By whose light my soul shall gladly
Tread its pathway to the skies.

I LONG TO BE THERE.

BY REV. R. H. KEVIN.

I have read of a world of beauty,
Where there is no gloomy night;
Where love is the mainspring of duty,
And God the fountain of light;
And I long to be there!
I have read of the flowing river
That bursts from beneath the throne!
And the beautiful trees that ever
Are found on its banks alone;
And I long to be there!

I have read of the myriad choir;
Of the angels harping there;
Of the holy love that burns like fire;
And the shining robes they wear;
And I long to be there!
I have read of the sanctified throng
That passed from the earth to heaven,
And now unite in the loudest song
Of praise for their sins forgiven;
And I long to be there!

I have read of their freedom from sin,
And suffering and sorrow too;
And the holy joy they feel within
As their risen Lord they view;
And I long to be there!
I long to raise to that world of light,
And to breathe its balmy air;
I long to walk with the Lamb in white,
And shout with the angels there,
O, I long to be there!

OBITUARY.

Dane, in Sabine Parish, La., Nov. 1st, 1856, MARY D. DEFEES STEPHENS, wife of Rev. Wm. Stephens, in the 62nd year of her age. Sister Stephens was born in Rockbridge Co., Va., of pious parents, in December, 1794, and joined the M. E. Church in her twelfth year, in which she lived a consistent member to the day of her death. She was a woman of deep piety, eminently devoted to God her Saviour, in whom she had unwavering confidence, which enabled her to triumph and even smile at the drawn dagger of death. A short time before the fatal moment came she was interrogated by her husband concerning her prospects for future bliss. She assured him that all was well; that Jesus was with her, and she exhorted her dear children who now mourn for her to meet her in Heaven. All knelt around and commended her to God, and with a sweet heavenly smile illuminating her features, she bade them adieu and fell asleep.

C. W. COURSEY.

From the cares, duties, and troubles of mortal life, Sister Rebecca Cave departed Sept. 17, '56, at her residence in DeKalb Co., Ala., in her 45th year, leaving a kind husband and eight children to mourn the loss. She previously buried a husband and twelve children. Sister Cave professed religion in Dallas Co., Ala., in 1837, and joined the M. E. Church, in which she was faithful until death. She was faithful in all the duties of life, as obedient wife, affectionate mother, a kind mistress and truly a devoted Christian; and as she lived so also she died.

WILLIE AND I.

We love to go to the Sabbath School—
Willie and I;

And be the weather foul or fair,
We purpose to be always there,
To listen to the opening prayer—
Willie and I.

Our teacher we do dearly love—
Willie and I;

She comes and takes us by the hand,
And points to the better land,
And tries to make us understand—
Willie and I.

Our father, mother, too we love—
Willie and I;

While many boys and girls are there,
Whose parents for them do not care,
We of the good things richly share—
Willie and I.

We ought to love the Savior most—
Willie and I;

For if we love and serve him best,
In His own bosom we shall rest,
And be in Heaven forever blest—
Willie and I.

A BAD HABIT.

"O mother, I am tired to death!" said Jane Mills, as she threw herself into a chair, on her return from school.

"Tired-to-death!" repeated mo slowly.

"Yes, mothe, I am; almost, I mean," she added.

"No, my daughter, not even almost," said Mrs. Mills.

"Well, at any rate," continued Jane, "I would not walk from here to school again to-day, for anything in the world!"

"O yes, you would, my dear," said her mother, gently.

"No, mother, I am sure I would not. I am certain nothing would tempt me."

"But I am nearly certain you could be induced to go, without any urging," answered her mother.

"Well, mother, try me, and see if anything could make me willing to go."

"Suppose," said Mrs. Mills, "I should offer to take you to the panorama this afternoon? I expect to visit it."

"Do you, mother?" said Jane, with great animation. "May I go? You promised to take me wheh you went."

"I intended to have done so," replied her mother; "but the place where it is exhibited is a very long way beyond your school."

"But I am quite rested now, dear mother!" said Jane. "I would not fail of going for all the world! Why do you smile, mother?"

"To think what an inconsistent little daughter I have."

"What do you mean by inconsistent, mother?"

"Why, when a little girl says, one minute, that she would not walk a particular distance for anything in the world,' and in the next minute says, 'she would not fail' of walking still farther 'for all the world,' she not only talks inconsistently, but foolishly. It a very bad habit to use such expressions.

"Yesterday, when you came home from school, you said you were almost frightened out of your life; and when I inquired as to the cause of your alarm, you replied that you had met as many as a thousand cross dogs on your way home from school. Now, my daughter, I wish you to break yourself of this bad habit. When you are tired, or hungry, or frightened, use the simple words that express your meaning. For instance, you may be tired, or exceedingly tired; or you may be alarmed, or terrified.

"From this time, let your lips speak the thing you mean. The Bible says, 'Let your yea be yea, and your nay be nay;' and adds, that 'whatsoever is more than these, cometh of evil.' Will you try to remember what I have been saying, and strive to correct this fault, my dear child?" said Mrs. Mills.

"Yes, dear mother," replied Jane "for I know it is wrong, and feel ashamed and sorry for it."

"Well, my dear," added her mother, "improve! And now you may get ready to go with me to see the panorama."—Teacher's Offering.

A Lesson for Boys.

Boys are admonished, by a sensible writer, to beware of the following descriptions of company, if they would avoid becoming like those who enter prison for their crimes:—1. Those who ridicule parents, or disobey their commands. 2. Those who profane the Sabbath, or scoff at religion. 3. Those who use profane or filthy language. 4. Those who are unfaithful, play truant, or waste their time in idleness. 5. Those who are of a quarrelsome temper. 6. Those who are addicted to lying and stealing. 7. Those who take pleasure in torturing animals and insects. 8. Those who loaf around grog-shops and drink whisky.—Presbyterian.

Child's Answer.

A father said playfully to his little daughter, a child five years old—

"Mary, you are not good for anything."

"Yes I am, dear father," replied she, looking thoughtfully and tenderly into his face; "I am good to love my father and my mother," she added, throwing her tiny arms around his neck, and giving him a kiss of unutterable affection.

Blessed child, may your life ever be an expression of that instinct of love! The highest good you or any other mortal can possibly confer is to live in the full exercise of your affection.

"YOU'RE A 'PRENTICE."—"O, you're a 'prentice!" said a little boy the other day, tauntingly to his companion. The addressed turned proudly round, and while the fire of injured pride and the look of pity were strongly blended in his countenance, coolly answered—"So was Franklin!"

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

AS IT IS THE DUTY OF MAN TO BOW DOWN IN HUMBLE submission to the chastening afflictions of Almighty God, and to bless and praise His holy name for the bestowal of benefits undeserved, so likewise, is it a solemn duty, incumbent on a nation and a people, to observe a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

And now, since God has bestowed upon this His favored land, His richest and choicest blessings—since we have such abundant cause to bless and praise His Holy name, I, Robert C. Wickliffe, Governor of the State of Louisiana, in pursuance of established custom, do set apart and appoint THURSDAY, the 18th day of December, to be observed throughout this State as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer; and I earnestly request all the good people of the State to assemble on that day in their respective places of worship, to give thanks and praise to Almighty God, the giver of all goodness. And I therefore issue this my proclamation, recommending and requesting all Bishops, Priests and Ministers of all creeds and denominations to call the faithful together on that day, that it may be made a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

Given under my hand and the seal of State at Baton Rouge, this 14th day of October, in the year of Our Lord one [L. S.] thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, and the year of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty first.

ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

THE lands are situated in Moorehouse Parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial sod, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction, and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. [jan12-1y] JAMES H. BRIGHAM.

For Sale.

1000 ACRES OF LAND in Colorado county, Texas, lying on either side of Clear Creek, on a credit of three years.

The improvements are just completed, large—of the latest style, and best materials. The land is most excellent, and all of it may be cultivated properly—for particulars enquire of the Editor—Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans. Corn and stock of every kind may be had with the place. 18 miles from Columbus on the Lockport Road.

SAW AND CORN MILLS.

PORTABLE CIRCULAR SAW MILLS,
WITH
Norcross' "Improved Rocker Boxes,"
AND LEE & LEAVITT'S
"IMPROVED HEAD BLOCKS."

The subscriber is now prepared to offer to the public, Circular Saw Mills, (usually called Page's,) with all the recent improvements since their first appearance. The Mills now offered are made about one-third stronger than those heretofore in use, and those made by Page at present; combining, as they do, all the improvements and the additional strength both in the iron and wood work—are undoubtedly the best Mill ever offered. Engines and Horse Powers suitable for these mills are furnished when required.

Norcross' Patent consists in suspending the saw so that it can have a lateral vibration, and, when thrown out of line, will recover itself by the action of the driving belt, and the arrangement of the parts by which it is sustained, while, at the same time, the arbor has no lateral play in its boxes, and is made to fit close with the shoulders, to prevent the oil from getting out, while in operation; a matter of great importance when the motion is rapid as in circular saws.

Lee & Leavitt's Patent consists in enabling one man to move the log on the ways with ease and with the greatest accuracy, thereby saving one man's wages, and making better work than mills with the usual Screw Head Blocks.

J. H. BURROWS'
Patent Plantation Corn and Flouring Mills.
THE BEST NOW IN USE.

This Mill differs from all others in the construction of the Upper or Runner Stone, which is composed of French Burr Blocks, enclosed in a Cast Iron Case, and forms the back and hoop of the Stone, with a Cast Iron Eye or Bush, that is of greater external diameter at the bottom than at the top, is secured to the back by four bolts, so that every block is in the form of a dovetail, which gives greater strength to a Stone than any other method that is required in small Mills where the stone is run with great speed and becomes dangerous if not strongly made; it also gives any weight to a Stone of small diameter that is required, without making it thick or high.

They can be run by either Gin, Horse, Water or Steam Power, and require no Millwright to set them up.

ADVANTAGES.

1st. Sufficient weight in the Runner Stone to crush the Grist, without having to supply pressure to the Runner Stone from the Driving Power, as most Unfinished Mills have to do; this is of great importance when Horse Power is used.

2nd. When the Stone is running, its own momentum acts like the Fly Wheel of an Engine, affording regularity and speed to its motion. If a Mill does not run true and regular you cannot make good meal or flower.

3rd. The Stone is composed of four or five French Burr Blocks, because single blocks of sufficient size cannot be had without having soft or imperfect pieces in them.

4th. The Stone having this great weight is enabled to grind near the centre a larger quantity with less power than any other mill now in use.

5th. This Mill is a square frame, made of wood, in the form of a husk: the 24 inch occupying a space of only 4 or 5 feet square.

6th. This Mill is simply and strongly constructed, and less liable to get out of order than any other Mill, and does not require a Millwright to set them up.

7th. The Gearing and Pullies of these Mills are all of Iron, and are preferable because there never is necessity of crossing the band, or of extra pullies to keep it in place; the band does not get cut and worn as in the case of Single Geared Mills; nor is their danger in putting the band on or off the pulley as in Single Geared Mills.

8th. By the steady application of Steam Power, the 24 inch Mill will grind 7 to 12 bushels per hour, of good meal, and will grind wheat as well as corn. The 30 inch Mill will grind 12 to 15 bushels per hour; the 36 inch 20 or more bushels per hour, with proper speed.

More than 2500 of these Mills have been used, principally in the South and West, and never have any been returned from failing to please. The above Mill is warranted to give entire satisfaction, or may be returned at our expense.

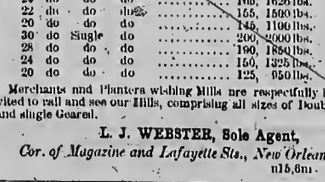
COLEMAN'S



PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING MILLS. French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block. Seven different kinds of these Mills are manufactured, adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The Burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet: which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices of from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of the Burr, power applied, and velocity given.

The Mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (fourteen inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal, in four and a half minutes.

Those desiring such Mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor, WILLIS P. COLEMAN.

THE SABBATH IN ITS MATERIAL AND TEMPORAL ASPECTS.

It has been well said that the "Sabbath is God's gracious gift to a working and weary world." Many have been wont to regard the Sabbath as having only a religious value, and its observance a sacrifice of the material interests of life; that if one doubts his immortality, or chooses to postpone its consideration, he may violate the rest of the Sabbath, not only without loss, but with positive material gain. We propose briefly to consider and combat this opinion; and, fortunately, we are not driven into a metaphysical and speculative train of reasoning to do so, but can keep within the circle of homely and generally-admitted facts.

No animal can maintain unceasing motion for any considerable length of time. Men have, a few times, for great wagers, and as an extraordinary feat, walked without ceasing, at a slow pace, forty or fifty hours; but this is the utmost that has been done or can be done. All animals, and man viewed as such, must have rest. How much rest is necessary? Some have seemed to maintain, by their practice, that eight hours out of twenty-four for rest, and one more for meals, was all the rest that man needed. Many experiments have demonstrated that nine or even ten hours' rest in each twenty-four, without any intervening day of rest, are not enough. A robust man may, perhaps, do more work in one or two months, by working seven instead of six days in the week; but if the experiment be prolonged to six or twelve months, it will be found that he does less than another of equal strength who rested on every seventh day. The reason of it is plain: his energies will flag, and his movements become slow and feeble. Medical writers affirm that hard labor long protracted produces a nervous irritation, and destroys or, at least, disturbs the "balance" or harmony of the arterial circulation. They teach that experiment demonstrates, that the ordinary nightly rest of the laboring man, is not enough to restore this balance of the circulation—that there must be an occasional intervening day of rest. One day in seven does not seem to be too much; experience has shown that it is enough. I need not stop here to enlarge upon the manifold advantages to business interest and social enjoyment which a fixed and generally observed day has over an irregular and indefinite day of rest; this can be seen and felt upon a moment's reflection.

Let us now look at a few of the experiments that have been made. In European manufacturing establishments that produce the finest fabrics, laces and the like, descriptions of goods requiring the most delicate handling, it has been observed that the goods produced in the latter part of the week are not so good and perfectly finished as those produced in the former part; the reason given is, that the muscles are stiffer, less pliable, and the attention has become dulled by constant application. The bow needs to be unstrung occasionally to regain its elasticity.

Cattle driven several hundreds of miles to market, if driven every day, do not get to market so soon, or command so good a price, as those that are rested one-seventh part of their time; because those driven every day become feverish, weary and worn, and reach market worse fitted.

Proprietors of large manufacturing establishments who kept several teams constantly hauling back and forth the raw material and manufactured article, have made experiments, and have found that those teams which rested a seventh part of their time lasted longer, drew heavier loads, and made them more money than those that worked every day in the week.

All this holds not only as true in relation to man as to other animals, but more so; because man's intellectual and moral nature necessarily come into the question, and they operate no small influence upon his physical organization. Let life be one long drudge—one unbroken scene of labor—and it becomes to toiling millions an intolerable burden: no hope of rest, of pleasing change, or social enjoyment—nothing to give elasticity and cheerfulness to the spirits. Such a state of mind as such a life would necessarily superinduce, would most powerfully and sadly react upon the body. The muscles would become still, the movements slow and heavy, the attention dulled and careless, until the unhappy victim of toil would become, in a few years, a miserable and worthless drone. This constitution of our nature is a gracious provision of Providence to compel the oppressive, unthinking and unfeeling, to a reluctant humanity. The proprietor must rest his operatives, or lose more than he gains.

Take away the Sabbath from the toiling millions, and you rob their life of its brightest charms. Suppose the clerk ever in the store, bending over the counter; the artizan ever in the shop, wielding his tools; and the laborer in the field with the hoe, the plow or scythe his constant care,—what would life be worth to them in its material and temporal aspects? Surely, if this were all they could realize, they might well exclaim, "I would not live always," but ardently long for the rest of the grave and envy those already there.

The Seventh Day brings sweet relief to weary multitudes, not only when it comes, but the thought that it will come and break the monotony of their toil, sustains them and enables them to labor with cheerful activity.

The laboring millions on the Day of Rest, in accordance with a custom which the day itself has introduced, doff their labor-soiled garments for more cleanly, graceful and elegant attire; this promotes their health, and tends to elevate them with a feeling of dignified self-respect.

How delightful is the domestic joy and social intercourse of the laboring man on the day of rest, with the objects of his toils,—enjoyed with a keener zest because debarred from it on other days; in winter, around the cheerful fire or smoking board; in summer time, beside the brook and under the shade of trees, pleasantly passing the hours away.—Such a day and such a season of homely joy is a green oasis amid the desert scenes of every day life.

It is, to my mind, one of the most pleasing aspects of the labor-saving machinery and travel-speeding improvements and facilities of the times, that they hold out a prospect of a more general observance of the Day of Rest.—These improvements are fast doing away the least excuse of a grasping and oppressive covetousness for requiring work on the Day of Rest.

J. B. WALKER.

Truth Somewhat Colored.

An English tourist in America gives in Colburn's London Magazine, some sketches of what he observed and some hits at faults, which, though a little colored, possess much truth. He was in Washington during the struggle for the Speakership, and speaks, as follows of what he saw. What he says of our filthy habit of spitting is very little, if at all exaggerated:

"If a debate springs up it seems to be a game of cross questions and crooked answers. A member is making a speech, when a question is put to him. His answer suggests other questions, and, while commenting on the replies, the questioner in turn is questioned by some one else, and so on. When a member appears to be uttering the last sentence of his speech, half a dozen or more members are on their legs, calling out, 'Mr. Clerk! Mr. Clerk!' amid shouts from all parts of the hall, 'Call the roll! call the roll!' You will often have no small difficulty to hear what is said or understand what is going on, from the incessant noise and bustle. There is a constant sharp striking of letters and papers on the desk—a mode the members have of summoning the pages to take their documents to the post-box.—You are amazed, too, at the picturesque attitude of some of the members. You are quite right in remarking that this is a Democratic assembly. Is not that an elegant posture now of the honorable gentlemen in the outer range of seats? He has flung one leg over the desk in front, the heel of his boot dipping in the ink bottle, and while his chair is tilted back and his other leg flung over one arm of it, he chews his quid, picks his teeth, and squirts his tobacco juice at his neighbor's spittoon, which he misses. This is Yankee way of 'taking it easy.'

"The Americans seem to have an unconquerable propensity to kick up their heels—not behind, but before. I have gone into the reading room of the Young Men's Christian Association, on the avenue, and found, of four men reading, three with their feet on the table and the fourth baking his in the oven of the stove. On more than one occasion, while sitting in the galleries of Congress, I have received a poke at the back of my head, and, turning round, have discovered in close proximity, not anybody's elbow or hat, but a pair of boots, with feet in them, resting on the back of my seat, on an elevation with the chair of the owner. But a more disagreeable thing than that is the chewing and spitting. In Congress the carpets in the galleries are saturated, and the stair-case walls filthily discolored with tobacco juice. In the streets, when the snow was on the ground, it looked as if people had been walking all over the city with leaky cans of molasses."

INFANTILE CONVERSION.

NUMBER III.

To examine the possibility of a conversion before the knowledge (i. e. commission) of sin. The conditions necessary to an evangelical conversion are the following:—

1. A rational and conscious being.
2. A sense of innate depravity.
3. Faith in a revealed plan of salvation.

These are all and the sole conditions of conversion in any way depending on the act of the creature. Of course there are certain divine conditions to conversion, but these were all provided and afforded at the moment when Jesus expired upon the cross, exclaiming, "It is finished." According to our theology the immovable foundations there laid, were broad enough to include the wants of the whole world, regardless of age, or sex, or condition; and we shall attempt to show that this plan is as available to one period of life as to another, after moral consciousness, i. e. the sense of right and wrong, has been at all developed. As a free Gospel overruns every distinction of an outward character, so we believe it regards the whole life of man, from the cradle to the grave, as being the purchase of redeeming grace and dying love.

The first condition which we have proposed as necessary to a true conversion is, the existence of a rational and conscious being. All other creatures are incapable of conversion, as lying without the pale of moral responsibility. Such are babes, idiots, and every part of the creation falling below the acknowledged standard of rationality. To all such it is impossible to conceive of the atonement as being applicable, until they have passed on to a higher state of being, until they become rational. They are incapable of religion, because incapable of sin, incapable of moral action. To reason with such creatures, to attempt to teach them, to offer them reward or punishment, would be beneath the Government of the Divine Being, as it is beneath that of parents and legislators. But there is a certain stage of development marked by the rise of consciousness, at which the actions of a child begin to be spoken of as right or wrong, from which period that child rises to the dignity of a subject of moral government, is held responsible for its actions, receives reward and punishment from its parents, and is made (to use a common but proper phrase) to know its place:—then it becomes rational and conscious and the first condition is fulfilled.

I apprehend there would be no difficulty in the mind of any one, in admitting that our first condition is fulfilled in the case of all children who have learned the use of the ordinary signs of ideas, (i. e. words and gestures) were it not for a fallacious distinction which is made between the authority of parents and and the authority of God. This fallacy consists in supposing that the child is responsible to its parent before it is responsible to God: and that as long as parental authority can be maintained there is no room for divine authority: but that so soon as the child becomes old enough to act for itself, and thus passes beyond the boundary of parental authority, that it then becomes subject to the law of God, and not before. Hence in this state of pupilage they use no means for the conversion of the child, regarding it as not yet being the subject of Divine Government. But is there any evidence that God regards it so? Or that He uses no means to bring that child to a knowledge of himself? or that Satan so regards it, when he is constantly using every art to prepossess the mind of the child in favor of himself?

This dangerous and often fatal fallacy, will be laid open and the true ground laid open and the true ground revealed, in two ways—

1. By showing that Our Heavenly Father regards children as being the immediate subjects of His moral government, and

2. That the only lawful parental authority is derived from the Divine and is identical with it. The same arguments which will establish the first proposition will establish the second also.

1. One of the ten commandments is addressed to children, and to them exclusively, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." That this was for children and not for adult sons and daughters, is shown both by the nature of the promise, and by its being quoted by the Apostle Paul as addressed to children.

2. The call of Samuel when he was a child.

3. The children who were devoured by bears for mocking at God's prophet.

4. The prophetic declaration, "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou dost perfect praise," fulfilled by the rejoicing of children in the presence of our Savior in the temple.

5. Christ's word about young children, "Of each is the kingdom of heaven," and "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye can not enter the kingdom of heaven."

6. The Apostle: "Children obey your parents in the Lord."

The inference is unavoidable from these few but sufficient quotations of Scripture, that children are the subjects of Divine Government and that parents are his constituted agents for the execution of that Government, having no authority apart from that. The last quotation shows this point conclusively.

It would indeed be most unreasonable to suppose that God's own authority were excluded by an authority of His own institution, any more than that men are not responsible to Him, simply because they are responsible to earthly tribunals of His appointment. The truth is that the whole regime of the family Government was set up on earth as a type and pattern of God's own Government. The relation of parent and child is the only thing in this world that properly represents that between God and His children. By creation we are His offspring; by regeneration his children; by adoption his heirs. Yet the beauty and significance of all these terms are derived from the family relation. How utterly at fault therefore any theory which ignores religious responsibility to any rational and conscious member of the Heaven-appointed family! God's moral government underlies and outlies all parental authority whatever, and the strongest appeal which parents can make for the obedience of their children, is an appeal to the Divine Law. That Law precedes and sustains all rightful authority which they may hold upon their children.

If it were necessary to make a separate argument to show the particular application of the plan of Redemption to children, it would only be necessary to allude to the fact that death, the penalty of sin, has dominion over them, and therefore that Christ "who came to destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil," must have included them in the provisions of his atonement. Wherefore it has always been the faith of the Church, though resting on no special text of Scripture that persons dying in infancy before they have sinned, must infallibly be saved. I will not take advantage of this article of faith, to prove the possibility of infant conversion, though it necessarily supposes it, inasmuch as we are arguing for the living and not for the dead,—for a conscious conversion and not an unconscious one. In my next you will hear from condition No. 2.

JUVENIS.

A Good Hit.

A Methodist divine of this city, on Sunday last, administered a most severe rebuke to a common custom in these days, of reading advertisements from the pulpit. A paper was handed to him, giving notice that "the introductory lecture of the annual course would be delivered on Monday night," &c., at a certain Medical institution in this city. The preacher said he had conscientious scruples against cheating the printer by making such announcements in the pulpit; that he never heard such advertisements read in church without reminding him of the deacon in Alexandria, who, on a certain occasion, exhorted, in most earnest and vehement language, the sinners in the congregation to repent or they would all go to hell as sure as there was flour for sale in Alexandria, and he was sure there was flour there, for he had received, just the day before, a fine assortment, which he would sell as cheap as any man in the city.—Ohio Statesman.

INTOLERANCE.—Men, in general, cannot now endure to think that their own narrow church holds all the goodness on earth. True, much intolerance remains; its separating walls are not fallen, but, with few exceptions, they no longer reach to the clouds. Many of them have crumbled away, till the men whom they sever, can shake hands, and exchange words of fellowship, and recognize in one another's faces the features of brethren.

We should endeavor to pass through this world with a cheerful indifference.

Vain thoughts are sin's advocates, and Christ's adversaries.

UNCONSCIOUSNESS OF DEEP GUILT.

Men, if is true, cannot help but feel that, however criticism may explain away its language, yet the word of God does, with most appalling energy and precision, portray the utter evil of the human heart, exhausting all the forms of rhetoric in its stern invective. It declares, negatively, that in the natural mind there dwelleth no good thing; and positively, that the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. It asserts specifically that there is none that doeth good—no, not one. It arraigns every sense as an inlet to corruption, and brands every member of the body as the instrument of sin; and with fearful analysis, seizing each separate faculty of thought, and each affection and moral capability, it exhibits every ingredient of human character as vile and hopeless. Yet, however we may be stunned and overwhelmed by the storm of denunciations thus hurled upon us, few have failed to realize that these fearful changes have not a corresponding witness within our own hearts. When men brand us, they generally appeal to our consciousness of guilt, and to the common sentiment of mankind. God himself, in charging home particular transgressions upon men, has appealed to their own sense of duty, and guilt, and shame. But clearly as the Bible seems to speak, the human race, although conscious of much infirmity and of many faults, is certainly not smitten with the remorseless sense of such enormous guilt. That conscience which men have called the voice of God within us, seems to rebuke the so-called doctrine of the written word. The ancient prophet seemed to feel the inconsistency, when, before he declared the desperate wickedness of the heart, he observed that it was deceitful above all things; implying, perhaps, what we shall attempt to prove, that according to the present constitution of things, insensibility to sinfulness is a natural accompaniment of sinfulness itself, and grows with its growth. The unconsciousness of sin and guilt, therefore, cannot argue its absence; and the admitted fact in general experience does not invalidate the charge of revelation.

As we wander amid the sublime scenes of nature, or gather around the beautiful creations of art, the spell of our enjoyment is too often broken by the presence of one who has no eye nor ear for their varied loveliness. In a community many are conspicuous, whose dress and furniture, or architecture, or equipage, show an entire absence of that perception of the graceful and the beautiful, of propriety and fitness in things, which we familiarly call good taste. The incongruity would be less annoying, could they be made to feel their deficiency and correct their absurdities; but we feel the hopelessness of the attempt. They may have a generous yearning for the esteem of others, or a timid sensitiveness to inconsiderate ridicule; and these may lead them to sacrifice personal inclination, and to a servile imitation of prevailing modes and fashions. But however they may treasure up rules by which to adapt forms, and colors, and expressions, to the true standard of beauty and propriety, you can only teach them that they have not a sensibility which others seem to enjoy. You cannot create the personal consciousness of absurdity: that instinctive sense of the ludicrous and unfitting which others feel, and which would enable them to decide rightly in new cases, and which might bring the glow of shame when they transgressed its dictates, cannot be imparted. They may admit, but they cannot realize their absurdities. Just in proportion to the depravity of taste, they are insensible to the fact. They know it only by faith in the testimony of others.

But if some malicious spirit could lay upon an entire continent the spell of such æsthetic stupor and blindness, the poor victims of absurdity would not only be increased in number, but their self-complacency would be hopelessly secure. Society would feel the folly of the transgressors as little as they feel their own. The only hope of imparting a knowledge of their deficiency would be, that some visitant from a more genial clime, which had somehow a prestige of infallibility in matters of taste, might come to instruct and counsel. But even if the very centre of taste should send its delegate to become their guide, how evident is it that they could not understand the justice of his plain censures. They would unite, perhaps, in believing that, somehow, they were ridiculously at fault, but they would also unite in saying that they could not feel it. Only by restoring the taste itself, which might render rebukes unnecessary, could not make them realize their force. Imagine, for a moment, that the round earth were thus bound by a Circean spell, and obviously no thought of the universal folly and degradation would disturb them. Were a messenger from heaven to announce their depravity in taste, he would be met by the same wonder, the same theoretical admission, the same inward unconsciousness of fault. In short, the deficiency might be held as a matter of faith, but never as a fact of experience or consciousness.

Now we aver that, analogous to the operation of this faculty, which wakes the soul to the full power of all that is beautiful and harmonious in the material creation, and all that is inspiring in thought and in sentiment, is our experience of that moral taste, and sensibility to the beauty of holiness and the pollution of sin, which alone can guide us in the way of moral excellence. The laws which govern the one are analogous to the laws which regulate the other. The defective or depraved moral taste, at each successive stage of deterioration, is attended by a corresponding insensibility to the change; and a total depravity of moral taste would bring as complete unconsciousness of fault. The heart, beneath such a benumbing spell, may, through fear or favor, obey the law of right. It may theoretically admit its deficiencies and practical errors; but the deep sense of its own true vileness it cannot have. And, by the same analogy, if a community, or a nation, or a world, were thus morally defective, there would be no fair appeal against the charge of personal guilt to the moral sentiment of that world at large. It would, of course, sustain itself in its own unconsciousness of its true position. Should a voice from amid the thunders of Sinai, or from the inmost heaven, declare the corruption of the race, reason might demand submission to the verdict, but the truth could not be realized by the depraved mind. It must be a conviction of faith, and not of feeling.

We are not saying how it may be in another sphere of existence, or in the life beyond the grave; but reasoning upon man as he is, under the present dispensation of things, certainly observation justifies our conclusion. Sin brings its own insensibility. The most hardened criminal who awaits the fatal hour, once shrunk from slight transgressions; but as step by step he ventured into crime, his sensibility grew dull, until, while there was much which he still felt to be crime indeed, yet he could perpetrate, with scarcely a thought of shame or fear, villanies that would once have palsied his arm. And now he knows indeed, theoretically, his sinfulness; and can discriminate abstractly, slight shades of wrong, according to principles of moral judgment learned in other days: but he has long since ceased to feel them. He can now caronse, and sin, and blaspheme, until all around him shiver with dread, and yet be calm, and think their scruples weakness or hypocrisy. His principles and his sensibility have declined together.

The illustration drawn thus from æsthetics may furnish further instruction, if we observe in those who have but little taste, the distinct elements of a power to see the beautiful, and a desire for the beautiful; and that the perception of what is correct and fitting is far in advance, generally, of the real sensibility to its presence or absence. We meet many whose judgment is tolerably accurate, but their conformity is seldom so exact, even where no special hindrance prevents it. We can easily imagine, that if to a spell-bound world some slight endowment of returning taste were given, then in a low degree its citizens might judge correctly of proprieties, and could understand the nature of a deficiency in taste, although they could not realize the full extent of their own defect. If by neglect or abuse they gradually lost the slight insensibility thus bestowed, would it not be fair to argue that, just as their arrangements are now absurd, and would be felt so had they not lost the measure of taste they had; so, while they yet had this measure of true perception, at their best day, they may have been guilty of a thousand follies, which even then they had not taste enough to realize?

May we not say, then, that even if the Creator should give to such a world, utterly sunk in sin, some slight moral restoration, the analogy would still hold good? Might we not expect the same limited discrimination in certain cases, or in certain grades of moral obligations—the same disproportion between the abstract perception of moral beauty and the sensibility which is drawn toward it? And might we not argue, as from the instance of a hardened criminal, that just as he cannot now feel the enormity of his crimes, yet he, as well as those around him, did once feel their guilt; so he and all of us, in our best days, may have been insensible to wrongs committed, and evil passions cherished, not because their guilt was not real and appalling, but because even then we were still so depraved that we could not feel it?

The argument which we have thus far drawn from the deadening influence of transgression on the moral sense, step by step, is yet more beautifully and forcibly illustrated by the reverse experience of those who are renewed in the love of God. We appeal to the experience and to the testimony of the holiest, in every age. As they became more and more partakers of the divine nature, freed from the depravity which was once their felt nature, they realized with increasing vividness of apprehension how far they had fallen, how basely they transgressed, how fearfully they treasured up just wrath. Then they saw the exceeding sinfulness of sin; and when most conscious of salvation through grace, "quite on the verge of heaven," they felt most fully how lost they were by nature, how near the verge of hell. Nor are such experiences exceptions in the Church; but they are the common heritage of her saints century after century, finding a response in myriads of retired and unpublished Christian lives. The brilliant intellect, and sober judgment, the habitual self-denial, the practical energy, which have marked so many moral heroes of the Church, who thus breathe out their feeling, forbid the cavil that their heightened sense of guilt was the result of a blundering logic, or a morbid nervousness, or the pretence of hypocrisy. They leave us to reflect that if we had attained their piety, our purified vision might see things in the same strong light. And, O! when perfect purity of heart combines with perfect clearness of intellect in the world to come, who shall say that we may not fully coincide with the severe judgments passed by Him whose wisdom and purity is infinite? Then may we see the truthfulness of those strong charges of sin and guilt, and the justice of those penalties, which now to the best of us seems oftentimes so obscure.—Natural Goodness, (Mercein.)

From the American Messenger.

Always Have a Shot Ready.

God bless the memory of Allenie.—Though dead, he speaketh, and that effectually. A little time since, a mate of a bark offered himself for membership in the Mariner's church of Philadelphia. On being asked to relate his experience, he said he was first awakened and made to feel that he was a sinner, by reading Alleine's Alarm. He then went to his knees, and gave himself no rest until he found peace to his soul in Jesus Christ.

Long before this fact came to my knowledge, I adopted the plan of keeping on hand this book, and Baxter's Call, and James' Anxious Inquirer; but now I feel more like it than ever.

How easy to keep such shot on hand. Do I step aboard of a vessel, I can give a copy of Allenie; and if I perfume it with prayer, I am sure others will rise up to praise God. Do I call in a man to fix my stove, how easy to give him a tract, and invite him to attend church.—Do I ride through the country, how easy to give a book or tract in the house by the road-side. Have I an American Messenger, or any other religious paper, how much better, instead of laying it away, finally to be destroyed, to give or mail it to some one.

Last year I distributed upon the great waters 2,050 volumes, and 188,000 pages of tracts, and many Messengers. If any one feels like putting more of these "shot in my locker," he may address Rev. J. B. Ripley, pastor, Mariner's church, Water Street, above Walnut, Philadelphia.

O the thanksgivings which have ascended because of the Tract Society, which puts the materials into the hands of any who wish to do this kind of work.

A Modern Solomon.

AN INTERESTING SCENE IN THE SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK.—The New York correspondent of the Baltimore American relates the following incident which occurred during the session of the Supreme Court, on the morning of the 22d ult.

The business of the Supreme Court yesterday was varied by a judgment somewhat after the manner of Solomon. A man and his wife who have separated, contended for the custody of a little daughter, the wife alledging that though herself in the receipt of the bounty of the husband for a support, he was incapacitated for the charge of the child by intemperance and bad temper. In return he made a similar charge against the wife, and said he was abundantly able to take care of the child. The judge referred the matter, to take testimony and report. The question then was as to who should have the care of the child in the meantime. The judge said he would give it to which everparent it chose to go with. The father then had the child in his arms, and his wife sitting at some little distance from him. The judge directed the child to be stood on the floor, and the parents to sit so as to be seen by it. The child went back first to its father, but its mother called it by name, when the child ran to her, and she caught it up in her arms, and was permitted by the judge to take it with her, much to the satisfaction, apparently, of both. The parties appeared to be highly respectable, and not at all deserving of what they ascribe to each other. Truly "each heart knoweth its own bitterness."

"With Authority."

Christianity speaks with divine authority, allowing no contradiction or appeal, and demanding the assent of all men to its claims, as the only true religion. The Christian cannot say to his friend—his intelligent, well-read friend You have your opinion, I have mine.—We are on a level. As a gentleman, I can no more question your belief than you can mine. I cannot say to you, believe the gospel or you are lost. But can we conceive of Paul thus dealing with educated unbelievers? Allowing the apostles and the preacher to be lost in the gentleman and the philosopher? No. He does not so discuss Christianity as if men might lawfully take different sides respecting its divine and exclusive character. He knows that the gospel of Christ is the only true religious system, and, whether among the rude Lycaonians, the refined Corinthians, or the inquisitive, philosophic Athenians, he is ever the same uncompromising preacher of Christianity, ready always with meekness to listen to honest questionings, and to give good reasons for his faith, yet intolerant toward every other system—not in the spirit of a bigot but of one who knew whereof he affirms, and who so loves Christ and his fellowmen, that he cannot yield an inch of that gospel which honors the one and saves the other. This he must urge upon every man. The gospel is from heaven, believe and be saved, reject and be lost.

The love of Christ hath a height without a top, a depth without a bottom, a length without an end, and a breadth without a limit.

If thou art not afraid of the world, I fear thou art a friend of the world, and an enemy to God.

The heart of man is such a barren soil, that no good can grow therein, unless Almighty grace plant it.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

ROME, CHRISTIAN AND PAPAL—Sketches of its religious monuments and ecclesiastical History, with notices of the Jesuits and the Inquisition. By L. De Sanctis, D. D., New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1856. From H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, New Orleans.

This book is a 12 mo. of 256 pages, and, of such interest, that we nearly finished it at a single reading. The hidden corruptions of the Papacy are disclosed by one who had rare opportunities of knowing them. The style and method are not in the beaten track, but original and able. The whole performance abounds in instruction and entertainment. We heartily commend the work to those who wish to be posted on the subject of Romanism, and who seek to be well fortified against its errors and abuses.

BEAUMARCHAIS AND HIS TIMES—Sketches of French Society in the Eighteenth Century, from unpublished documents. By Louis De Lomenie. Translated by Henry S. Edwards, New York: Harper and Brothers, publishers, 1856.

This book is interesting and of considerable value as a repository of manners and personal sketches. It is very French, and beyond doubt a truthful picture of the times of which it treats. H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, New Orleans.

LAKE NGAMI—Or explorations and discoveries during four years wandering in the wilds of South Western Africa. By Charles John Anderson, with numerous illustrations. N. Y.: Harper and Brothers, publishers. H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, N. O.

The author has traveled over some new ground and brings new facts to light, concerning portions of South Western Africa. The manners, customs, morals and religion of the natives engage his attention. The most startling adventures are narrated, and hair breath escapes by blood and field. The author's hunting excursions are particularly wide-awake. Noble game, too, such as the Lion, Tiger, Elephant, Rhinoceros, Giraff, Hippopotamus and Ostrich. The author brings out some new and interesting materials in the department of natural history.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I RESUME the minutes according to the journals, which the courteous Secretary places at my convenience.—

Friday afternoon the case of William Hurst, a probationer, was called; and he was dropt. The numbers in Society were called for, with this result:

	WHITES.		COLORED.
	Memb.	Prob.	Memb.	Prob.
This year,	13,031	3,423	9,680	3,400
Last year,	13,586	2,716	10,986	2,825
Decrease,	355	In. 707	Dec. 1,306	In. 575

On Saturday the discontinuance of Benjamin Avent was reconsidered; and he was continued on trial. He is from the Presbytery. Edwin Mortimer was passed in character, and located at his own request.

The following local preachers were elected: To Elder's Orders—William G. Bartlett; to Deacon's Orders—J. D. Bruner, John R. Cox. On the recommendation of the Quarterly Meeting Conference of East Feliciana Circuit, the parchments of William Collinsworth, a local elder, were restored. Josiah M. Pugh was admitted into full connection.

The stewards will divide to Conference claimants at about 45 per cent. There was an interesting debate about discriminating between the claimants—leaving out some that were not needy, and giving the mere to those that were.—The General Conference authorized the discrimination. Hitherto this body has not applied it; they now apply it. Yet, the dividend, how small! Who is to blame?

On Monday Dr. Hollins was received into this Conference from a Baltimore Quarterly Conference, according to the disciplinary provision.

The proceedings of the Conference are marked by an excellent spirit.

THE MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

This was held, Saturday night, in the Methodist Church—a small house, into which was compressed a large and liberal audience. Dr. Drake in the chair.—The secretary, W. P. Barton, read a terse and appropriate report. The treasurer, W. H. Watkins, gave forth a good note: $10,900 the missionary collections of the past year—an advance on any previous year's work of $4,000.

Dr. Hamilton made the opening speech in his happiest style. It was a novel speech, combining the brilliancy of sheet lightning with the thunder's bolt. By programme, the writer was to follow him, and the Bishop to bring up the rear, supplying any lack of service. I felt that the cause could be best served, under the circumstances, by declining to serve it—made a sensible speech (though I say it myself)—a speech declining to speak, and making way for the Bishop. Bishop Pierce's efforts on such occasions mark an era of enlarged views and increased gifts. Rubbing out all former memorials, he strikes for new figures, and reaches them. No hat collections, no singing, but the stern business of doing is the order of the night. His tongue is a magnet upon the dollars in one's pocket. The collection and subscription of the evening was over $1,200. About $900 of this sum was contributed by the preachers; but it is a good sign. It shows they feel the weight of the appeals they make to the people. They are sincere; and they will make these sincere feelings tell upon the Church at large. I believe some of them gave above their ability; but it is a safe excess. The compensation will come, abundantly; and tens will produce hundreds, and hundreds thousands. So, let the preachers bleed at anniversaries.

THE SABBATH.

The clouds fled—the sun shone out.—It was a lovely fair day, the only one during the Conference. Bishop Pierce preached at the Methodist Church, and ordained Deacons: W. S. Townsend, W. Harrington, H. D. Berry, J. J. Wheat, E. F. Mullins, J. S. Harris, J. English, O. H. P. Davis, William H. Crawford, H. Flint.

After three o'clock sermon, by L. Campbell, the Bishop ordained Elders: J. A. B. Jones, A. B. Nicholson, J. Shelton, B. J. Woodward, H. M. Youngblood, J. O. Woodward W. C. Matthews, Isham Morehead, W. G. Bartlett.

I had not the pleasure of hearing the episcopal sermon, being detailed for services, at the same hour, to the Presbyterian Church. Thrice have I been the victim of that episcopal hour in the Mississippi Conference; and now my time is up, I hope. Fortunately, or unfortunately, the overflowings of the Bishop's congregation made up a very respectable one for the Editor. But not till I had taken up and put down two different texts, did my congregation come to a head. I must have some idea whom I preach to, before I know what to preach about; and then the thought that nine-tenths of the congregation had rather ——well, there is no use saying more.

The Baptist Church was to be filled, at same hour, by Dr. Hamilton. He was there, but it wasn't full. It was a question which of us should hold out against the other, for our churches were not far apart. I beat the doctor. He finally struck his colors, and came over to me, bringing along a few souls, that is to say about twelve, his whole capital in the way of a congregation; they filled up a few of my empty benches. I am bound to say, that in this contest I had one advantage of the doctor: Presbyterians are great at holding on to their own house. They will stand to their rack on fodder or shucks, while their neighbors are cracking corn. Though their pastor followed the multitude to hear the Bishop, some of his flock stood by me.

This gave me a nucleus. But Dr. Hamilton was incontinently deserted by the Bishop, pastor and people—save one only, who I suspect was left to watch him, and see that he sprinkling was carried on.

The Tract Anniversary was held on Sunday night. The secretary and Rev. C. K. Marshall presented the matter and did it well. The collection amounted to $149. The agent, H. H. Montgomery, represented that during the year $2,000 had been collected as donations; at the depository in Vicksburg, books and tracts had been received from Nashville to the amount of $13,135. Sold at the depository and sent out on sale, $9,600 worth. The Conference will favor procuring a house and lot in New Orleans—say at $20,000, for the depository of books and tracts, for this and the Louisiana, Alabama, Texas, East Texas and Ouachita Conferences.

On motion of Dr. Drake, the Educational Convention of Nashville was concurred in, and a delegate from this Conference appointed to its next meeting, his expenses to be borne by the Conference. Dr. Drake was appointed said delegate.

L. Pearce presented $150, the receipts of a piano, bequeathed to this Conference for the education of preachers' daughters, by Miss Adelaide A. Geren.

The Conference will adjourn Tuesday, I may send you the appointments by next mail. H. N. M.

HOLMES MISSION, ALA. CONFERENCE.

As I am about to close my labors on this field, it becomes my duty to report the condition of the work during the third and fourth quarters. We received on trial thirteen, into full fellowship ten, baptized one, dropped one, expelled one, and one has died. We have taken in one new appointment. The work is by no means prosperous. This has been missionary ground for the last twenty odd years; but there has been but little accomplished. There is too little public spirit to do much soon. We have collected for missions, eighteen dollars. The mission ought to be merged into other works, as nothing can be done with it in its present form.

This country has been well scourged with storms for the last six years; within that space we have had four, the last of which was on the 30th and 31st of August last; it raged with great violence for the space of twenty-four hours. During the time of this storm I found no place that could keep me dry. I have been much exposed during the present year, and have had a few fevers and a few hemorrhages of the right lung.

Murder is quite common here. A lad about eight years of age committed suicide not long since; another lad of nearly the same age was accused of murdering the boy; this caused much disputing throughout the neighborhood. A Baptist minister was called to preach the funeral of the lad, but when the congregation met the doors of the church were barred against them. As the house was built free for all, this caused an altercation between a Methodist and a Baptist, which resulted in the death of the latter.

A few weeks since a couple of children were found drowned in a well, they were hastily taken out and buried without a jury of inquest being called to examine them, and without the knowledge of the mother of them.

This country can never prosper with its present population of evil doers. There are some good citizens, but not enough to execute the laws of the land properly.

West Florida is a beautiful country, and is worthy of a better population. The country is overlooked and greatly undervalued. Choctawhatchee river and its tributary streams have more good land on them, than the people generally are aware of. There is generally a fine foundation of clay, and in many places a conglomerate of lime and shells. There are many fine lakes here, which may be brought into cultivation at a moderate cost. The soil in them is alluvial, and produces corn, cotton, rice and sugar very well. J. BOND.

We can never bless God enough for his patience, that hath kept us so long out of hell; nor for his mercy, that so earnestly invites us to heaven.

REVIVALS.

BUTLER CIRCUIT, ALA. CONF.

Conversion in class meeting and around the family altar.—Not long since, in following up the administration of the word, by that very necessary appendage, class meeting, the Lord honored the institution by his presence, as follows: While examining the class a certain sister was found weeping bitterly. She had joined the church two years ago as a seeker, had never professed religion, but was earnestly groaning for redemption. I encouraged her as an humble penitent, at once to grasp the promise of present salvation by faith in the atoning merits of Christ. While talking to her I could see the large tear drops fall upon her dress, which told the agony of her soul, though not a word she spoke. There were but seven persons in the house, all members of the church except two, both of whom I found wished to join, and while opening the door to give them an opportunity, the Lord calmed that weeping sister's troubled breast, "saying peace be still," and she was able to shout aloud the praise of Zion's King. It was a precious season. Here was an evidence before our own eyes, not only of the wisdom of taking seekers of religion into the church, but also that God will, and does bless class meetings. No doubt that sister will always love the class room. Not long after this, and in the same vicinity, a good brother, trying to walk in the steps of faithful Abraham, commanding his children and his household after him, was holding family prayer. The Lord manifested his presence in a powerful manner. The Holy Ghost fell upon the entire household. The small children were all melted into tears, while the large ones cried aloud for mercy. The meeting lasted two hours, in course of which time, the eldest son, who had been in a cold backslidden state all the year, was restored to the favor of God; and the next oldest son, a young man, and a daughter nearly grown were happily converted. The next Friday they all came out to my regular appointment happy in the Lord, and three of the family joined the church. Let all our people and Christians generally, faithfully discharge this important duty, and conversions at the family altar would be more frequent. I have just closed up my work on this Circuit, and though it has been a year of hard toil, yet I shall ever remember it as one of the most pleasant of my life. Many noble hearts are in this work for whom we have the warmest affection.

We leave about two hundred and twelve Probationary members, most of whom have been received into the church the present year. We have our Conference assessment, all our Quarterage, and many little presents in clothing and cash, for all of which the brethren and friends of Butler Circuit have our sincere thanks. May God abundantly bless them.

G. HAWKINS.

We have just closed a round of two days or protracted meetings on the Natchitoches Circuit. The Lord has been with us all the while and has abundantly prospered his pleasure among us. About 170 souls have been converted to God received on trial about 200; baptised about the same number, and though it be in the strong hold of immersionists, have immersed only one. And let me here return thanks to the local preachers for the many ways in which they have stood by us in planting the standard of the cross, unfurling the banner, leading the host and pushing the battle to victory and glory.

HARRISONBURG CIRCUIT, LA. CONF.
December 3d, 1856.

We send you a general notice of what has been done, and what is being done, on the Harrisonburg Circuit. When we came to this work we found the membership in a cold, lukewarm state. And not any suitable church house for public worship in cold weather. But the good Lord has sent refreshing showers of divine grace, until the "thirsty land" has the appearance of becoming "pools." We have taken 262 in the M. E. Church, 165 have professed justification, 3 have professed sanctification, and one licensed local Preacher, and five exhorters, (young men.) We have on hand, six new buildings for church houses that we expect to be finished by the first of January, 1857, also an excellent shed and several good tents for camp meetings. "The Lord hath done great things for us." R. PARVIN.

Christ is to be a believer's Judge, and if he was to choose his Judge, he could not choose a better friend.

They that spend their days in faith and prayer, shall end their days in peace and comfort.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from our Fayre Ladye.

LONDON, SEPT. 3rd 1856.

We entered Westminster Abbey through the small side door and were at once among the monuments of the "noble dead"—noble indeed, for above all title and hereditary name. How our hearts throbbed when we saw the names of Edmond Spencer, Geoffry Chaucer, John Milton, Ben Jonson, Shakspeare, Dryden, Goldsmith, Thompson, Cowley and Addison—names before which we had bowed in loving reverence of their genius and fame. We stepped noiselessly on from one monument to the next thinking more of the men whose dust had made this little mark a shrine for pilgrims of all ages than of the sacred building and its grand architecture, when the organ suddenly broke out into a voluntary, smote once all memories of the dead fadeel into a sense of thanksgiving and awe. The music swelled on and on, filling the near arches with full deep waves of sound, and being echoed back from the dim distant aisles in soft low murmurs till the vast building seemed to be but one voice of pleading, prayer and praise. All the forms of human supplication were there ascending in one great cry of anguish—"all we, like lost sheep, have gone astray." "There is no soundness in us—from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot there is nothing but wounds and bruises and putrifying sores"—now was heard the faint chanting of the choir, and our hearts joined in the prayer—still above all the organ made its moan and still there seemed no help, no answer to the yearning cry for pardon—but now those words of comfort and soothing broke on the ear, "He was wounded for our transgressions—he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him and by his stripes are we healed!". The wail was ceased—"the song of redeeming love" and of exultant rapture swells out louder and louder until again the church resounds. "Christ has died. Christ has died and we are saved." This seems to be the burden of this softened joyous strain. The music gradually dies away—faint echoes of sound only are lingering and we waken as from a trance to find traces of tears on every cheek. The people go out silently and soon we are alone—alone with the dim aisles, the lofty roof and the souls of the dead—with the thronging memories of kings and pageants and with the emotions called up by the beating of the great heart above, as now as silent as the dead themselves.

A guide breaks upon our revery and we with a dozen others are hurried on through the different chapels—where lie buried many noble and illustrious men, and in St. Edward's Chapel kings are reposing. Here lies Henry III, Queen Eleanor, Henry IV, Queen Phillippa, Edward III, Edward IV's daughter, Richard II and his wife and Edward I. This last tomb bears the date of 1307—and the shrines of Edward the confessor dint of 1065. Near by stands, as if in mockery, the two coronation chairs—one, containing the stone called Jacob's Pillow, and held sacred by the Scotch, has been saved for all the reigning sovereigns since Edward I. The other was made for Mary. They are straight, ugly square things, and are slowly dropping to pieces but still at a coronation are used—being then all covered with gold tissue and removed to the front of the altar behind which they now stand. Henry VII's chapel is very ornate yet beautiful, although it seems out of place as part of a Cathedral. It has its nave and side aisles and here lie more kings and queens—Henry VII and Queen, and the vault of George II containing his body and that of Queen Caroline, and William and Mary's, and Queen Anne's. These were the last royal personages buried in the Abbey. Here there is a monument to Queen Elizabeth with a marble effigy on top and one to Bloody Queen Mary. If these be likenesses, as they were said to be, their features were regular and beautiful. Here too is buried James I and his wife, and here after 191 years had elapsed were buried the bones of the two princes who were smothered in the Tower. It seemed strange enough as you may imagine, to be walking about under the shadow of this old roof, and gazing at memorials of dead things and great men of the earth. Over our heads were hanging the crumbling, fading banners of the Knights of the Bath and wherever the eye rested carvings and ornamenting of the most grotesque and fantastic forms marred the stained vision and you longed for a little bit of plain, simple, natural architecture. After going through 7 or 8 chapels, of which this of Henry VII is the largest and finest, the relief was very great to enter once more the dim silent aisles of the abbey itself where the spirit was free to think of its Maker and not of these creatures of a day who had lived in pomp and show—pride and vanity—to become but dust at last. Those, too, who in life were enemies lie here almost side by side—Mary Queen of Scots and Elizabeth being both buried in Henry VII's chapel. The effigy of the unfortunate Mary represents her as a most beautiful woman and we gazed with deep interest upon the spot that holds her dust. William Wilberforce, James Watt, of steam-engine fame, Isaac Watts, the child's poet, Sir Isaac Newton, Major Andre, David Garrick, Miss Siddons, Warren Hastings, Handel and Charles James Fox, are either buried here or have monuments erected to their memory. On Andre's tomb are figures representing Washington and Andre and one or two other actors in that tragedy; Andre is offering Washington his letter of explanation. It is said that this is the third head which has been put on Washington's statue—the others having been stolen.

Our guides now were anxious to dismiss us and we reluctantly departed, but went once more to morning prayers. The Abbey would impress me far more if the chapels were not there to take up so much space. Each king who had been particularly wicked seemed to wish to make their peace with heaven by building a chapel. I missed the stained glass, too; most of the windows were wanting in this, and after my memory of Yorkminster it seemed a great fault, I am sorry I saw it first; it would have been far better to have seen Westminster first. Still it is very grand and most wonderful, and the memory of it will be a life-long pleasure to me.

We went next to St. Paul's. The exterior of this is very beautiful and when you enter, the noble dome rises up most grandly, and the great height of the vaulting and the arches strike most forcibly upon the imagination; the long rows of pillars produce the effect of walking among tall forest trees. The longer one gazed at the dome the greater its size appeared, and after coming from the dark aisles of the Abbey, the light that fell here from the lantern at the top of the dome gave a brightness and cheerfulness to the building and helped to throw out the shadows of the columns and arches in a novel way. Here lie many famous dead—among others is a monument to "Sir Edward Packenham and Major General Samuel Gibbs, who fell gloriously leading an attack against New Orleans." This cost $10,000, so if they achieved but little in their battle, they won a monument in St. Paul's. Sir Christopher Wren, the architect, lies here too; the inscription is only his name and age and those few but expressive words: "If you ask for a monument look around you." The duke of Wellington lies buried in the Crypt as the vaults below are called. No monument as yet has been erected to him as the committee cannot decide upon a design. Here lies the body of Sir Isaac Brock, who died in the attack upon Queenstown, Upper Canada. Sir Joshua Reynolds has here his tomb and many other well-known names met my eye, but now I carefully recall two of them—Lord Nelson and Sir Astley Cooper, the eminent physician. This letter is but a hurried sketch and I fear will do you but little good in forming any idea of these two most noble and venerable churches. E.

Munificent Donation for the Church.

Sylvester Lind, Esq., a wealthy gentleman of Chicago, has given one hundred thousand dollars for the establishment of a Presbyterian University at Forest Lake, about twenty-five miles north of that city. The grant is accompanied with only one condition, viz.: that $40,000 shall be used for the endowment of professorships, and the income of $60,000 shall be perpetually used in preparing young men for the Ministry.—The Chicago Press thus speaks of the liberal donor:

This noble act makes it proper that a few words should be said in relation to the giver. He is a plain, unassuming citizen who makes it the great business of his life to use the ample fortune which Providence has placed in his hands, for the good of his fellow-men.—In the Spring of 1837, Mr. Lind arrived in this city from Scotland, with just two sovereigns in his pocket. Less than twenty years ago this was his entire capital. All his little patrimony in Scotland, with the exception of enough to bear his expenses here, he left to assist in educating his two brothers, who were preparing for the ministry. His industry and integrity have secured for him an ample fortune, and enabled him to give forty thousand dollars toward endowing professorships, and sixty thousand more, the interest of which will educate thirty ministers per year, for all coming time. The moral sublimity of such and act, an the consolation it will afford in a dying hour, ought to stimulate many more of our "substantial citizens" to "go and do likewise."

THE ALABAMA UNIVERSITY.—This Institution, says the Tuscaloosa Observer, numbers at this time more students than it has done for many years. About 140 have already entered. It affords us peculiar pleasure to make this announcement.

While the citizens of adjoining States have ever manifested such pride in encouraging and fostering their Universities, it is a burning shame that so many Alabamians have been wholly unmindful of the claims of theirs, although so amply endowed, so ably officered, and in every other respect presenting such inducements for the thorough education of youth.

GREENSBORO' COLLEGE BUILDING.—We learn from the Greensboro' (Ala.) Beacon, that the Building Committee appointed by the Trustees of the Southern University of the M. E. Church, located at that place, have let out the contracts for the brick, stone and carpenter's work, painting and glazing, including material, at $32,761, and that the contracts yet to be made for Iron Ornaments, Slate Roof and Plastering, are estimated in amount at $6,754, making the entire cost of the edifice $39,015. The corner stone was to be laid the first week in December. The building is to be finished during the year 1857.

THE MISSIONARY SHIP MORNING STAR.—The new missionary ship Morning Star is about completed, and will be launched, full rigged, with part of her cargo, on Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock, M.—Her model is very fine. She will shortly sail for the Pacific Ocean. She will be under the care of the American Board. Her captain and both mates are religious men. It will be remembered that the Sabbath Schools, connected with the Orthodox Congregational Churches throughout the country were called upon to build this ship by their contributions. We learn that the schools are generally responding to the call.—Boston Transcript, 11th inst.

GIRARD COLLEGE.—The present number of pupils in this magnificent institution is stated at 315. All are, of course, indigent orphans, in accordance with the will of the founder. But religion and the Bible have found their way within the gates, inspite of his infidel design.

RARE GENEROSITY.—Instances of a legatee destroying a will for the purpose of sharing a property, which had been devised in bulk, with other members of the family, are very uncommon. The New York Mirror mentions two such cases—both the legatees females.

OMENS.—The names of five of the leading Unitarian clergymen in and about New York are rather ominous for superstitious minds—Furniss, Coles, Bellows, Bleasc and Burnap. The only antidote they ever had was Dewey who came after Sparks, and he has passed through this fiery ordeal and evaporated, though we thought not to forget, that he has left a successor quite Osgood.—New York Evening Post.

Whilst we carry a sense of grace in our conscience to comfort us, let us carry a sense of sin in our memory to humble us.

MARRIAGES.

MARRIED—By Rev. James W. Shores, on November 4th, Dr. WM. LOCKE MORTON, to Miss ECDORIA JANE PRICE, daughter of General J. C. Price, all of Marion county, Ala.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS CALLED FOR—10,000 to the Home Circle—3000 to the Quarterly Review, and not less than 50,000 to the Sunday school Visitor.

Shall we not have them by the first of January next? This is a grave question; and we submit it in confidence to the ministry, membership, and friends of the entire Connection. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you especially for a large increase of patronage to all our Publishing House Periodicals. The present is a favorable season for obtaining new subscribers, as well as for securing the renewal of old ones. On leaving your different charges, for the purpose of attending your respective Conferences, would it not be well to take with you from five to twenty new subscribers? This can certainly be done in almost every case, if the proper efforts be made. And on entering the new fields of labor to which you may be assigned, if you desire, as we knew you do, to see a great and glorious revival of enlightened, genuine, and enduring piety among the people of your several charges; and if you would bring all the available means and instrumentalities of the Church to bear on the accomplishment of this one great object, let all our prodical issues be fully and freely circulated in every part of your work; and see to it, that this be done at the earliest possible day. Confiding implicitly both in your ability and disposition to carry out this important enterprise, we have but to remind you that a strict, though prudent, adherence to the cash system, will be to the interests of all concerned. Be careful to receive the money, as far as practicable, at the time of taking the subscriptions and renewals; and dont fail to remit it to us, if possible, in connection with the names and post offices of the subscribers.—This will be a special accomodation to us, and a great relief to our clerks.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Agents.

Notice.

I have bought out Dr. Holsten's interest in the Hotel at Summerfield, Ala.; and I am prepared to board young men coming to the Centenary Institute to acquire their education. The public may rely upon it, that the house will be well kept.

A FORTUNATE VIRGINIA GENTLEMAN.—Real estate is said to be quite active in Chicago, and some fine speculations are being made. A gentleman from Virginia, a few weeks ago, bought a piece of ground outside the city limits, for which he paid $400 per acre, and in ten days' time had subdivided it into small lots, and sold nearly one half at the rate of $1600 per acre. His profits will exceed $30,000.

SKELETON OF A GIANT FOUND.—The Wheeling Times says:

A day or two since some workmen engaged in subsoiling the grounds of Sheriff Wickham at his vineyard in East Wheeling, came across a human skeleton. Although much decayed, there was little difficulty in identifying it, by placing the bones, which could not have belonged to other than a human body, in their original position. The impression made by the skeleton in the earth and the skeleton itself, were measured by the sheriff and a brother in the craft cocale, both of whom are prepared to swear that it was ten feet nine inches in length. Its jaws and teeth were almost as large as those of a horse. The bones are at the sheriff's office.

LOCAL NEWS.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF NEW ORLEANS.—On Sunday evening last this society met at Odd Fellows Hall to celebrate their fourth anniversary. A very large and most respectable audience was present. The exercises of the evening were agreeably varied by music, singing, prayer, scripture reading, and speech-making. Rev. J. B. Walker delivered the annual address. It was one of his masterly efforts, and commanded the rapt attention of all present. He elaborated, in glowing characters, the full intent and meaning of the title "Young Men's Christian Association," analysing each word of same; and thus presenting to his audience the whole idea of this excellent institution, enlisted the warm sympathies of every Christian present. Mr. McDannald made another address; of it we can say nothing, for though we sat quite close to the platform, our ears caught but little of this gentleman's speech. We know it was lengthy—very lengthy—made doubly so by the incoherent reading of it, and by an inanimate delivery.

On Tuesday evening same society held a meeting for the annual election of officers, with the following result:

President, Mr. Dix. Vice Presidents, Mr. Hitchcock, (Presbyterin); Mr. Low, (Baptist); Mr. Palfrey, (Episcopalian); Willard, (Methodist). Corresponding Secretary, Mr. Duncan. Recording Secretary, Mr. ——. Treasurer, Mr. Gardener. Librarian, Mr. Driver.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Mobbing of an American Consul.

A letter in the New York Times, dated St. Domingo City, October 15th, says:

"On the night of the 11th of October, a mob, instigated by Mr. A. M. Segovia, Spanish consul general, assembled before the United States consulate, for the purpose of pulling down the flag-staff and the sign, throwing stones against the engle, and making the greatest disorder. There were also cries of 'Down with the filibusters!'—'Down with the American ensign!' The American consul, Mr. Jacob Pereira, repaired to the spot for the purpose of imposing respect, but all his efforts were in vain. Not being able at that moment to obtain any assistance from the authorities, he was obliged, for the safety of his person and life, to leave the place of disorder.

"The morning after the riot, the American consul represented the case to the government by means of an official note, and the mayor was immediately informed of the conduct of Mr. Segovia. The mayor then called on the American consul to offer him protection, and a file of soldiers to impose that respect which was due to the United States consulate. This was, however, refused by Mr. Pereira, who stated that the American flag needed no guard to cause it to be respected, and that he was then prepared to meet any mob that might appear. But all disturbance was soon quieted."

COTTON AT SHREVEPORT.—We clip the following paragraph from the Southwestern of the 3d inst.:

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, cotton continues to arrive briskly, and meets with ready sale.—During the past week there was quite a spirit of competition among buyers, which led them in some instances to pay higher prices than the New Orleans quotations would appear to warrant.

DAMAGE BY THE FLOOD.—We learn, says the Memphis Bulletin of the 3d instant, that the recent heavy rains did considerable damage to the railroads in the interior. The heavy embankment on the Mississippi Central and Tennessee road, between Baliver and the grand junction, is in fact completely washed away in many places, so that the cars cannot make the trip. On the Mississippi Central, the trains were unable to get from Holly Springs to the junction on yesterday, so we learn from pressengers who came in on the train last night. The repairs on the Memphis and Charleston road have not yet been completed, owing to the unfavorable weather, and the mail train is only running about five miles east of Chawl's station.

CASS SUNK.—The two flatboats containing six freight cars for the Mississippi Central Railroad, were sunk at the upper landing, on Monday evening, and boats, cars and all now lie in deep water, though the box cars are still afloat. As the cars are secured be ropes to the shore they will probably all be saved, yet it will cost considerable time, labor and money.

TELEGRAPHIC.

New York Dec. 9.—The United States mail steamship Atlantic, from Liverpool, on the evening of the 22d, has arrived off Sandy Hook.

The Royal mail steamship Asia, arrived out at Liverpool on the 22d. The Atlantic brings no political news of importance.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Asia's advices had no effect upon the cotton market. The market was dull and nominally unchanged, though there was a slight turn in favor of the buyer.

The sales for three days amounted to 15,000 bales, of which exporters took 500 bales, speculators taking none at all.

Quotations are the same as per Arabia, though the market is easier.

Various Liverpool circulars quoted breadstuffs quiet, the Asia's news having no effect upon the market.

Pork was dull; bacon steady; but the market was bare of stock.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.

Cincinnati, Dec. 8.—The steamboat Kentucky, which was lying forty miles above this city, burst a steam pipe last night, scalding eleven deck hands and firemen, and six deck passengers.—Three of the scalded died soon after.—The others have been brought to the hospital here, but it is thought four or five more will die.

SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONVENTION.

Savannah, Dec. 8.—The Convention met at noon to-day, the Mayor taking the chair and making an appropriate speech.

After a prayer by Bishop Elliot, Mr. Thaxton, of Petersburg, Va., was appointed temporary Secretary.

A committee of one delegate from each State was then appointed to report officers and rules for the permanent organization of the Convention, after which a recess was taken until four o'clock, P. M.

There are about six hundred delegates present, representing ten Southern States.

Arkansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Kentucky and Delaware are not represented.

The Pacific Railroad and Nicaragnuan affairs will be the engrossing questions.

The project of re-opening the Slave trade will be quietly sunk.

Four o'clock, p. m.—James Lyons, of Virginia, is appointed President of the Convention, with the usual number of Vice Presidents and Secretaries.

The rules of the House of Representatives are adopted.

Each of the States vote according to the number of votes it has in the Electoral College.

President Lyons made a lengthy speech, asserting the wish of the South to maintain the Constitutional Union, but expressing her determination to prepare for future contingencies.

A committee of two from each State was appointed to prepare and arrange the business of the Convention.

A. Dudley Mann was admitted as a delegate and added to the Committee on Business.

The Convention then adjourned.—Strong Conservative sentiments are manifested by the members.

Savannah, Dec. 9.—The Convention met at the appointed hour, President Lyons in the Chair.

The President announced that the majority of resolutions previously offered were under the consideration of the Committee on Business.

A resolution was offered by—Swan, Esq., of Tennessee, to the effect that all bonds or notes issued, either by the Southern States or cities and counties therein, be made payable in said States. Mr. Hubbard, of Alabama, opposed the resolution of Mr. Swan on the ground that it was advisable for the Southern States, in borrowing, to accomodate the lender as far as possible. On motion the resolution was referred.

Mr. Peebles, of Georgia, moved that each member of the Convention subscribe one hundred dollars as a basis for starting a direct line for Europe. The motion was adopted, but on a call for reconsideration it was referred.

Mr. Bethune, of Georgia, spoke at length in favor of the abolishment of the Tariff, and argued that it was a better policy to raise funds by direct taxation.

Mr. Kean, of Virginia, offered a number of resolutions, in which he strongly advocated the education of Southern youth at home, and encouraging the literature of the South, such as books, papers, &c.

Mr. Gaulding, of Georgia, offered a series of resolutions instructing Southern Congressmen, to use their best endeavors to have the laws interdicting the slave trade repealed, and further, to obtain a treaty of rendition of slaves escaping from their owners, and more particularly in Canada. This resolution was laid on the table by an almost unanimous vote.

Judge Moore, of Alabama, offered a resolution in favor of constructing a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific on the 32d parallel. Adjourned.

KANSAS MATTERS.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The Star says that James O. Harrison, of Kentucky, will receive the appointment of Judge for Kansas, vice Lecompte, removed.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Philadelphia, Dec. 9.—A private dispatch from Cannonsburg, Pa., states that Jefferson College was destroyed by fire on Friday night, together with the valuable library, belonging to the institution, and containing ten thousand volumes.

The loss is estimated at $50,000.

SHIP ASHORE.

Southwest Pass, Dec. 10.—The British ship Pemberton, Capt. Belyer, from London, is reported ashore about the middle of Chandeleur Island.

CALIFORNIA AND NICARAGUA.

INTERESTING INTELLIGENCE.

By the arrival of the steamer Texas from San Juan, we receive the following interesting intelligence:

The California Presidential vote gives Buchanan 50,000, Fillmore 35,000, Fremont 19,000. State officers and two Congressmen, Democratic. Senate—18 Democrats, 12 Americans, 3 Republicans. Assembly—60, Democrats, 8 Americans and 11 Republicans. Receipts of merchandise large. Markets dull.

The Texas arrived at San Juan del Norte from New York on the 2d December, and the Tennessee from New Orleans on the 3d. The steamship Orizaba, from San Francisco, left that port on the 2d November with 800 passengers, and arrived at San Juan del Sur on the 3d. Steamship Tennessee sailed from San Juan del Norte for New York on the 5th, with $270,000 in treasure and 500 passengers, steamship Texas for New Orleans same day. The transit route is in the most excellent condition, affording every facility for the safe and speedy conveyance of passengers. The news from Nicaragua is of the most exciting and thrilling character. Since our last dates a series of battles have taken place between the American forces and the combined forces of Central America, in all of which the Americans have been entirely successful. On the 10th ult., an engagement was had at a place called the Half-Way House, on the Transit road, between two hundred Americans, under Brig. Gen. Hornsby, and eleven hundred of the enemy, under the Costa Rican General Canas. The enemy were well fortified, but notwithstanding their superior number of men they were immediately routed with great loss.

The loss on the American side were 2 killed and 11 wounded. Among their killed was Gen. Caraca. After the enemy had been dispersed, Gen. Hornsby came up to Granada. The next day Gen. Walker started from Granada with 200 men for Virgin Bay, where he arrived on the 12th ult. The enemy, after having learned the small force under General Hornsby, which had dispersed them, again collected their scattered forces, and again occupied their former position. Gen. Walker marched away to attack them, and the enemy hearing that he (Gen. Walker) commanded in person, fired a few rounds and immediately retreated. They were immediately pursued to San Juan del Sur, and from that point along the coast until dispersed throughout the country. About 150 of them broke out and went into Costa Rica.

The loss of the enemy could not be ascertained, as they were continually being shot as they were found along the road—probably about 100. The American loss was two killed, and nine wounded slightly. Immediately after the victory, Gen. Walker returned to Granada, in order to take reinforcements and march upon Masaya, where about fifteen hundred of the enemy still remained. He took his line of march on the 13th ult., with five hundred and thirty men; but learning that a number of the opposing forces had marched towards the relief of those who had been beaten on the Isthmus, he ordered the Second Infantry, under command of Colonel Jaquess, to return to Granada, and thence to the Transit by steamer San Carlos, to repulse such forces as may be found. The remainder of the force marched on until near the city of Masaya, when they were attacked by six hundred of the enemy, in ambuscade; where a sharp fight took place, and the foe were scattered in all directions. It was ascertained, on entering the town, that the enemy had possession of the church in the little plaza, which was immediately attacked, and in a few minutes they gained possession of the church and plaza, with an abundant supply of fresh provisions and excellent water, without the loss of a single man. The enemy would not fight, except behind a wall, and General Walker, after consideration, concluded to burn the strongholds, and give them nothing for a shield, which was accordingly done.

The larger and most valuable part of the city was destroyed, and after four days fighting the enemy were entirely vanquished. After this was accomplished Gen. Walker returned to Granada to execute further plans, which were well considered, namely: that Granada being a very sickly place, it was disadvantageous for his troops to return there, and he had long since concluded to make Rivas the capital instead, and knowing, upon evacuation of Granada, that the town might be occupied by the enemy with advantage, he determined to burn the place, and accordingly gave three days notice to all persons to remove all goods and valuables, and at the end of the time he fired the town, not leaving a vestige of a single building, removing all his stores and provisions, with inhabitants to Virgin Bay, and will thence remove to Rivas, which he has made the capitol.

It is supposed that, during all the battles since october, the enemy have lost 3000 men. A terrific battle took place off San Juan del Sur, between the Nicaraguan war schooner Granada, 50 tons, 24 men and 2 six-pounders, Capt. C. J. Faysoul, and the Costa Rican brig-of-war Onzo de Abril, 180 tons, one hundred and fourteen men, and carrying six nine-pounders. The battle lasted for two hours, and after hard fighting, the Nicaraguan schooner succeeded in blowing up the Costa Rican brig, and destroyed all on board of her, except seventeen, who were fearfully wounded. The brig had on board arms, provisions and amunition, together with $12,000 in specie, all of which were lost.

The prospects of Gen. Walker are excellent, and it is said by the prisoners recently taken that Costa Rica and Guatemala can never raise another force to come against him.

The news from California is unimportant.

A NEW INVENTION.—R. C. Gardner, of Detroit, claims to have invented a sewing machine no longer than a pair of scissors, which will do the work in first rate style, and can be sold for a dollar.

A Frightful Tragedy—Spiritualism and Self-Destruction.

A frightful tragedy occurred on the Sixth avenue, between Thirty-eight and Thirty-ninth streets, about ½ o'clock this morning, involving the self-destruction of a man named John B. Fairbanks.

Mr. Fairbanks roomed in a five story building, a short distance from the Tremont House, corner of Sixth avenue and Fortieth street, at which place he took his meals. His place of business was 308 Broadway, where he conducted a Patent Agency. He was a single man upwards of 30 years old.

It appears from the statement of the family of the house where he roomed, that for some time past the deceased has been investigating the subject of spiritualism, and that some three weeks since became convinced of its truthfulness, and took frequent occasion to converse with the family on the subject, and attempted to bring them over to his views. He attended all the spiritual meetings in the city, and read all the works on the subject he could get hold of. He firmly believed that departed spirits attend the living constantly, influencing their actions, and infusing their superior thoughts and ideas into the human mind.

He had lost a sister, and was seized with an intense anxiety to see and converse with her, face to face, and was heard often to say that he would give anything could his internal vision be opened, and could he, like Swedenborg, behold the spirit world and converse with its inhabitants. It seems that, with this idea uppermost in his mind, he soon came to believe that his sister did converse with him, and he was known upon one occasion to say that she sometimes awakened him from his sleep, from which, it appears that he was laboring under a mental hallucination, and believed that he saw her spirit. He conversed much, and often in touching and beautiful terms, of the elevating influences of his faith, and the delight it imparts to the weary dwellers upon earth, to feel and know that those dear to them, who have gone to the mystic land, come back and watch us and stand beside us, imparting their thoughts, their counsels and their benedictions.

It appears, also, that upon several occasions, he manifested symptoms of great mental suffering. One night he was heard to groan aloud for a long time, and finally some of the family, attracted by his cries, rapped at his door and aked him if he was ill, to which he replied "No." They then asked him what ailed him, and he replied, "You will know hereafter." The next day he warned the family to have nothing to do with mesmerism, clairvoyance or spiritualism. Yet he soon exhibited the same interest and pleasure in his faith, and predicted with earnestness that spiritualism would soon become the prevailing faith, sweeping away all other creeds, dogmas and sects. He also remarked to a young lady present—"You will live to see that time, but I shall not."

In the meantime, Mr. Fairbanks attended to his usual business pursuits, and nothing, aside from this, of an unusual character, awakened any suspicion as to his sanity. But last night, about eleven o'clock, he went into the Tremont House, which was a very unusual thing for him to do at that time, and was heard to converse in a loud tone of voice, asserting that spirits are constantly around us, etc. He also conversed with the family with which he rooms on the same subject.

This morning he got up between 7 and 8 o'clock, and went from the second floor, on which he rooms, to an unoccupied room upon the fifth floor. A young lady in an adjoining apartment heard him raise the window and utter a loud groan. She immediately looked out and saw him falling to the sidewalk. He struck upon his forehead, crushing his forehead and face in a most frightful manner and causing instant death.

His body was taken to a room in the Tremont House, where the coroner held an inquest, and rendered a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

Mr. Fairbanks was a man of good intelligence and business capacities, and of large person; being upwards of six feet high.—From the N. Y. Evening Post.

A GRATEFUL NEGRO.—When Mr. Jonathan Cross, superintendent of colportage, was at the north, collecting funds for the tract society, he was publicly catechised in various places on the condition of slaves in the south. On one occasion he was asked, among other questions, what the negroes thought of their own position. He replied, by mentioning the name of an old servant in North Carolina more than a hundred years old, who had been brought from Africa in his youth, and converted to the christian religion in this country, and who, every time he said his prayers, poured fourth his devout gratitude that he had been stolen away from a heathen land, and prayed God to revive the slave trade.

No one who has read the account given by all travellers of the horrible barbarities practised by Africans upon each other, can wonder at the old man's thankfullness that he had been taken even forcibly from such a sanctuary, and placed among a civilized and humane people. It is certainly more comfortable to be hoeing corn, cultivating tobacco and cotton among a christian people, with plenty to eat, drink, and wear, than to live under a savage despot, who paves his court yard with the skulls of his people, and delights to subject them to the most dreadful tortures.—Richmond Dispatch.

FROM KANSAS.—A St. Louis dispatch of the 2d instant states that advices from Kansas have been received, which say that the militia under Titus would soon be disbanded. Gov. Geary had quietly submitted to the action of the habeas corpus issued by Judge Lecompte in the case of Hayes. Col. Titus was to leave upon with one headred men for Nicaragua.

THE MONSTER STEAMSHIP.—Brunel is building on the banks of the Thames, near London, the mammoth steamer of the world. She is constructed entirely of iron plates, is a quarter of a mile in length, and about twice the size of Noah's ark. She is divided by bulkheads into 24 compartments, is to have 4 steam engines to drive her paddle wheels, and six more to turn a large screw. Besides these she is to carry seven masts. There will be accomodations for 4,000 passengers. Her steam engines are to weigh the anchor, work the pumps, and raise the sails. She is to be lighted with gas and furnished with telegraphic wires. At the mast-head she is to carry an electric light, visible 15 miles, and casting a beautiful radiance on the sea, for half a mile around. For life boats she is to carry a couple of screw steamers, ninety feet long, and a small fleet of yawls and jolly boats. Such is to be the "Great Eastern," intended for the Pacific trade, and expected to go round the globe without once stopping for coal.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—The Huntsvill Advocate relates the following pleasing event:

A beautiful sight was witnessed on the public square on the day of the election. Under the sole direction of colonel R. W. Anderson, the world wide philanthropist and friend to humanity, the girls of the town, with banners streaming, were formed into a procession—accompanied by the rifles, and martial music, they marched through the town to the ballot box, where the flag-bearers deposited fifty cents each, in a box, for the Washington monument. The procession was headed with a large flag, having inscribed, in golden letters, "Justice, Peace, and the Union forever." There was a flag for each state and territory of the union. The sight was a pleasing one—youth and beauty paying willing homage to the patriotism of Washington. It was a bright oasis in the desert of party bitterness.

ANOTHER TERRITORY.—Another Territory is about to be organized by a portion of its inhabitants. On the first of September an election was held at various points in the Gadsden Purchase, for delegates to the Territorial Legislature of New Mexico and for a delegate to Congress. The letter, it is expected, will present to Congress a petition for the separation of the Gadsden Purchase from the Northern part of New Mexico, and the erection of an independant territorial government.

THE WORLD'S FAIR OF ALL NATIONS.—Among the noticeable things on exhibition at the Crystal Palace, we saw the contribution of new Pills, from the laboratory of Dr. J. C. Ayer, the author of the widely known and valued Cherry Pectoral. As it is against the express regulations of the Palace to admit any quack medicines, this fact shows that his remedies are not placed in that category by the authorities. Indeed, we have before known that his Pectoral was highly appreciated by scientific men, and have seen lately that his Pills are held in great estimation by those deeply learned in the healing art.—True Reformer, Mass.

FOREIGN.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Parliament is further prorogued until Tuesday, the 16th of December next.—The words "then to meet for dispatch of business," was not included in the commission.

There had been a disastrous storm at Liverpool. Several ships were wrecked, among the number the Louisiana, bound to New Orleans.

FRANCE.

General Kissdof, the Russian Ambassador, had delivered his credentials, and in doing so, spoke as follows:

"I shall deem myself fortunate if I can contribute to cement between France and Russia that Union which assures the general peace, by one of the most durable of guarantees."

To which the Emperor replied:

"Monsieur le Comte, as soon as the treaty of Paris was signed, it became a constant care, without weakening my ancient alliance, to modify by kind acts (bons procedes) all that which the strict execution of certain conditions might make severe. I learned with pleasure that my Ambassador at St. Petersburg, animated by these sentiments, had succeeded in gaining the good will of the Emperor Alexander. The same welcome awaits you here; of this you may rest assured, because, independently of your own personal merits, you represent a sovereign who so nobly knows how to impose silence on sad reminiscences, which war too often leaves behind, and thinks only of the advantages of a sincere peace by entertaining friendly relations."

SPAIN.

The Epoca denies that the new Ministry has invited Queen Christiana to reenter Spain. The state of siege is raised.

A circular has been promulgated prohibiting the press from discussing religions questions, matters relating to foreign Sovereigns, and Socialist doctrines.

ITALY.

Field Marshal Radetsky, who is still commander of the Austrian forces in Italy, attained the 90th year of his age on the 2d of November.

A letter from Rome states that the decennial census of the population of the Papal States has just been completed. The total number, is 3,100,000 souls, being an increase of 300,000 during the last ten years.

RUSSIA.

At St. Petersburg, on the 10th of November, the winter frost had set in.—The gulf was covered with ice as far as Tolbeacon, and one hundred and twenty vessels were shut in.

COMMERCIAL.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Dec. 10, 1856.

COTTON.....We noticed in our last review that the market closed quiet and rather depressed by the tenor of the Arabia's accounts. There was no material change on Saturday. If any thing, however, factors showed more firmness and 8000 bales were taken at figures showing no falling off from previous rates. On Monday factors were still more stringent in their pretensions, but as there was a fair inquiry, the sales summed up 6500 bales; while yesterday, the demand was still more active and 11,000 bales were taken at prices bearing on advance in our quotations for Low Middling and the higher grades of about ⅛c. Thus the sales of the three days amount to 23,500 bales.

The receipts since the 5th inst. comprise 24,808 bales, against 11,735 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 20,340 115,069 to foreign ports and 7880 coastwise.) embracing 2021 to Liverpool, 2981 to Havre, 7880 to Genoa, 678 to Antwerp, 2406 to Bremen, 8600 (6000 half bales) to Vera Cruz, 5017 to Boston and 2021 to New York; leaving on hand a stock of 300,272 bales against 285,978 bales same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 614,503 bales against 614,907 same time last year—showing a decrease of 404 bales. THE SEXTON.

Right to a grave that was newly made,
Leaned a sexton on his earth-worn spade;
His work was done and he paused to wait
The funeral train through the open gate;
A fall of icy-lipped days was he,
And his locks were white as the foamy sea—
And these words came from his lips so thin,
"I gather them in! I gather them in!"

"I gather them in! for man and boy,
Year after year of grief and joy,
Few faithful the houses that lie around
In every nook of this burial ground.
Father and daughter, father and son,
Come they in solitude, one by one—
Lost come they strangers, or come they kin,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"Many are with me, but still I'm alone!
I the king of the dead—and I make my throne
Of a monument slab of marble cold;
And my empire of rule is the spade I hold,
Come they from cottage or come they from hall
Humbled are my subjects—all, all, all!
Let them loiter in pleasure, or toilfully spin,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"I gather them in—and their final rest,
Is here, down here in the earth's dark breast,"
And the sexton ceased—for the funeral train
Wound mutely over that solemn plain:
And I said to my heart—when time is told,
A mightier voice than that sexton's old
Will sound o'er the last tramp's dreadful din—
"I gather them in! I gather them in!"

OBITUARY.

Died, of Puerperal Fever in this place, on Sunday morning, November 23d, 1856, at 9 o'clock A. M., Mrs. AUGUSTA LAURA, wife of Rev. B. B. McCRAW, and daughter of John and Virginia Appleby, aged 19 years, 3 months and 23 days.

Oh what shades of sorrow and anguish come over the heart when we mourn the requiem of the loved and young—buoyant with life and hope and happiness. When memory tells us they are with the "voiceless dead," and when sad loneliness of heart reminds us that we miss them in the morning light and when evening's soft shades appear—when no watch is at the porch to welcome our coming—when that voice of music enlivened his heart with cheerful glee and loved companionship, along the dark and drear path of this "vale of tears," utters no more the hopes, the joys, the fears of life, oh, did we dream to part so soon. We knew her in early and innocent life, in childhood's opening hour—often fondled her upon our knee and watched with interest her ripening years and womanly grace, her chaste and pure mind. If she ever had a fault, it was "no error of the heart."

The fond and dutiful child, the loving and obedient wife, the young and affectionate mother, the sister's pride, the joy of the social circle, is gone—is whispered away by the soft, sweet consolatory "angel voice" of death, to the spirit land. Fond mother, husband, friends, why should you weep? Would you call her back from that angel band of the "white-robed" hosts of happy and singing spirits, the home of her immortal treasures? Could you bid her leave the bright jewels of a crown of eternal bliss and come back to poor sordid, sorrowful earth? Oh, no! Go meet her in the golden place among the brilliants and the shining stars of Heaven—go join her in the chorus of her song of love and perpetual youth—walk with her in the streets of the "New Jerusalem." Go bathe your troubled soul with her in the ocean of eternally refreshing love, where there is no sinking, gasping for breath, no pain, no anguish, no death.

"She lives to die no more."

A FRIEND.

Dr. EDWIN N. THOMPSON was born in Wilkes county, Georgia, March 19th, 1812, and died in Biloxi, Ala., September 24, 1856.

Among his leading characteristics were modesty, strict consistentiousness, and a profound regard and reverence for the christian religion.—In his manner he was unobtrusive, never assuming to himself his true worth, ever conceding to others all proper respect and honor. No one could fail to be impressed by his characteristic humility, and his unwavering courtesy to his associates. He needed not to be taught that politeness was the true impulse of his heart.

For many years he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and led a consistent christian life, commanding the confidence of all who were associated with him in this relation.—He was regular in attendance upon the means of grace, and cultivated love to God and all mankind. By him the name of Diety was never pronounced only with the highest reverence, and his tongue was never used to disparage his neighbor.

His affliction was protracted, and sanctified for his spiritual good. During it his mind seemed to be constantly exercised in prayer and religious meditation. When the Master called, he was found resting in the merits of Christ, and possessed of that faith which recognized God as a merciful Father, Who, while He afflicts, does so for the good of the afflicted. Who, while he destroys, causes mortality to put on immortality, corruption to put on incorruption.

Dr. Thompson's affection for his family was remarkably strong. In the family circle he found his greatest happiness, and God's grace only was sufficient to reconcile him to a temporary separation from it. He has left a sorrowing companion and four children, who should be sharers in the deepest sympathies of the Church. W. S.

Died, in Choctaw Co., Miss., on the 4th instant, Professor CREES. He was born in Virginia, on the 27th May, 1801; moved to this State in 1818; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church several years since, professed religion, and lived a consistent Christian till death. His disease was pneumonia; his sufferings were great, but he bore them patiently, seemed perfectly resigned to the will of His Maker. When asked about his prospects of happiness beyond this vale of tears, replied calmly that he had enjoyed that hope for a long time, dreaded nothing but the sting of death. The writer has been intimately acquainted with him for fifteen years, and can say he was as near faultless as any man with whom he has been acquainted. He shared, no doubt, the confidence of all that knew him. His example is truly worthy of imitation. His family and the community mourn; but they have much to comfort them in the assurance that their loss is his eternal gain.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Mary and Her Drawer;

OR, NOTHING MADE BY GETTING ANGRY.

The church bells were sending forth their merry chimes, and hundreds of children were wending their way to the Sabbath school. Mary was late that morning, and ran very quickly to her drawer, in which were kept her gloves, hymn book, catechism, &c., and endeavored to jerk it open at once; but in so doing she got it crooked, and it would move neither way.

Being in a great hurry, she began at once to fret and blame the drawer for not coming out. She soon became quite angry, her cheek flushed, her eyes sparkled, and with violent effort she pulled the drawer out, emptied its contents on the floor, tore her dress, disfigured her hymn book, and almost ruined the drawer itself.

Her father was patiently waiting in the hall for his little daughter when the accident occurred, and asked her what was the matter. Her instant reply was "Nothing, father; you go on, and I will overtake you presently."

Little Mary did not overtake her father, and he looked in vain for her at the Sabbath School.

Her dress was so badly torn, that she could not go to the Sabbath school, and with tears flowing down her cheek, she sat down and thought soberly over her conduct.

She doubtless felt very sorry for her anger, and the unnecessary damage she had done.

No one, when the family returned from church, said a word to her own reflections. When her father had taken off his hat and seated hemself she modestly approached him, threw her arms around his neck and said, "Father, do you know why your little Mary was absent from Sunday school this morning?" "No, my child," he replied. "I was in a great hurry, and attempted to pull my drawer out very quickly and got it fastened so tightly that it would move neither one way nor the other. I tried and tried, but it would not move. I then got angry with the drawer, pulled it very hard, and not only strewed its contents over the floor, but huug the nob in my dress, and tore it so badly that I could not come to the Sabbath school." Her father told her, he willingly forgave her, and that she also must ask God's forgiveness, for she had committed a sin in giving way to her anger. He also told her, to remember that nothing was over made by getting angry. If she ever tried to do anything and could not do it at once, she must not get angry, but be patient and calm. I hope this little thing taught Mary an important lesson; and may it teach you the same, dear little reader. Nothing was ever made by getting angry, but something always lost.

From the Children's Companion.

LITTLE LUCY AND THE WORDS SHE SUNG.

A little child, six summers old,
So thoughtful and so fair,
There seem'd about her pleasant ways
A more than childish air,
Was sitting on a summer eve
Beneath a spreading tree,
Intent upon an ancient book
Which lay upon her knee.
She turn'd each page with careful hand,
And strain'd her sight to see,
Until the drowsy shadows slept
Upon the grassy lea;
Then closed the book, and upward look'd,
And straight began to sing
A simple verse of hopeful love—
This very childish thing:
"While here below, how sweet to know,
His wondrous love and story,
And then, through grace, to see his face,
And live with him in glory!"

That little child, one dreary night
Of winter wind and storm,
Was tossing on a weary couch
Her weak and wasted form;
And in her pain, and in its pause,
But clasp'd her hand in prayer—
Strange that we had no thoughts of heaven
While hers were only there—
Until she said, "O, mother dear,
How sad you seem to be!
Have you forgotten that he said
'Let children come to me?'
Dear mother, bring the blessed book,
'Come, mother, let us sing.'"
And then again, with faltering tongue,
She sang, that childish thing:
"While here below, how sweet to know
His wondrous love and story,
And then, through grace, to see his face,
And live with him in glory!"

Underneath a spreading tree
A narrow mound is seen,
Which first was cover'd by the snow,
Then blossom'd into green;
Here first I heard that childish voice
That sings on earth no more;
In heaven it hath a richer tone,
And sweeter than before;
For those who know His love below—
So runs the wondrous story—
In heaven, through grace, shall see his face
And dwell with him in glory!

The Little Irish Sweep.

Some years ago an effort was made to collect all the chimney sweepers in the city of Dublin for the purpose of education. Among others came a little fellow, who was asked if he knew his letters. "O, yes," was the reply. "Do you spell?" "O, yes," was again the answer. "Do you read?" "O, yes." "And what book did you learn from?" "O, I never had a book in my life, sir." "And who was your school-master?" "O, I never was at school." Here was a singular case; a boy could read and spell without a book or a master. But what was the fact? Why another little sweep, a little older than himself, had taught him to read by showing him the letters over the shop doors which they passed as they went through the city. His teacher, then, was a little sweep like himself, and his book the sign-boards on the houses. What may be done by trying?

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

AS IT IS THE DUTY OF MAN TO BOW DOWN IN HUMBLE submission to the chastening afflictions of Almighty God, and to bless and praise His holy name for the bestowal of benefits undeserved, so likewise, is it a solemn duty, incumbent on a nation and a people, to observe a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

And now, since God has bestowed upon this His favored land, His richest and choicest blessings—since we have such abundant cause to bless and praise His Holy name, I, Robert C. Wickliffe, Governor of the State of Louisiana, in pursuance of established custom, do set apart and appoint THURSDAY, the 16th day of December, to be observed throughout this State as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer; and I earnestly request all the good people of the State to assemble on that day in their respective places of worship, to give thanks and praise to Almighty God, the giver of all goodness. And I therefore lend this my proclamation, recommending and requesting all Bishops, Priests and Ministers of all creeds and denominations to call the faithful together on that day, that it may be made a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

Given under my hand and the seal of State at Baton Rouge, this 14th day of October, in the year of Our Lord one [L. S.] thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, and the year of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-first. ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE.

By the Governor:
A. PLANTIES,
Assistant Secretary of State.

On Saturday, the third day of January, 1857.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

THE lands are situated in Morehouse Parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction, and fast becoming to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned, either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana. [jan12-1y] JAMES H. BRIGHAM.

SAW AND CORN MILLS.

PORTABLE CIRCULAR SAW MILLS,

WITH

Norcross' "Improved Rocker Boxes,"

AND LEE & LEAVITT'S

"IMPROVED HEAD BLOCKS."

The subscriber is now prepared to offer to the public, Circular Saw Mills, (usually called Pigeon's,) with all the recent improvements since their first appearance. The Mills now offered are about one third stronger than those heretofore in use, and those made by Page at present; combining, as they do, all the improvements and the additional strength both in the iron and wood work—are undoubtedly the best Mill ever offered. Engines and Horse Powers suitable for these mills are furnished when required.

Norcross' Patent consists in suspending the saw so that it can have a lateral vibration, and, when thrown out of line, will recover itself by the action of the driving-belt, and the arrangement of the parts by which it is sustained; while, at the same time, the arbor has no lateral play in its boxes, and is made to fit close with the shoulders, to prevent the oil from getting out, while in operation; a matter of great importance when the motion is rapid as in circular saws.

Lee & Leavitt's Patent consists in enabling one man to move the log on the ways with ease and with the greatest accuracy, thereby saving one man's Wages, and making better work than mill with the usual Screw Head Blocks.

THE SABBATH—ITS SPIRITUAL ASPECT.

To man as a moral being, the Sabbath is a boon of priceless value; it affords him the best and amplest opportunities to attend to the grand concernment of his immortal nature. In order to have some just conception of the religious value of the Sabbath, let us suppose it abolished, and mankind dependnht for seasons of spiritual instruction, on such accidental and irregular opportunities as might chance to present themselves. Under such a dispensation, the rich and the learned might, if they chose, select their time and their teachers from among living speakers, or the printed page; but here the want of habit and the force of a common example, would cause the majority of even the more favored classes to neglect their spiritual interest, be but little better than practical atheists; the poor and toiling millions would have no seasons for spiritual instruction and public worship. The abolition of the Sabbath would, with a large majority, be equivalent to the abolition of Christianity itself. Robert Owen, in his debate with Alexander Campbell, deplored the existence of the Christian Sabbath. He maintained that his principles never could obtain a general hearing, or realize their full effect, so long as the weekly Sabbath was observed as a day of religious teaching and worship. We are of the same mind, and therefore we specially thank God for the day of rest and worship. Just so much as we would deplore the general spread and triumph of infidel teaching, do we prize and love the Christian Sabbath as one of the God-given conservators of truth and good morals.

Without a fixed and generally recognized Sabbath, it would be impossible to gather congregations, or have anything approaching regular seasons of public worship. Again a day set apart, not by the general consent of the Christian world, but by a solitary community, or only a part of that, would be entirely wanting in the authority and sanctity that ought to attach to a day of religious worship. All that holy hush and reverent quietness, which now marks the day of sacred rest in all communities under the teaching of the Bible, would be lost forever. In short, a day partly secular and partly sacred, would soon cease to leave a resemblance to a Sabbath at all.

The Sabbath, as established and recognized throughout the Christian world, is a great proclamation of the reign of our Almighty God, and of our relations to Him as moral and accountable creatures. The Sabbath exercises an immense influence, especially upon the Children—an influence, that could only be fully appreciated by its total abolition.

Sir Archibald Alison says that the children of France, who past the years of their childhood during the period that the Sabbath was abolished, and its religious observance ignored, have grown up without any religious faith, and the influence is felt for evil at this time among the men in whose hands is the keeping of the destinies of the empire.

The holy Sabbath awakens glorious memories; it calls to lively remembrance that most illustrious event on the rolls of the world's moral history, the resurrection of the Son of God; and it is a stronger proof of the certainty of that great fact, than the patriotic festival of the Fourth of July is of the Declaration of Independence, for it is observed fifty-two times as often, and by hundreds of millions of men.

The heart that feels grateful for the unspeakable gift, exclaims!

"Welcome sweet day of rest,
That saw the Lord arise:
Welcome to their reviving breast
And their rejoicing eyes."

On this glad day the sun seems to shine with brighter ray, the arching skies look peace upon the earth; the winds blow softer, the birds sing sweeter—all is serene, and a holy air pervades the world. The hammer hushes its ring, the wheel its noise, and the engine its roar. The plow ceases to turn over the sod, and weary beast and toil-worn man are at rest.

"Welcome delightful morn,
Thou day of sacred rest,
I hail thy kind return,"

With what subduing and soothing influence come, on a Sabbath day, the memories of childhood—of venerable parents, faithful ministers, holy songs, the prayers of the good—like the chime of distant bells, and pleasant and reviving as the zephyrs sweet with the odours of "Alaby the blest."

What countless millions have bowed the reverent knee, and lifted up the voice of praise on the holy Sabbath day! What tens of thousands of faithful ministers have poured out the eloquence of redeeming love, and preached with tongues of fire the quickening word! How many millions in glory now, on this blest day were made the Sons of God, the heirs of heaven! And in how many continents and islands, and in how many tongues do millions each returning Sabbath "sing praises."

How delightful to the world-weary soul, is it to get away from the distractions and selfishness of every-days life, and go up to the house of God with the multitude of those who keep holy day.

"Lord of the world above,
How pleasant, and how fair;
The dwellings of they love,
Thine earthly temples are."

The understanding is instructed, the heart is made better, and we feel a wider and a warmer sympathy with the great family of man.

The Sabbath seems to bring nearer the august verities of eternity, and imparts a profounder appreciation of the dignity and responsibility of human existence. From the Sabbath's holy height we can look down with a truer estimate upon the vanities of time, and learn to love earth less and heaven more.

The Sabbath antidates and adumbrates the rest that remains for the people of God.

"Where congregations never break up
And Sabbath have no end."

The songs of Zion, in God's earthly courts, are often loud and sweet; but when the great multitude that no man can number shall begin to sing in every tongues the song of Moses and the Lamb, it shall roll and swell as the sound of many waters—even as ocean roars in the sublime march and thunder of the storm. There the good hope to see their blessed God, and sing, and associate forever with illustrious natures, that rejoice in unfallen excellence, or have been made pure by the blood of the Lamb.

J. B. WALKER.

New Orleans, Dec., 1856.

Punctuality at Church.

Something like the following admonition needs to be sounded through every congregation, until the needed reform is accomplished. The Presbyterian says: "Want of punctuality as to attendance on the house of God is a well known grievance. Even those who are prompt to meet the engagements of the week, are tardy here. The drowsy atmosphere which the Sabbath seems to throw around many, is nowhere else more obvious. Langnor and tardiness pervade all their Sabbath movements. They rise late, breakfast late, go to church late, and continue their afterdinner slumbers so late, as habitually to prevent their attendance on afternoon services. The wheels of their mental and physical machinery may run ever so rapidly for the previous six days, but no sooner Sunday comes than they begin to drag. We venture to say that there are certain persons—churchmen too—whom their pastors have never seen present at the opening invocation a single Sabbath morning in their lives."

The Bible the True Touchstone.

Everywhere and always we find in tradition the anti-Christian beside the Christian, as every one must in himself, in his inward and outward life, be conscious of the same mixture; and what is seen on a small scale in the life of every individual Christian, is seen on a large scale in the life of the whole church. We are thus always in danger of confounding the Christian with the unchristian, what is of the flesh with what is of the Spirit, if we have not in the Divine word, which mirrors to us purely the operatilns of the Holy Spirit, a trustworthy source of knowledge, a sure testing principle, a fixed rule, by which, as in our own souls, so also in the traditions of the whole church, to separate that which is of God from that which is not.—Neander.

SEVERE, BUT TRUE.—Macaulay, in history of England, remarks, in reference to the character of those who often become converts to Popery: "We frequently see inquisitive and restless spirits take refuge from their own skepticism in the bosom of a Church which pretends to infallibillity, and after questioning the existence of a Deity, bring themselves to worship a wafer."

I consider that man as having attained the end of preaching, who constrains his hearer to forget everything else except the way in which he is personally affected by the great and interesting truths brought before him.—Innes.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

JAMES M. ELAM.

This venerable gentleman closed his earthly career at his residence in Baton Rouge, on Saturday, the 8th November. His disease as given by his physician, was originally Cardiac Neurnlgea, dependent on chronic gastritis, of which he died.

Mr. Elam was born in Virginia, on the 30th January, 1796, and was therefore, at his death, a little less than 61 years old. The circumstances of his parents allowed him but slender opportunities for acquiring an education. The only instruction he ever received was, at the age of 11 years, from a lady, who "professed to teach reading, writing, the enumeration and multiplication tables." "In these she was proficient, and J. M. E., who commenced in his letters, completed in nine months, the full course which cost all of six dollars." After leaving school he employed his leisure moments in reading every thing he could obtain that was calculated to enlarge the range of his thoughts. He adopted the political principles inculcated by the "Father of his country" in his farewell address—the first political essay that ever fell into his hands. These he adhered to as sacred, and cherished, and in all the aspects which the political history of our country has assumed, he maintained an uncompromising opposition to men and measures that were at variance with them. Though young, he was a devoted supporter of Mr. Madison's administration, and at the close of the war of 1812, was found stationed at Norfolk in the army. The enunciation of the principle—in reference to the arrogant exactions of Algiers—"A million for defence, but not a cent for tribute," met a hearty response in his feelings, and to contribute his mite towards the million for defence, he left home without an intimation of his purpose, and at New York entered as a landsman on board the frigate Guerriere, under the command of Com. Decatur. He was in the engagement with the Mageda frigate off cape Dr. Gat, and witnessed all the incidents of the expedition. Some of these he occasionally related to his friends with most thrilling effect.

A record of the incidents of this portion of his life, and of many years subsequent—too much for an obituary—would make an interesting volume—valuable for example and encouragement to the young, who, with a praise-worthy ambition to win for themselves an elevated position and an honorable name, are yet weighed down by present difficulties, and disheartened by others which they see like mountains rising on their path.

Having left the service of the government as poor as he entered it, he spent several years on the sea, and in freighting sugar from the coast to New Orleans. Few men have undegone severer trials and hardships than he did during these years, and few have contended against them with a stouter heart. Temperate, honest and indefatigable he struggled through all, and as his noblest reward maintained always a consciousness of his own rectitude, and the confidence of all who had any intercourse with him.

In 1820 he married, and soon after settled on a small place six miles from Baton Rouge, where he gave himself up to labor, clearing his own land, felling, splitting, and carrying on his shoulders the rails which enclosed a field of sixteen acres. In 1826 he purchased a place on the Amite. While residing here, and supporting his family on the fruits of his own honest toil, he received the appointment of Justice of the Peace. To fit himself for an intelligent discharge of the duties of office, he borrowed Law books, which he studied carefully and deligently during all the intervals of labor. Thus began—literally at the plow-handle—the fulfillment of an early longing to be a Lawer. A criminal case came under his cognizance, as Justice, which involved him in a protracted and somewhat excited controversy with those composing the tribunal, with the District Attorney and the Attorney General. In this case was exhibited in an eminent degree his love of justice, and the indomitable perseverance with which he stood out against all opposition in defence of a principle; while his wisdom was fully attested by the Legislature who reversed the proceedings of the other officials, and sustained the justice in the positions to which he had clung with such pertinacity. Soon after this he entered in good earnest upon the study of Law, and in August, 1832, was admitted to practice, after a thorough examination by Judge F. X. Martin.

In his own words, "he removed to Baton Rouge with his wife and five children, and opened an office with a forlorn hope of success at a bar composed of all accomplished scholars, and astute Lawyers." His success is known. He acquired an enviable distinction in his profession, commanding always a large share of the legal business of his own and other parishes as well as in the high courts.

His political views are well known throughout the South, and indeed throughout the Union. His patriotism was an engressing principle, and the preservation of the Union dearer to him than life. It is true that as a politician he sometimes had to encounter those jarring and unpleasant collisions which befal every man who engages as much and as ardently as he did in political debate. Yet, however unpalatable his opinions, and the fearless expression of them may have been to those entertaining opposite sentiments—especially to disunionists; filibusters and aggressionists—his sagacity, far-sightedness and honesty will be admitted by every ingenious man, and his position upon the great questions which have agitated the country for years past were respected, as appears from his correspondence, by the wisest statesmen of the land. As a public man he but shared the trials and disappointments of public men.

It was in the social and home relations of life that his virtues show conspicuous. Here he was appreciated. No man did more in proportion to his means for the advancement and support of every charitable enterprise and institution. The widow found him ever a friend, and the orphan a father. The needy found him willing to relieve his necessities, and the sick to minister to his wants, and alleviate, as far as human sympathy and service could, his sufferings. Every class of suffering humanity shared his active and unselfish benevolence, and hundreds live to remember him with gratitude and blessings.

In Baton Rouge he was the pillar of Methodism. He was a Christian and a Methodist from principle. Few have had their faith put to severer tests, and few have stood the test so well.

The ministers of our church, who, in the dark days of Methodism and religion, have found themselves in Baton Rouge, as transiant visiters, or as the tillers of a barren soil, will appreciate better than words can tell how emphatically his house was the preacher's home.

In his friendships he was ardent, faithful and, unselfish; and if ever there was a man who litorally would lay down his life for a friend, it was he.

He was the soul and centre of happiness at home. A more devoted husband and father never blessed and brightened the family circle, and none was ever more fully rewarded by the respect and devotion of wife and children. I asked him many years ago, how he managed so fully to secure the confidence and respect of his children, that even in their absence his slightest wish was their law, and to secure his approbation their greatest pleasure? He replied, that he endeavored to the utmost of his ability "to make home the most pleasant place in the world."

The illness which terminated with his life was a protracted and painful one. But there was no murmuring. He was patient under suffering, and grateful for every thing that was done for his relief or comfort. After he had lost to a great extent the power of audible utterance he would look around at the friends who ministered at his bedside, and whisper—"grateful," "grateful." When apprehensions first began to be entertained of the fatal termination of his disease, he told his pastor that the evidence of his acceptance was not so bright as he desired; but several days before his departure he gave us the fullest assurance that all was well, that even while walking through the dark valley he had received bright glimpses of what lay beyond it, that death had not only lost his terrors but was greeted as a welcome messenger to conduct him to everlasting joys. The three last days of his stay with us was a continued scene of the Christian's triumph over the last enemy. His friends partook with him of the holy communion administered by brother Crenshaw. As we arose from our knees he uttered with perfect distinctness the line which was sung by his children and friends. The mingled songs and sobs of the numerous company that thronged his bed-side, and the glad responses which his beaming countenance gave to the words of comfort repeated to him by his friend and brother left an impression that will not soon be erased from the minds of those present.

"Why should I start or fear to die?"

There was moral sublimity in his death. It was such an one as staggers, infidelity, and confirms the faith of the Christian.

The numerous procession which attended his remains to their last resting place, uttests how strong a hold he had upon the affections of the people.

HEAVEN'S ATTRACTIONS.

I have been thinking of the attractions of heaven—what there is in heaven to draw souls to it. I thought of the place—heaven has place. Christ says to his disciples, "I go to prepare a place for you." It is a part of the consolation with which he comforts them, that heaven is a place, and not a mere state. What a place must it be! We see, even on earth, places of great beauty, and we can conceive of spots far more delightful than any we see. But what comparison can these bear to heaven, where everything exceeds whatever eye has seen or imagination conceived? It is a "purchased possession." The price it cost the Purchaser every one knows. Now, having purchased it, he has gone to prepare it; to set it in the order; to lay out his skill upon it. O what a place Jesus will make—has already made heaven! The place should attract us.

Then I thought of the society. It is composed of the nobility of the universe. The various orders of angels who kept their first estate—as humble as they are high—not ashamed of men. Why should they be, when the Lord of angels is not ashamed to call us brethren? The excellent of the earth also—all the choice spirits of every age and nation—the first man—the first martyr—the translated patriarch—the survivor of the deluge—the friend of God, and his juniors Isaac and Israel—Moses the lawgiver, and Joshua the leader of the host—the pious kings—the prophets—the evangelists and apostles, Paul, John—the martyrs—the reformers—the Puritan fathers—the missionaries Swartz, Brainerd, Martyn, Carey, and Morrison, and others who are fast following on.

Is that all? Where is he who used to lisp, "Father, mother"—thy child?—Passing out of your hands, passed he not into those of Jesus? Yes, you sufferred him. If any other than Jesus had said, "Suffer them to come to me," your would have said, No. Jesus is not going to lose one of those little brilliants. All shall be in his crown.

Perhaps thou hast a brother, or a sister there; that should draw you towards heaven. Perhaps a mother—she whose eye wept while it watched over thee, until at length it grew dim and closed. Took she not in her cold handthine, while yet her heart was warm, and said she not, "I am going to Jesus—follow me there?" Perhaps one nearer, dearer than child, than brother, than mother—the nearest, dearest is there. Shall I say who? Christian female, thy husband. Christian father, the young mother of thy babes. He is not. She is not; for God took them.—Has heaven no attractions?

Heaven is gaining in attractions every day. True, the principal attractions continue the same; but the lesser ones multiply. Some have attractions there now, which they had not a few months ago. Earth is losing, but earth's losses are heaven's gains. They who have left so many dwelling-places of earth so desolate, have gone to their Father's house in heaven. What if they shall not return to us? We shall go to them. That is better.

But the principal attractions I have not yet mentioned. There is our Father, our heavenly Father, whom we have so often addressed as such in prayer. He that nourished and brought us up, and has borne us on—he that has watched over us with an eye that never sleeps, and provided for us with a hand that never tires; and who can pity too.—We have never seen our heavenly Father, but there he reveals himself.—There he smiles; and the nations of the saved walk in the light of his countenance.

And there is He, to depart and be with whom Paul desired as being "far better" than to live. There is his glorified humanity. If not having seen, we love him; and in him, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, what will be the love and the joy when we shall see him as he is? There he is.

Heaven has attractions, many and strong; and yet, who would think it? how few feel and obey the heavenly attraction! How much more powerfully earth acts upon us! How unwilling we are to leave it even for heaven!—Nevins.

THE TEMPORAL REWARDS OF MORALITY NO GUARANTEE OF FUTURE BLESSEDNESS.

There is a physical morality. The word of God, in specific language, or in implied direction, commands a life of temperance in food and beverage, a strict restraint upon the licentious appetites, regular industry and labor, cleanliness of person and apparel, and observance of frequent days of rest. The general moral sense of mankind has given to most of these rules an independent sanction. Now, although the result of such physical morality is not the sole object of its injunction in Scripture, nor are all the consequences clearly foreseen, where the unaided moral sense enjoins it; yet the sure tendency of such observances is to bring the entire body to that state where all its parts of blood and bone and muscle, of sensitive nerve and organic functions, are fitted in their separate and mutual action to give the frame its highest power of strength and endurance, and fitness for all the peculiar purposes of its existence: and in the mere physical consciousness of this healthful existence, there is a physical happiness. It is not merely the absence of pain and uneasiness, but a positive feeling of buoyancy and exhilaration. And just in proportion as those laws are not observed, there is a corresponding loss of their physical rewards, and a gradual sinking into positive suffering and disease. "Even as we walk the streets we meet with illustrations of each extreme. Here behold a patriarch, whose stock of vigor three score years and ten seem hardly to have impaired. His erect form, his firm step, his elastic limbs, and undimmed senses, are so many certificates of good conduct; or, rather, so many jewels and orders of nobility with which nature has honored him for his fidelity to her laws. His fair complexion shows that his blood has never been corrupted; his pure breath, that he has never yielded his digestive apparatus for a vintner's cess-pool; his exact language and keen apprehension, that his brain has never been drugged or stupified by the poisons of distiller or tobacconist. Enjoying his powers to the highest, he has preserved the power of enjoying them. Despite the moral of the school-boy's story, he has eaten his cake and still kept it. As he drains the cup of life, there are no lees at the bottom. His organs will reach the goal of existence together. Painlessly as a candle burns down in its socket, so will he expire; and a little imagination would convert him into another Enoch, translated from earth to a better world without the sting of death.

"But look at an opposite extreme, where an opposite history is recorded. What wreck so shocking to behold as the wrock of a dissolute man: the vigor of life exhausted, and yet the first steps in an honorable career not taken; in himself a lazar-house of diseases; dead by a heathenish custom of society not buried! Rogues have had the initial letter of the title burnt into the palms of their hands. Even for murder, Cain was only brunded on the forehead; but over the debauchee, or the inebriate, the signatures of infamy are written. How nature brands him with stigma and opprobrium! How she hangs labels all over him, to testify her disgust at his existence, and to admonish others of his example! How she loosens all his joints, sends tremors along his muscles, and bends forward his frame, as if to bring him upon all fours with kindred brutes, or to degrade him to the reptiles crawling! How she disfigures his countenance, as if intent upon obliterating all traces of her own image, so that she may swear she never made him! How she pens them over his eyes, sends foul spirits to inhabit his breath, and shrieks, as with a trumpet, from every poro of his body, 'BEHOLD A BEAST!'"*

Such, then, are the rewards and the retributions which sanction a physical morality.

There is an intellectual morality—a morality not yet comprehended as such by society, and not specifically commanded in the word of God, because its full exercise or rejection is only possible in those advanced stages of civilization and freedom upon which the race has scarcely entered; but a morality destined but to take its place beside the recognized duties of man, and urge its claims as forcibly, and with as palpable sanctions as even physical virtue. Careful observation, sober thought, close application in study, truthfulness in argument, indulgence of the fancy only as it may sweep through space as the satellite of reason—these will be some of the injunctions in the decalogne of that new morality. And it will have its reward: the quick, clear perception, accurate and ready memory, sound judgment, clearness and reach of logic, and the chastened imagination that, like heaven's light, tints with ethereal coloring the blade, and the ear, and the full corn of thought, and crowns fertility with beauty.

But there is a social morality, recognized from the beginning. The commandments of the second tablo of the decalogue, explained by the sermon on the mount; the dictates of that social justice which reverences the rights of others in person, or estate, or character, and the minuter and less definable duties, revealed by the diviner radiance that beams forth when Justice is transfigured into Love; the palpable and direct applications of these great principles, and the observance of those legislative enactments, and conventional rules, which tend to secure the general peace and prosperity: such are the obligations which social morality lays upon the citizen, the man of business, the philanthropist, and the friend. Its rewards are as generous as its retribution is terrible. Respectability, commercial credit, honor, the courtesies of life, sympathy in misfortune, kindness from those we love. Each moralist reaps a larger share of happiness than he individually gives. Each heart and life in a community, being like a burnished reflector, which, having its proper position and polish, gives its light to the common stock, but gathers a larger radiance from every other; and which, being displaced and tarnished, gives but little, and gathers less. The transgressor lives in a dark atmosphere of legal penalty and commercial distrust, of friendlessness and shame.

There is also a domestic morality—of which we speak separately, because we find it, more than any other, exercised without reference to other duties. Conjugal fidelity, parental tenderness, filial reverence and affection, and fraternal love—how human nature has felt their beauty and their sanctity, even where religion has not yet thrown over them her holier loveliness! And they have their reward. Amid the sheltering care of the domestic circle, a sacred joy springs up, like a pure spring beneath the clustering palm-trees, an oasis green and cheerful, a retreat and compensation, amid all the heat and conflict of surrounding deserts. The music of happy voices encircling our firesides and our tables—the smile of greeting—the sympathy in sorrow—the nameless little kindnesses that sparkle off from the altar of family affection—the unwearied watching of the sick chamber—and the soft arm of latest devotion, which soothes and sustains us, and aids us to lean securely upon the rod and the staff which now alone can comfort us through the shadow: all these are but the responsive blessings to that love, and care, and gentleness, which we have shown our households—the natural reward of a true domestic morality.

Once more: we may speak of a morality of the passions, apart from actual intercourse and observation by others. It is a Scriptural duty to rule our own spirits, to cultivate the generous sentiments, to repress the malevolent impulses, and to check even the necessary instincts of resentment and justice within due moderation. Now, apart from the fact that in a well-regulated social state, the gratification of the vindictive passions is most commonly debarred, and the evil affection suffers the pang of disappointment, it has been clearly shown that as each generous and noble impulse, whether it shall succeed or not in its aims, has in itself a sweetness like the glow of a healthful frame, so the malignant passions, however they may be gratified, have a constitutional misery, as a frenzied drinkard grasps the cup amid the tortures of his delirium. "Anger, wrath, malice, envy," like vipers nestling in the bosom, sting the breast that cherishes them, however shut in from outward victims. And, on the other hand, there is no loftier consciousness vouchsafed to the moralist, than to feel his mastery of himself—that he is not like a dismantled bark, borne away by every wind and current, but has in itself a controlling power, and, by an internal force, breasts them at its will.

Now we have glanced thus hastily at these several moralities, not to see what they were in themselves, but to call attention to the fact of their independence of each other; and that, existing thus separately, no one can be inferred from the existence of the other.

And, as their moralities are distinct, so are their rewards separate. Each bears its own fruit, and each fruit crowns its own tree. The reward of domestic morality is no evidence of public esteem and confidence. So far is physical temperance, and its results, from betokening social morality, that the robust frame thus produced may only call for heavier manacles, and a stronger gibbet. The reward of all the lower excellencies, therefore, cannot argue the existence, nor the reward, of the highest. It is as though each virtue stood upon a seperate pedestal, and was crowned with a seperate wreath. All but one may stand erect, and their crown witness their approval by the Judge: yet neither these perfect statues, nor their crowns, prove that the noblest of them all may not lie beside them, prostrate and crownless in the dust.

Now, in view of these facts, may we not say, that if there should be added a new department of our being, or a new circle of relationship should gather around us, higher than any yet mentioned, so that there would be a new morality, the same rules would hold? Whether it in any way involved the lower moralities or not, they would not prove its existence, nor would their rewards prove its reward. Just as all but one of the common moralities cannot imply that highest virtue which remains, so all earthly moralities would not prove the existence of the added excellence and duties, nor all earthly blessings guarantee the new reward.

Now, we aver that there is such a distinct and loftier morality, with its distinct reward. The soul has relations to a God, as personal in being, as definite in His attributes, as any finite soul; and the duties due to him are as palpable as those of any earthly relationship. It needs no argument to prove the profusion and exuberance of His bestowments, the ceaselessness and minuteness of His services, and the benevolence, the compassion, the forbearance, and the tenderness, of the great heart of God; nor need we dwell upon the responsive affection and services which we owe to him. If filial affection be a duty; if ingratitude is detestable; if reverence for the good be incumbent upon all; and if implicit obedience to law, which, with farseeing wisdom, provides for the common welfare, be indispensable to true morality; then do our relations to the great Father of all spirits, to the Benefactor who makes both nature and human generosity to be but the almoners of his large bounty, to the Holy One and Just, to the Lawgiver whose unerring wisdom guides his perfect love—then do our relations to Him call for as ceaseless reverence, and love, and gratitude, and for as ceaseless embodiment of those feelings in active service, as any earthly morality. The acknowledgement of our felt dependence and indebtedness, in prayer and praise; the careful study of revelation, and of providential openings, as intimations of His command or wish; the glad consecration of time, and thought, to the filial communion of spirit with Spirit; and the minute watchfulness over all that may meet his favor or rebuke—these constitute a distinct morality.

And as the moralities are distinct, so are their rewards. The earthly bring earthly blessings; the spiritual, a spiritual recompense. So far, of course, as the great morality implies the observance of the lower, it secures their natural results; but its own peculiar benefits are distinct, and not implied by them. The approving love of God, the sweet manifestation of His presence, his strength and consolations, the conscious assimilation to his character—the fullness of exceeding great and precious promises, bringing a peace that passeth understanding, and a love that passeth knowledge—these are some of those spiritual benefits which yield the highest happiness of which human nature is capable. Now, therefore, as all other moralities in no way imply this loftier excellence, neither do their rewards imply the guarantee of this loftier recompence. When these earthly rewards, and their virtuous acts, and the relationships which called them forth, have passed away, the question of eternal morality and eternal rewards will stand, as it does to-day, alone—to be determined by its own evidences.—Natural Goodness, (Mercein.)

There are no less than nine Medical Schools and Colleges of various kinds in the city of Philadelphia. There are upwards of fifteen hundred students in attendance at the present time.

Kinds words are the brightest flowers of earth's existence; they make a very paradise of the humblest home the world can show. Use them, especially around the fireside circle. They are jewels beyond price, and more precious to heal the wounded heart, and make the weighed-down spirit glad, than all other blessings the earth can give.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DEC. 27, 1856.

Bishop Kavanaugh and his wife arrived on Saturday morning, the 13th inst. The Bishop will remain in the city and vicinity [illegible] meeting of the Louisiana Conference, which convenes at Waterproof, Parish of Tensas, February 4.—His presence amongst us is exceedingly gratifying, and his services in the pulpit will be appreciated and gratefully acknowledged. We are warranted in promising additional contributions of California "items."

Anniversary of the South Western Bible Society.—The meeting at Odd Fellows' Hall, on Sunday night last, was largely attended. With the exception of the "Church of the Messiah," (Rev. Dr. Miller), the Protestant churches were closed, and their congregations in attendance. The ministers were there, "dwelling together in unity." Two Bishops were on the platform—a Methodist and an Episcopalian. George C. Lacey, Esq., and Rev. Dr. Palmer delivered the addresses. The speech of the former was a chaste and beautiful one, but not well heard throughout the hall. Dr. Palmer's effort was excellent in its adaptation to the platform and the occasion. About five hundred dollars were realized from the collection. The Secretary's report exhibited the affairs of the society as being in a hopeful and prosperous condition.

The Lady's Home Magazine, for January '57, edited by T. S. Arthur and Virginia F. Townsend. This number commences vol ix, is printed on a new and beautiful type, and the whole style of the work is greatly improved. The colored steel engraving of Winter is an exquisite picture, and worth the cost of the volume.

Historical Discourses.—We understand Major James Wright Simons, a lecturer of great celebrity, intends giving shortly, at the Lyceum Hall, a series of lectures on the historic personages of this and other lands.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

Sabbath Bells Chimed by the Poets.

Poetry of the Year. Containing Passages of the Poets' Description of the Seasons.

Poetry of the Woods.

Poetry of the Fields.

These four elegant octavos, uniform size, illustrated, are from the publishing house of E. C. Butler & Co., Philadelphia, and laid on our table by J. C. Morgan, Exchange Place, New Orleans. The contents of these books comprise the choicest selections from the American and British poets. They are put up in rich, substantial ornamental binding, and beautifully illustrated. We have met with nothing more appropriate and valuable in the way of Gift Books during the season.

J. C. Morgan has placed us under renewed obligations for three nice books for children, from C. Scribner, Publisher, New York:—

Jesus upon Earth; or, The Story of His Birth, Life, Death, and Resurrection. Handsomely illustrated, and suitable for the Young.

The Story of Columbus. Simplified for the Young Folks. By Sarah H. Bradford. With Illustrations from Original Designs.

Never Mind the Face; or, The Cousin's Visit. By Hatty Holyoke. With Illustrations.

Progress of Protestantism in Prussia.—The Christian Union says: "There are some millions of Papists in this monarchy, though a large majority of the population is Lutheran. The Jesuit print at Paris, the Univers, is all the time declaring that Protestantism is dead in Germany, and everywhere else. But sometimes it forgets its cue, and some very singular admissions escape from it. Hear what it says of Prussia, in its number for July 1st: "In all the Catholic [illegible], as it appears by the statistics, the number of Protestants is increasing in a frightful manner. Dusseldorf, which used to be altogether Catholic, now numbers seven thousand Protestants. There is a certain parish at Cologne, which now counts scarcely any Catholics.' Alarmed at results like these, the Univers winds up its article with a cry to its Prussian co-religionists: "Wake up! for the enemy is not asleep!"

Divinity, Geometry, and Language.—At the scientific meeting at Albany, Prof. Gibson remarked upon a curious question of geometry and languages. Three letters occur in almost all primitive languages. They are a line, a circle and an angle—thus: I, A, O. In almost all languages these letters are used in the word expressing Divinity. Greek Ao, the root of aiaos, "the Eternal." In Hindoo, Japanese, and other Asiatic tongues, the same letters occur in Moolee, the word for Spirit. The letters in the old Greek or Phœnician alphabet are the first, last and middle letters, signifying the beginning, middle, and end—Alpha, Iota, and Omega.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Tuskegee, Ala., Dec. 11.

Yesterday I reached this place after a going about that need not be described very minutely; but I will touch upon it.

The Mississippi Conference adjourned Tuesday. I sent a list of appointments in time for last week's paper. After dinner, I bade adieu to the kind family of Mr. M'Adora, my host, and started for Tuskegee. By what way, think ye? My route direct lay to the south east; but the one taken, to the north west.—The prairie road between Kosciosko and Columbus, Miss., and that between Kosciosko and the Mobile Railroad were reported impassable, on account of the rains. I have reason since to doubt the correctness of the report. Bro. Owen and Dr. Hamilton, being business men, and knowing the travelling modes, recommended the longest way round as the shortest way through. I will here designate it as the Ram's Horn Route.

Tuesday night, in such a vehicle as Dr. Hamilton and myself could tinker up and pay for between us, we reached the hospitable mansion of Brother Simeon Clark—thirteen miles on the way to Lexington. Next morning cleared off clear and cold, and my friend Clark, on account of his good feeling for the Advocate, which he reads, stood the Editor in a pair of warm woollens inside and outside his boots. Good outfit, that.

Bro. Harrington helped us on our journey, and we four took the stage at Lexington, for Holly Springs. Saturday evening we are at Holly Springs. The schedule promised to put us there by Friday morning.

But detention was our least trouble, except to the Bishop. He was bent on being at his Conference in time; his anxiety for progress overruled every other. We travelled or, rather, we were out a night, and only made seventeen miles.—We stalled, broke traces and king bolts, lamed horses, and carried fence rails, and prized out, and did more than work our passage. I tried the backbone of the Episcopacy myself, in more than one lift, and found it stiff enough for the office. Bishop Pierce comes down to a mired wheel admirably.

Well, what with turning over the stage, bogging down, horses running away, walking up the hills and such like, we got safely through that mode of wayfaring, thankful for saving our bones, though we lost several "connections." The trip was so bad, nothing can atone for it. I hope the Bishop's graphic pen will do justice to that portion of his route. I am sure he has met, in all his travels, with nothing to beat it.

Holly Springs is a pleasant village.—The Female Collegiate Institute, presided over by Rev. D. J. Allen, is situated in an eligible place, and forms a handsome and costly property. We dined with the Principal, in the same hall where were spread numerous tables; at which the young ladies, in social groups, dined also. I say young ladies, for I have never seen so many grown or nearly grown ones at an institution of the kind. Arrangements looked well for moral and social, as well as mental education. Order, even refinement characterized the dinner hour; and that was the only occasion when we saw the students in a body. I was pleased to learn that several daughters of Louisiana were sharing the benefits of this institution, and, of course, they compare well with any in it. The Principal understands a thing or two: among others, he advertises in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and pays for it; so his patrons know where to go.

In the morning of Sabbath the Bishop occupied the pulpit. Preaching, he preached. A good congregation had met to hear their regular pastor, Rev. Amos Kendall. The church is sadly in need of repair, and gave an unpleasant impression of Holly Springs.

The cars run from this place to intersect the Memphis and Charleston R. R., twenty-three miles. There is a fine promise of railroads in Mississippi, if one may judge from the road-beds laid out and graded. At Corinth we again take stage to Buzzard's Roost, twenty-five miles. Here the rail takes up the line continuously to Montgomery; that place ought to have a better name, for it is in a very good region of country.

The horse-shoe is completed, the heels of which are Kosciosko and Tuskegee. The Bishop gets in after the morning session is over, notwithstanding his efforts to be in time. I advise no one to try that Ram's Horn or Horse-Shoe route again. Better get mud boots and trudge through the prairie. The stage drivers had missed connecting, lost their mails about a dozen times, and they didn't seem to care much. They laid up at pleasure, or jogged on. Besides, vulgarity, obscenity and profanity of language, in that portion of Mississippi, is without a parallel.

The Conference was organized by electing Rev. E. V. Levert, President; Rev. T. W. Dorman, sec. About fifteen have been admitted on trial into the Conference, and others are yet to apply for admission.

The Treasurer, Rev. P. R. Blue, from a glance at the case, is pretty confident that Alabama has reached her $30,000 of missionary money.

Tuskegee is a beautiful village. Within a few years it has gone forward in improvements with an astonishing stride—her public buildings devoted to education, by the Baptists and Methodists, would do credit to the largest cities.—The private mansions wear an aspect of taste and wealth.

Religious services have been attended with interest, but the rain, which set in yesterday, will, I fear, hinder the congregations. The Committees on Examination and Classes were on the ground by the first day of the week, and spent Monday and Tuesday in a thorough work.

Red River Mission, La., Conf.

Herewith transmit you my report from the 15 June up to date.

I have received 10 whites and 81 blacks on probation, and found 20 from last year by brother Goodjoin. Baptized 3 children, have 11 appointments—all Sabbath appointments. I have access to about 620 negroes. We are not able to report many conversions, but general good feeling.

We have no class meetings or catechezing for want of time. The owners and overseers take an interest; they are whole souled people.

DEDICATION.

At last the Methodist people in Montevallo have a comfortable house of worship. For the greater part of two years we held our services in the basement of the Masonic Hall, thence we moved to the chapel of the Institute, and last Sabbath we found a "local habitation" in our own new house of worship. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. S. W. Dorman, D. D., from Mat. 28, 18, 19, 20; theme, the Kingdom of Christ. Bro. Dorman preached again at night, from Luke 14, 16, 17; theme, the Gospel Supper; and after the sermon administered the Sacrament of the Lord Supper. A goodly number of communicants met around the altar. It was truly a time of rejoicing to the people of God—a gospel feast, and our new Church was further consecrated to God, by the triumphant shout of happy Christians. Brother D., has driven down a strong peg for religion, in Methodist form, in this place.

The True Christian.

It is impossible that any should be true members of Christ without being in some degree conformed to his image, for they are called in Him, according to the purpose of God; this being His will, and therefore His eternal purpose, even our sanctification. After this manner St. Paul exhibits the golden chain of salvation. We know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified! There are none glorified who are not previously justified through faith in that blood that cleanseth from all sin; none are justified but those that are called to God in Christ; none are called according to God's sanctifying purpose, who are not members of that body, the spiritual church, that from all eternity was predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son; and the church has not been predestined to glory, without a full foreknowledge in the wisdom of God, of each separate member, that should enter into its constitution. With the divine decrees we can have nothing further to do. We are placed in a state of salvation, in that body whose path of holiness has been decreed from everlasting. Sufficient have we to think of, if, in that strait and narrow path, we have grace given to us, as unworthy members of Christ's body, to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling.—Rev. W. W. Harvey.

It is said of Melancthon, that when he made appointment, he expected not only the hour but the minute to be fixed, that no term might be wasted in idleness of suspense; and also of Washington, that when his secretary, being repeatedly late in his attendance, laid the blame to his watch, he said, "You must either get another watch, or I another secretary."

NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—The long, delicious evenings of winter have come again, bringing with them warm firesides, and cheerful lights, and groups of happy faces which meet "when the day is done" to while away the hours devoted to home. It is so delightful to

"Stir the fire, and close the shutters fast, Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round."

and so, "welcome peaceful evening in," that we are tempted to wish for winter all the year, in spite of the frown he sometimes wears. Yet this would never do; and, without doubt, it is a good thing that we make so many wishes in vain. There is no small share of philosophy in the old fairy tale about the man and his wife, who were so poor they had nothing to eat, and what was worse, no means of getting anything. For some cause or other, these unfortunate people were visited by a fairy who granted them three wishes. Every child knows the sequel of the story, and it is easy to believe that were wisest of us—Solomon excepted—left to choose for ourselves, the result, in all cases, would be no better.

We had a Thanksgiving Day here; but whatever the people may have done at home, in the way of eating and drinking, it is certain but few of them participated in the public expressions of gratitude to God for his mercies. It is true that the church doors were all opened, the bells rung, and the preachers in their places, but ——— it was a rainy day, and, notwithstanding overshoes and umbrellas are made expressly for such emergencies, they are unsightly things, you know, and after all, it was only a Thanksgiving Day.

Everybody took it for granted that everybody else was thankful, I suppose, and so gave themselves no further trouble about it. I cannot vouch for the truth of the statement, but it is said that one of the churches was so full of empty pews, that it was not considered worth while to have any sermon at all!

The very rain which kept the people away from church, was to us, as a community, one of the greatest inducements for rendering thanksgiving, inasmuch as it caused the long wished-for, arise in the river, which is now in fine navigable order. The wharf has assumed the appearance so agreeable to business men, and in mercantile phrase, "trade is looking up."

As we approach the close of eighteen hundred and fifty six, the principal concern on the mind of all, seems to be the settlement of its accounts on New-Years Day. We begin to measure the depths of our pockets nervously, and with a half-expressed fear that they will be found too shallow to flout the domestic ship; and, in the meantime, the ladies have drawn off prettily and gracefully enough to watch the meeting of their husbands and fathers with the merchants who have so smilingly tempted them to make good bargains through the past year. Truth to speak, one can scarcely blame them for patronizing our Nashville merchants, who are certainly remarkable as a class, for their gentlemanly and accommodating demeanor.

Considerable excitement is prevailing just now about the suspected negro insurrections which have been discovered in Dover, a small town on the Cumberland river, a hundred miles from us.—Three white men—two Englishmen and a Yankee—who were proved guilty, beyond a doubt, of having instigated the negroes to revolt, were taken and and severely whipped, and several of the ringleaders have been hung. It is horrible to think that men who should and do know better, can deliberately persuade the slaves into a measure so wicked and hopeless. All this, too, against the very community by whose patronage they were supported. The belief is said to be current among the slaves, that Buchanan's election will lead to their freedom in a year's time.

Since I wrote you last, M'Kendree Church has lost its oldest, and one of its most valuable members. Brother Joseph T. Eliston, whose venerable form and urbane, cheerful manner, you doubtless remember, has been called away from his earthly home, to the enjoyment of a more enduring one in heaven. He became a member of this church when its members were few and feeble, and lived to see its wonderful prosperity, having been its fast friend and able councillor through many years of toil and change. Our venerable brother was a cherished friend and associate of Bishop M'Kendree who was always a welcome and honored guest in his house. In conversation with one of the ministers who visited him on his death-bed, Brother Eliston remarked that it was no trouble for him to die. It had been the work of many years to prepare for this solemn hour, and when the messenger came, was he ready. Peace to the memory of the good.

Another concert for the benefit of the German Mission, is to be given in the Odd Fellows' Hall, on next Tuesday evening. It is earnestly to be desired that Brother Barth will not be disappointed in his noble efforts to build up an evangelical church among his countrymen. They are becoming more numerous in our midst every year, and if we do not afford them the means of religious instruction, their presence may prove a serious evil. Most of those already here are said to be infidel in sentiment.

A few days ago, a large brick building in process of erection on the square, and designed for a business house, was blown down. No lives were lost and the workmen are busy removing the rubbish in order to try it again. Smaller accidents from the same source are frequent.

Improvement is still the order of the day in Nashville. A few months since, an old and wealthy citizen gave some acres in the immediate vicinity for a public park, and from present indications it would seem that the city is going out in search of it. Beautiful streets have been made in the neighborhood, and several handsome houses built while others are now in contemplation. I noticed the other day in passing, that preparations are making for putting up the Custom House, and wherever one may go, evidences of growth are to be met with. Instead of removing the market-house, as proposed some time ago, the authorities are enlarging the old one where it stands, and the picturesque ruins of the courthouse have been removed to make room for another and handsomer one.

I have no news of special interest from the Publishing House this month. Brother Owen and Drs. Summers, Hamilton and Sehon have been absent several weeks attending conferences. Dr. Stevenson left us a few days since for Richmond, probably to attend to the removal of the Quarterly.

Yours Truly,

CROTCHET.

FLORENTINE CORRESPONDENCE.

Florentine, Ala., Dec. 4th, 1856.

Some months ago, I sent you quite a lengthy communication, I judge from a remark of yours in a late number of your paper, that you did not receive it; I will now send you another.

Since my last, another Conference has commenced, and we have our new preacher, Rev. John Matthews, with us.

Mr. Mutthews is a remarkable man, and I should like to introduce him to your readers. Allbeit, I am not given to character painting.

He may be a little below the medium size, rather stooped, dark hair, round face, massive forehead, heavy eyebrows, and large, round hazel eyes. His eyes, when in repose, appear as though he were looking in upon himself, examining the workings of his own mind and heart, and seem as calm as some deep unruffled lake, but when he becomes excited, they blaze and shine like brilliant stars.

As a preacher, he possesses the following characteristics:

He has great compress power and versatility of voice. In its low intonations, it is soft and melodeous as the sweetest music, but when raised, it sounds more like the notes of the trumpet than any human voice I have ever heard.

In the expression of contempt, in low guttural accents, to which every lineament of his face gives force, he is unequalled. He does not confine himself to one position, he stands out on the platform before his audience, his head shakes, his agitated soul beams from his countenance, his eyes shine with almost unearthly splendor, his hands and arms are thrown in every direction, and the whole man, from head to foot, moving, acting, preaches with wonderful effect. His preaching is topical, he selects his subjects with care, and investigates it with thoroughness.

For power, aptness and beauty of illustration, I have rarely met his equal. He draws his illustrations from history, nature, art, revelations, from heaven, earth and hell.

In his sermon on courage, you are made to see Luther before the diet of worms, and to hear his voice as it comes pealing in thunder tones, "Were the devils as thick as the tiles upon the houses, I would not hesitate, I would go." In his sermon on influence, he illustrates the influence of the parent, by one of the statues of Greenough, in which an angel is represented as guiding a child to Heaven. So vivid is the illustration that you are made to see the child, timidly shrinking from the splendid glories about the throne, while the parent points with one hand, and beckons with the other.

Simplicity is another beautiful characteristic of his preaching. His command of language is great, his imagination rich and chaste, and his power over an audience wonderful. One while every countenance is wreathed with smiles, and again, while the smile still plays, almost every eye is streaming with tears.

He is evidently a student of nature, and knows the heart and the access to it.

With all, he is somewhat eccentric, an evidence of his eccentricity—the second sabbath here, (for the purpose of taking off those ad captandum preachers, who in order to secure a large audience, advertise that they will preach a series of sermons to the young) between singing the doxology and the benediction, while the congregation were still standing, he made the following announcement:

"As it is common, I will announce, that every sabbath morning and every sabbath night, I will preach in this church to the young men—and old men—to the young women—and the old women, provided they will come to hear me until otherwise informed." But the eccentricity soon disappears in the sterling qualities of the man and the preacher. But the crowning glory of Brother M.'s preaching is his unction. A glorious revival has been the result of his preaching. It is true he was assisted during the revival, by your old friend Rev. R. H. R.; by our P. E. Rev. W. H. Browning, and Dr. Mitchell and Prof. Rodgers of the O. S. Presbyterian Church But the revival commenced under one of his thrilling sermons. As the result of this meeting we report 70 conversions, 57 additions to the M. E. Church, and seven to the Presbyterian. About forty of the converts were students of the University. The revival affected the entire population of our town, no opposition whatever was manifested, all desired the work to continue, and although the last week it rained hard, the congregations were large, and were deeply interested. I attribute this deep interest partly to the fact that our Presbyterian friends entered into it with as much zeal as the Methodist.

Said a young convert to me: "It did my heart good to see the Presbyterians laboring so in the altar; it proves this work is of God."

Our University is still flourishing; about one hundred and sixty students have entered. Prof. T. H. Malone, a graduate of Virginia University, fills the chair to which Rev. A. Erwin was elected. Prof. Malone is a thorough scholar, an indefatigable student, a high toned gentleman and an amiable, successful, efficient christian teacher. Prof. S. De Soto is a native of Spain, a Protestant converted under the preaching of the Rev. Dr. Linn, fills the chair of Modern Languages, and is adjunct Prof. of Ancient Languages. He writes and speaks some six or seven different languages. He would be an ornament to any Institution.

The health of Florence is now fine. We have lately had such rains that our river is in fine boating order, and the shrill whistle is almost daily heard at our wharf. New Orleans boats of large size would meet with difficulty. Cotton is plenty at our wharf.

This is the end of both my sheet and my strength.

FLORENTINE.

Happy Home.—Hamilton says that all things are requisite to make home happy. Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholster. It must be warmed by affection, and industry the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing fresh salubrity day by day, while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

Good humor is the clear sky of the soul, in which every star of talent will shine more clearly, and the sun of genius encounter no vapors in his passage. It is the most exquisite beauty of a fine face; a redeeming grace in a homely one. It is like the green in a landscape, harmonizing in every color, mellowing the light, softening the hues of the dark, or, like the flutter in a full concert of instruments, a sound, not at first discovered by the ear, yet filling up the breaks in the concord with its deep melody.

Watch and Pray.—Beware of all the malignant passions. They are great foes to grace. Envy is devilish. Hatred is murderous. Wrath is cruel. Evil pervishness destroys equanimity, and connected thought is impossible. God's Spirit is a dove, not a bird of prey. He flies from noise and strife. He who rules not his own spirit will be ruled by an evil spirit.

Greatness of Mercy.—No sin is so great but the satisfaction of Christ and his mercies are greater; it is beyond comparison. Fathers and mothers, in tenderest affections, are but beams and trains to lead us upwards to the infinite mercy of God in Christ.—Sibbs.

The greater your wants, the greater your encouragement to go to God for supply; for the greater will be the glory in supplying them; He says "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

NEW SUBSCRIBERS CALLED FOR—10,000 to the Home Circle—3000 to the Quarterly Review, and not less than 50,000 to the Sunday school Visitor.

Shall we not have them by the first of January next? This is a grave question; and we submit it in confidence to the ministry, membership, and friends of the entire Connection. Brethren in the ministry, we look to you especially for a large increase of patronage to all our Publishing House Periodicals. The present is a favorable season for obtaining new subscribers, as well as for securing the renewal of old ones. On leaving your different charges, for the purpose of attending your respective Conferences, would it not be well to take with you from five to twenty new subscribers? This can certainly be done in almost every case, if the proper efforts be made. And on entering the new fields of labor to which you may be assigned, if you desire, as we knew you do, to see a great and glorious revival of enlightened, genuine, and enduring piety among the people of your several charges; and if you would bring all the available means and instrumentalities of the Church to bear on the accomplishment of this one great object, let all our prodical issues be fully and freely circulated in every part of your work; and see to it, that this be done at the earliest possible day. Confiding implicitly both in your ability and disposition to carry out this important enterprise, we have but to remind you that a strict, though prudent, adherence to the cash system, will be to the interests of all concerned. Be careful to receive the money, as far as practicable, at the time of taking the subscriptions and renewals; and doat fail to remit it to us, if possible, in connection with the names and post offices of the subscribers.—This will be a special accomodation to us, and a great relief to our clerks.

A minister who lives an idle life may preach with truth and reason, or as did the pharisees; but not as Christ, or as one having authority.—Bp. Taylor.

LOCAL NEWS.

Business.

Trade in the city is very active just now. Of it the Crescent says:—"The general business of the city—the prospects for the season were never more flattering. We might be asked to point out these favorable indications, but it would be a bootless task to convince unbelievers in the go-aheaditiveness of New Orleans. Those who are not open to conviction, and who will not believe in the future greatness and prosperity of our city, it would be a waste of time to place before them figures, comparisons and general statistics. Will these parties who are individually and constantly predicting evil and woe for New Orleans, give us the reasons, explain the cause why and wherefore the general money market of this city has for twelve months been so abundantly supplied with money as to be accessible at all times, at rates varying from 2@4 per cent. less than in any other market in this confederacy, and particularly so much below the great financial and commercial metropolis, New York? Explain all this, Messieurs Croakers, and alarmist controvert the fact if you can, that New Orleans now stands higher in the commercial and financial arrivals of the present time than any other community on the globe, not even excepting the old cities of Europe, where ten per cent. par has been paid on comaercial papers of standing, and that within the last thirty days.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

STORM IN THE PARISH OF TERREBENNE.—The Houma Ceres, of Saturday last, says:

On Wednesday last, between 1 and 3 o'clock, our parish was visited by a regular hurricane and rain storm. Although it blew terribly here, yet our town was not in the main track of the tornado:—Below this most of the damage has been done. Mr. Wm. Bisland's sugar-house sustained considerable injury. The cooling room and a portion of the purgery were demolished, involving the loss of several hogsheads of sugar. He will, however, be enabled to repair damages in time to save the balance of his crop. Mr. A. Verret informs us that much damage was done on his place—trees, fences, &c., being prostrated; and the negroes were obliged to seek refuge from the wind by throwing themselves in the ditches. So far as we have heard no life has been lost.

Fearful Railroad Accident.

The Charleston Standard, of Thursday last, says:

A most fearful accident occurred on the Wilmington and Manchester Road on Monday afternoon, near the Pee Dee river, about ten miles from Marion Courthouse. The particular locality is known as the Pee Dee Curve, and the accident was caused by the meeting of the up and down passenger trains. It seems that both trains were behind time, and were venturing on, each expecting to meet the other; when, in passing around this curve, which is the shortest on the road, and where the grade is also very heavy, with hardly the warning of a moment, the collision took place. The engine of the down train had just increased its steam for the ascent and descent of the grade, added to the momeatum of the up train. There were three passeager cars attached to each train, and as they crashed together, five were disabled and one almost utterly broken in pieces.—Both engines and the baggage cars met the same fate.

The most extraordinary part of the whole occurrence is, that beyond a few comparatively trifling cuts and bruises, no injury was done to any one. Not a person was killed, and no limbs were broken. Most of the small injuries received were by firemen and brakeman, and occasioned by jumping from the train into the ditch by the side of the track. A box car on the down train was filled by a large number of negroes, and the tender of the other train was absolutely forced into this car, where it remained; but neither of the negroes nor the gentleman who accompanied them were injured, though thrown on each side to make way for the tender.

LIABILITIES OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.—The superior Court of New York have desired that railroads are apt liable for damages in cases where children of immature years and injured by the cars, through the neigligence of their parents or attendants. The Court of Common Pleas of the same State has refused damages to the parents of a child two and a half years old, who was killed while playing on the track.

MINNESOTA.—GOV. GORMAN, in his message to the Minnesota Legislature last winter, stated the population of the Territory, at 70,000, as shown by the census taken in the summer previous. At the opening of navigation in the spring it was estimated at 120,000, and now, near the close of navigation, it is set down by a St. Paul paper at 200,000. At its present rate of increase, Minnesota will have a population of at least half a million in 1860.

FOR LIBERIA.—The new colonization ship, Mary Caroline Stevens, sailed from Norfolk on the 6th inst., for Liberia with 215 emigrants.

A very perceptible sheck of an ourthquake was experienced at Petersburg Va., on Saturday last.

BRIDGING NIAGARA RIVER AT BUFFALO.—The Albany Evening Journal of the 6th inst., says:

An application will be made to the Legislature at the coming session for an act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Niagara Rapids, near Buffalo. The river at that point, with its powerful current and dangerous reefs, constitutes a serious obstacle to intercourse between Canada and the State. The plan of the structure contemplates wide draws, easily worked by machinery, and avoids the usual objections to bridges from parties interested in river navigation. That interest in this case, owing to the rapids in the river, is a very small one.

FIRE.—The Jewish synagogue in Mobile was destroyed by fire on Thursday evening last. The Register says that it was insured in various offices to the amount of $5,500 on the building, and $1,200 on the furniture. But most of this is needed for existing liabilities, and though the society yet owns the lot, they will need much outside assistance to rebuild, being within the fire limits.

The new Presbyterian church, which was next adjoining the synagogue, escaped with but little injury.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN CANADA.—The Montreal Herald says that an important discovery has recently been made by Sir William Logan. It is the presence, in the township of Chatham, on the Ottawa, of a very extensive deposit of the formation of what is popularly called burr stone. Sir William has expressed an opinion that in its adaption for the grinding stones of flower and other corn mills, it fully equals that of the best French burr stone, which is imported into every market in the world, and forms no considerable item in the export from France.

A SECOND DANIEL LAMBERT.—On Sunday, the 9th inst., Mr. James Mansfield expired at the village of Debdea, in his 82d year. He was an extraordinary character, for, though not above the ordinary height, he was of imense magnitude, measuring 9 feet round, and weighing 33 stones of 14 lbs. When sitting on his chair (made especially for his use four feet wide), his abdomen covered his knees, and hung down almost to the ground. When he reclined it was necessary to pack his head to prevent suffocation. About tea years ago, he was exhibited at the Leicester square Rooms, London, as the "Greatest man in the world." He has also been exhibited in the country. A suit of clothes made especially for him, would comfortably button up four ordinary sized men. Mansfield was a butcher by trade, and at the time of his death, was a hale old man, possessing a good constitution, and a sanguine and happy temperament. His remains have been interred at Debden. Essex (England) Herald.

RECIPROCITY IN TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES.—A dispatch from Washington states that a project is on foot, for the extension of the provisions of the reciprocity treaty with the British West Indies, whose trade is monopolized by Great Britain and her colonies. The movement is certainly one of vast importance.

POWERFUL ENGRAVING MACHINE.—By means of a machine invented by a French artisan, lines are engraved so minute as to be undistinguishable and almost imperceptible to the naked eye. It is designed for the production of private marks in bank notes, and it is capable of producing two hundred thousand different combinations of minute kaleidoscopic line figures, only to be seen by the aid of a powerful microscope, yet perfectly regular and distinct, and insusceptible of being imitated. At every turn of the tiney wheels which work it, the machine produces four entirely new designs, exceedingly complicated and quite different from one another.

AN ARCHAEOLOGICAL PROBLEM SOLVED.—Letters from Vienna state that the ancient Runic inscription on the celebrated marblo lion from the Piræus at the gate of the Arsenal at Venice, which has hitherto baffled the attempts of the most learned antiquarians to decypher, has at length found its Œdipus in the person of a learned Danish professor, who assures us that it records one of the most daring expeditions ever undertaken by the Vikings of the North, under Harold Sigurson, the half-brother of the king Olaff, the saiated, in the year 1040. The bold chieftain, it appears from the inscription proceeded with his adventurous band of Norsemen, to the assistance of the Greek Emperor, against a popular revolution, and succeeded in capturing the Piræus, restored order, and obliged the Greeks to pay a heavy fine. It must, however, be added, that the above named date is an hypothesis of this "learned Theban," for there is no date to the inscription, and history makes no mention of the event alluded to.

AFFECTING SCENE.—The Syracuse News relates a melancholy incident which transpired on board the 10 o'clock train from the East, on Monday last, and cast a gloom of sadness over the passengers. A very respectable appearing lady, with a child three months old in her arms, took the train at Rome for Canastota. When the cars had reached Oneida, the passengers were startled by a woeful shriek from the mother. She was pressing her little infant close to her bosom; but it was dead! Unconsciously to the mother who held it, and to the passengers who were winding their way over the rails, the spirit of the innocent babe passed quietly away to its Maker.

She refused to part with her child until she reached Canastota. It was an affecting incident in a railway car, and will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

Later from Texas.

Capt. Jordan, of the schooner Waterloo, at Galveston on the 11th inst., from Lamar, Aransas Bay, reported that the schooner Atlas left that place ten or twelve days previous for Galveston, and nothing had since been heard of her.

The Austin State Times thus notices a new town in Texas:

Well, we have got the city of Buchanan at last. There it is, just where it ought to be—the county seat of the new and beautiful county of Johnson, situated in the vicinity of the 32d degree of latitude, and close enough to get a sight of the first railroad car to the Pacific ocean.

Snow fell in Huntsville on the night of the 4th inst., to the depth of three inches.

The Marshall Republican reports very cold weather in the first week of this month, an abundance of ice on the morning of the 3d, and a fall of snow on the 5th.

The Columbia Democrat, of the 9th, reports very heavy frosts during the week.

The mail for Santa Fe, left San Antonio on the 2d inst.

The Gonzales Inquirer states that Mr. Spencer Goss, who was supposed to have been killed by the Indians, was lately brought to that place by a hunter.—He was severely wounded, and had wandered about, making little progress, for eighteen days, during which time he subsisted principally on wild grapes.

There has been very cold weather at San Antonio. The Ledger, of the evening of the 6th, says the thermometer ranged from 33 to 38 for some days.

Twenty two camels passed through San Antonio on the 4th inst., on their way to their winter quarters at Bandera Pass. They are said to be in good health and thrifty.

The San Antonio Texan, of the 4th inst., has the following Indian news:

From information of a reliable character that we have obtained from our frontier country, it seems many of the Indian tribes are at war with each other. Our dates range from November 10th to the 25th, from Fort Chadbourne and Belknap. There is a continued jealousy between the Indians on the Reserve, and some few of the wild tribes; they look upon these who fraternize with the whites as traitors. This, however, applies to but few tribes.

There are at the present time 1,600 Indians on the "Reservation," who are under the complete control of the Government agent, Major Neighbors; and what is more gratifying to our citizens, many of these Indians are parts of the very tribes that have been committing so many depredations on our frontier. Our Government is overcoming evil with good.

The Indians on the Reservation have now fine fields of wheat growing, and well fenced; they are all quiet and contented. They have permits, occasionally, to go out hunting for five or ten days, and are punctual in their promises.

Joshua, the second chief in command, has lately returned with his hunting party, having also brought with them one hundred buffalo hides.

On the 15th inst., a scout of Anadako Indians came in to Fort Belknap; they had a fight on the 4th inst. with the Camanches in the vicinity of the Arbuckle and Wachita rivers. The Camanches surprised them on the open prairies, but dared not venture near them. The Anadakos, after a conflict of some eight hours, came off victorious, killing two Camanches, and wounding several. In the night the Anadakos left and came in to the station. The Camanches were about fifty in number.

By letters received from the Camanche Agency, dated November 18 and 20, we have tidings that an express had just arrived at that station, composed of Nocones, Tenimis, Pohaysko and Chose Indians. They report that several parties of Indians, who have been out hunting, will soon be in to sell the hides they have dressed.

Several horses, stolen from the Caddoes, have been retaken by Pocquashcut and his party—They were stolen from Indians who had been driven from the Reservation as outlaws. There have been several bands of Northern Camanches consulting together near the Wichita mountains, and no doubt for no good. Arrangements are being made by our successful Indian agent, Major Neighbors, to bring in to the Reservation some 1,200 more of these surrounding tribes, and he will probably succeed in doing so in a few weeks.

Later from the Rio Grande.

By the arrival of the steamship Atlantic, yesterday, from Brazos Santiago, we have the Brownsville Flag, of the 10th inst., from which we extract the following intelligence:

The people of our heroic sister have recently had a day of exceeding gladness, occasioned by the triumphant entrance of its military Commandant, Col. Garcia, from the scene of his victorious exploits, against the people of New Leon. The news of his arrival preceded him by a day, when a triumphal arch was erected, and all Matamoros prepared to do honor to her returning sons. At an early hour, on Wednesday last, we were notified of the important arrival by the chiming of bells, booming of cannon and various other noises.

We are informed that fires of a new pronunciamiento have been discovered in Matamoros. It is said that Col. Garcia has made this discovery among some of the officers who accompanied him on his late expedition against Vidauri. They are said to have been tampering with their men for the popular cry of "Religion Fueros," and it is thought the clergy are backing them with counsel and money. Colonel Garcia has, we learn, taken prompt measures to suppress this movement.

Major Hagner, Paymaster for the U. S. Army for this military district, breathed his last at Fort Brown, on Saturday last, 6th inst. His remains were escorted on Sunday, to the Episcopal Church, where funeral service was said over him by Rev. Wm Passmore, the pastor of the church, and, we believe, chaplain of the post. His remains were escorted back to the garrison, where, under the flag of the post, the honors due to his rank were paid the body. A large body of our citizens joined the procession, and assisted on this solemn occasion. We learn it is the intention to remove the remains of the Major to the place of his nativity.

Died, in this city, on Thursday last, of congestion of the lungs, Mr. Emilio Gardette, a native, we believe, of Canada, but for a long time a resident of New Orleans, and for the last few years of this valley.

We have within the past few weeks heard of several praise worthy acts on the part of the alcaldes of Matamoros. We allude to their returning stolen property to the owners on this bank of the river. This, we are assured has been done in several instances by the present authorities of Matamoros, and that they evince both a willingness and warm desire to cultivate every feeling of harmony and good feeling with our people. By a due reciprocity on our part, this good feeling might be cultivated with mutual advantage. We are pleased to see this state of things, and hope that it may long continue. We have ever, on the main, been on good terms with our neighbors, but such acts as these will go far to perpetuate this good feeling. We are wrongly understood abroad, where, in many places, it is thought that the two cities are at enmity with each other, and that it is unsafe for an American to travel into Mexico, while nothing is farther from the fact.

The people of this city and of Matamoros, who are separated only by the river, are in daily intercourse with each other; the people of either, at almost any hour of the day, may be seen in the streets of the other, and this intercourse is wholly unrestricted—not even a passport necessary. And it is equally safe for Americans to travel into all parts of Mexico. There are always more or less of them crossing into that country for the purchase of horses, mares and mules, and we have not heard of their being molested where they obeyed the laws. It is necessary, however, to take out passports to travel into the interior of Mexico. The fact is we are daily increasing in the bonds of intimacy with our neighbors, and it is surely narrow vision in him who will not see mutual advanage in the encouragement of this friendship.

The Tehuantepec Route.

The following resolutions, offered by Mr. Semmes, of Louisiana, were adopted by the Southern Commercial Convention at Savannah, on the 11th inst:

Resolved, That this Convention regards inter-oceanic communication across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec as important to Southern interests, and that the enterprise undertaken at New Orleans by virtue of the contract with Mexico mentioned in the 8th article of the Gadsden treaty, deserves encouragement.

Resolved, further, that this Convention, in order to encourage said enterprise, earnestly recommends the government of the United States to contract with the Tehuantepec Company incorporated by the State of Louisiana, and domiciled at New Orleans for the transportation of the U. S. Mails from New Orleans across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec to San Francisco on as favorable and liberal terms as are now contained in existing contracts for the performance of similar services.

The Ocean Telegraph.

The telegraph across the Atlantic seems to meet with much favor in England, and the merchants there were interesting themselves in the matter. Mr. Field, in a recent interview with the Manchester Commercial Association, said the actual cost of manufacturing and laying the wire would be less than $250,000, if the British Government placed at the company's disposal two vessels for laying it. With the present system of telegraphing, they could transmit through a single line of wires 14,401 words every twenty-four hours; but with the code which was being prepared, they would be enabled to transmit at least 30,000 words within that time, between Europe and America. The shareholders would themselves have to consider what would be a reasonable charge for transmitting a message across the Atlantic, bearing in mind that they could not at present write a letter and receive an answer from New Orleans in less than twice that period. When once the cable was laid down they would incur no expenses beyond the support of the establishment at either end; and it was, therefore, desirable that they should keep the wire employed during the whole of the twenty-four hours. If they could not get a sufficient number of messages at £2, he would receive them at £1, or even 10s., and rather than have the wire unemployed, he would come down to the penny postage system. Prof. Morse, Dr. Whitehouse and others, in London, had established, by experiment, that the electric current could be conveyed through two thousand miles of sub-marine wires, a conclusion founded upon experiments made with subterranean wires. The time taken to convey the fluid through two thousand miles of wire was less than a quarter of a second. The difference of time between England and America is four hours and forty-eight minutes. For one portion of the day the wire would be worked from America, and during the other portion from England. The belief was expressed by the Vice President of the meeting, that the enterprise would prove remunerative.

Humboldt has completed some thirty sheets of his conclusion to "Cosmos," and the indefatigable veteran hopes to terminate the whole within two or three months.

St. Domingo.

In the intelligence received from Havana, by the steamship Quaker City there are some interesting items from St. Domingo. The mulatto Baez, it appears, in conjunction with Senor Segovia, the Spanish Minister, is complete master of the position, carrying things with a high hand, and preparing to hand over the Republic (save the mark!) to the dominion of Spain. Ex-President Santana is stated to be in the mountains at the head of a large army, prepared to oppose this; but, on the other hand, he has addressed a long letter to Baez, making it appear that this is not true, and declaring that he has only been prevented by sickness from offering Baez his services. However this may be, the latter has deprived Santana of his rank as Commander-in-Chief, conferred on him for life. The English war steamer Tartar, and French frigate Iphigenie, and two Spanish war vessels were in port.

Later from Havana.

The steamship Quaker City arrived at Mobile on Tuesday morning, from New York via Havana, bringing intelligence from the latter place to the 14th instant, five days later than that received by the Philadelphia on Saturday last. From intelligence forwarded by the Purser of the Quaker City, for the Picayune, we learn there there was not much of novelty stirring in the island. The proposition to introduce free negroes from islands in the Gulf of Guinea was still under discussion, but it seems very doubtful whether it will be adopted. Some Chinese laborers at Regla had rebelled and murdered their overseer. Some of them had been arrested. A collision had taken place on the Havana railroad, by which an engineer lost his life. The Mexican war-steamer Democrata, so piratically carried off thither, was still in harbor at Havana. At Santiago de Cuba a shock of earthquake had been experienced, without, however, any damage having been caused by it.

AHEAD OF STEAM.—The Baltimore Patriot, of the 10th inst., gives the following account of a great telegraphic feat.

The Collins steamship Atlantic, which arrived at New York yesterday, when several miles outside of Sandy Hook, between 9 and 10 o'clock, was boarded by a news agent of the Associated Press, and the substance of her news was dispatched to Sandy Hook by the agency of carrier pigeons, from whence it was telegraphed to New York, and from thence telegraphed to all parts of the country, nearly two hours in advance of the arrival of the steamer at her wharf. The news thus sent was published in New York and in all the principal cities, including New Orleans, about one hour in advance of the steamer's papers in New York.

MANUFACTURERS IN ALABAMA.—The Florence Gazette notices quite an increase in manufacturing establishments in Lauderdale county, of cotton, wool and iron. Messrs. Martin, Weakley & Co. will soon have another large and extensive cotton factory in operation, which, with their other two cotton factories, will make that firm the largest cotton manufacturing company in the South. Two other firms are also erecting and completing extensive cotton factories, and a large steam wool factory is also nearly completed. A large foundry and machine shop is also in operation, capable of manufacturing locomotives and all kinds of machinery.—Memphis Bulletin.

FOREIGN.

A letter dated Madrid, Nov. 15th, says "General Lersandi will very soon be appointed Captain General of Cuba. It is a post to which he has long aspired. He was Minister of War in 1852, in the Cabinet of Brave Murillo, but the latter, in spite of his urgent requests, would not trust him with this office. From that time he declared himself his enemy, and joined the league against him which has at last overturned his cabinet.

The Emperor of Austria, with his Empress, and a suit of over two hundred persons, has set out for a visit to Northern Italy. Great preparations are making for his reception at Venice and even Milan. At the same time a great many arrests have been made at Milan, Brescia Vicensa and Mantua. These are regarded as preventive measures, but it is certain that among the arrested persons, there is one of very high rank.

An article in the Paris Journal des Debats, on the political career of Gen. Cavaignac, has excited much attention. It denies that France is indifferent to him, as asserted by M. de La Guerronier and it raises the character of the former chief of the republican party to the height of the patriotism and probity of Washington.

A letter dated Copenhagen, November 13th, says that Messrs. Suhr and Rasslef have obtained a concession for the construction of a submarine telegraph between the Island of St. Thomas, the United States and the Islands on the Gulf of Mexico.

AN APPALLING STATEMENT.—A ragged school Association, in a public appeal, state that there are in London 1,400,000 who never attend public worship; 15,000 habitual drunkards; 150,000 open profligates; 20,000 professed beggars; 10,000 gamblers; 30,000 destitute children, and 30,000 receivers of stolen goods.—More than ten thousand young men, under eighteen years of age, are annually comitted for theft in Great Britain.

It is now officially denied that the English Embassador accompanies the Emperor of Austria on his visit to Italy. That is to say, Sir. Hamilton Seymour was invited by the Austrian Emperor, and accepted the invitation, to take part in the Imperial Progress; but the affair was unpalatable to England, and accordingly the Embassador got orders to avoid any identification of England with the Austrian policy in Italy.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"WHERE IS MY BROTHER?"

GENESIS IV. 9.

Fellow-Christian, where's thy brother—he for whom the Lord has died?
He with whom, in living union, thou for ever art allied?
Look around thee, mark his features, recognize the brotherhood;
Trouble and exertion spare not if thou canst but do him good.

Is he in affliction? cheer him; thou hast known affliction too;
Sympathize in all his sorrows—flowers in his path-way strew;
Tell him of the bright to-morrow that awaiteth him and thee:
Point him to the source of comfort, Christ's exhaustless treasury.

Has he known a sad bereavement? does he hear the word "farewell"
Sounding still in his remembrance, like a gloomy funeral knell?
Grace will teach thee how to whisper consolations in his ear;
Point thyself out—O look higher, lean upon the Comforter.

Is he tost and sore perplexed, doubting what his path may be?
Tell him of the gracious guidance that the Lord has shown to thee;
Chide him not for indecision—better wait than madly run;
But to earnest prayer and watching urge the tried, perplexed one.

Has he under strong temptation yielded to his treacherous will?
Treat him not as if an outcast—stumbling, yet thy brother still;
Bear his state before the Saviour, and confess your common sin;
Then in true affection seek him, that thou may'st thy brother win.

Is he simple, poor, unlettered? bear with his simplicity;
Not too poor for Christ to notice, shall he be too poor for thee?
Mark the love which binds to Jesus, binds to all who love Him too;
Build above the world's distinctions prove what heavenly love can do.

Look, O Christian, look around thee! soon thy day of rest will come;
Labour for the sheep of Jesus—do them good while journeying home.
To Christ your Lord and Master, true to all who love his name;
Pass time, and one for ever, fellow-followers of the Lamb!

OBITUARY.

Died—At his residence in Cass county, Texas, on the 9th day of November, 1856, Geo. R. Rush, aged 42 years. He joined the M. E. Church and professed religion in 1832, and since that time he was a consistent member of the church up to March, 1854, he then removed from Chambers county, Alabama to Jefferson county, Texas. Not having been permanently located since his removal to Jefferson, Texas, he remained out of the church until a short time before he died, when he united himself last to the M. E. Church. He retained his senses to the last, and was happy all the time. He expressed no desire for his time to be protracted on earth; he was perfectly resigned. He left three children to mourn their irreparable loss, besides many warm-hearted friends and relatives.

The voice is hushed in death and his body decays in the clay; though a fond recollection will be cherished by those by whom he was acquainted.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

FRANKNESS—CONFIDENCE.

Willie was a fair, opened-faced boy, whose clear, ample brow indicated a strong intellect and a frank, sincere disposition. He was the pet of the family, always in high favor with his parents and the older children. So good-humored, so-openhearted, so innocent in his overflowing mirth and frolic, it was the feeling, if not the boast, of all the house that Willie could do no wrong. As he did not claim everything as his own, nor lay every one under special tax to amuse him, every one took pleasure in contributing to his amusement.

Willie had no great show of toys, but quite enough to content him. He had the happy faculty of amusing himself with a little and of keeping all the time busy about something. Many of the ordinary articles of furniture were passed into his service as toys. His mother had among other things which he was sometimes permitted to use, given him a pretty japanned tea-caddy, with a lid on top fastened down with a small catch. This was compelled to serve a great variety of purposes in Willie's establishment. Sometimes it was his bank, and received his deposits of coppers, which were counted a dozen times a day. Sometimes it was a dumb-waiter, and was hoisted up and down by a string passed over the upper rung of a chair. Sometimes it was his refrigerator, filled with all the odds and ends of his lunch, with a nice piece of rock candy for ice.

For some weeks Willie had not the use of this favorite toy, his mother having occasion for it in the pantry. He had frequently asked for it, eagerly inquiring: "Where is Willie's bauk?"—or "Willie's 'fgerator?" One day, seeing the pantry door open, he spied the long wished for caddy on the shelf, and, exulting for joy, ran in and begged his mother to take it down for him. His mother told him she wanted it now, but promised him he should have it soon, when the tea that was in it should be used up. With that he ran away seemingly quite satisfied.

The next day, the door of the pantry was found open, and the caddy gone, there being a liberal sprinkling of tea on the floor. Willie had been playing quietly in the sitting room, but was now nowhere to be found. He had never been known to take anything from the pantry without leave, and his mother could hardly believe he had done it now. She looked all over the house without finding any trace of her boy, and then went to the garden. Here she found him, playing with his kitten, under the shade of the great cherry tree.

"Willie, dear," said she, "have you taken my caddy from the pantry?"

"No, mamma."

"Do you know where it is, Willie?"—

"No, mamma! Willie have it soon—mamma, sail so."

His mother was satisfied, but only the more puzzled to know how and where the missing caddy had gone.

When the other children came in from school they were questioned, but none of them could solve the mystery. It naturally became the subject of comment at the dinner table, and, from a single remark that was dropped by a visitor, Willie's father was led to fear that his little boy had taken the caddy, and was now for the first time, practising deception. As soon as dinner was over, he called Willie, who ran with great alacrity, and climbed upon his knee. The other children gathered round, expecting a story; and a very interesting story they had heard of a little boy named Charley, who had kind parents, and brothers and sisters, who loved him, and plenty of toys, but who, not content with all these, went to his mother's room and took away, without leave, what did not belong to him, and hid it away. Willie listened, with eyes fixed on his father's and only said at the close, "naughty Charley!" "Unkind Charley!"

"Oh, father," said George, leaning on his father's chair, "you don't think Willie took mamma's caddy?"

"No, indeed!" exclaimed Ellen, leaning over the piano, "Willie never told a lie in his life."

"No," cried Charlotte, jumping up from her stool, kissing him passionately, "he never does anything wrong, does he, darling?"

Willie now began to gather the meaning of the story about Charley, and to get an idea that his father did not fully believe him. Looking up with a clear eye, and a flushed but very earnest face, he said "Father, Willie know not how to tell a lie," and burst into tears. His father soothed him with kindest words, and soon succeded in satisfying him that everything was right, and nobody could doubt Willie.

In the course of the day the mystery was cleared up. The pantry had been opened by the servant, left open, as she went out with full hands, and then forgotten. In this state of things, puss walked in to see what she could find.—In prowling about upon the shelves, she discovered and took a fancy to a plate of fish, which stood behind the caddy.—Squeezing in to secure it, she pushed down the caddy, which, striking on the lower shelf, and spilling a quantity of tea on the shelf and floor, rolled into a barrel, whose open mouth projected from under the shelf. Part of this was discovered when the servant returned, in the evening, from visiting a sick friend. The rest was proved, circumstantially, by puss herself, who followed the servant to the pantry, when she went in at night, and jumped immedintely up to the dish which she had only half devoured.—Mother's Magazine.

"I Love my Bible."

A little Sunday School girl was sitting one day at her mother's cottage door, reading her Bible. A gentleman who had alighted from a coach, came up to her, and asked for some water. The child was so busy with her book that she did not notice him, but went on reading. Her mother fetched the stranger a cup of milk, which he thankfully received. Having quenched his thirst, he said to the little girl, "I suppose you have a pretty book there my child."

"It is the Bible, sir," she answered, and continued reading.

"The Bible!" said the gentleman; "Then I suppose you are getting your task for Sunday?"

"Task, sir, no," said the girl,

"Then what are you reading your Bible for?" he askod.

She replied, "Because, sir, I love my Bible!"

This answer of the child so forcibly struck the gentleman, that on leaving the cottage he could think of nothing else. The arrow of conviction was fixed in his heart. "The child (he thought) reads her Bible, because she loves it.—Why, I never opened that book in my life with such a feeling. Yet she says, "I love my Bible!"

These few words, under God's blessing, were the means of the gentleman's conversion; though before he was an infidel, and openly opposed the truth as it is in Jesus.—S. S. Teachers' Magazine.

WHAT THE WIND SAYS.

"Do you know what the December wind says, grandpa?" asked a little child at an old merchant's knee.

"No, puss; waht does it?" he answered, stroking her fair hair.

"Remember the poor!" grandpa: when it comes down the chimney, it roars, 'Remember the poor;' when it puts its great mouth to the keyhole, it whistles, 'Remember the poor;' when it strikes through a crack in the door, it schispers it; and, grandpa, when it blows your beautiful silver hair about in the street, and you shiver and button up your coat, does it not get at your ear and say so too, in a still small voice, grandpa?"

"Why, what does the child mean?" cried grandpa, who, I am afraid, had been used to shut his heart against such words. "You want a new muff and tippet, I reckon; a pretty way to get them out of your old grandfather."

"No, grandpa," said the child earnestly, shaking her head, "no; it's the no muff and tippet children I'm thinking of; my mother always remembers them, and so do I try to."

After the next storm the old merchant sent fifty dollars to the treasurer of a relief society, and said, Call for more when you want it. The treasurer stared with surprise, for it was the first time he had ever collected more than a dollar from him, and that, he thought, came grudgingly.

"Why," said the rich old merchant afterwards "I Could never get rid of that child's words; they stuck to me like glue."

"And a little child shall lead them," says the Scripture. How many a cold heart has melted, and a close heart opened, by the simple earnestness and suggestive words of a child

BE CHARITABLE

When the veil of death has been drawn between us and the objects of our regard, how quicksighted do we become to their merits, and how bitterly do we then remember words, or even looks of unkindness, which may have escaped in our intercourse with them? How careful should such thoughts render us in the fulfillment of those offices of affection which may yet be in our power to perform; for who can tell how soon the moment may arrive when repentance cannot be followed by raparation!—Bishop Heber.

New Lute of Zion, now Ready.

Being the Standard Book of Sacred Music, for the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States.

Published and for sale by CARLTON & PORTER, at the Book Room, and F. J. HUNTINGTON, 356 Broadway, New-York.

Price, in New York, 75 cents, retail, and $7 50 per dozen.

THE almost unexampled popularity of the Lute of Zion, the sales of which, in a very brief space, rose to upward of fifty thousand copies, proves the estimation in which the book is held. Gratitude for this success induced the publishers during the last summer to undertake, at an very heavy outlay, its entire and complete revision, and upon such a scale as should insure for the the undivided support of Methodists, and affording powerful aid to their zeal and Christian enterprize. Mr. Woodbury has been untiring in his devotion to the new book, sparing no effort to make it everything which the most fastidious chorister can require, while its simplicity, which is its crowning charm, is such that he who runs may both read and sing it. The Elements are entirely new, containing a large number of original and choice pieces, designed expressly for the "Singing School." Time spent, experience has shown to be in the least undesirable, have been made to give place to better and worthier ones. Copious contributions from some of our greatest living composers have been readily furnished at the solicitation of the author, while from old and rare collections choice favorites have been diligently culled. Thirty-two pages in addition to what was contained in the old book, has given the author space to enrich the work with some of his sweetest melodies, composed especially for this edition. The book now contains 170 long, 177 common, 77 short, and 274 odd meters, the latter adapted to 40 different meters in the Hymn Book. The anthem and set piece department contains 88 pages, with many very choice chants, while some 10 pages are devoted to tunes suitable for prayer and social meetings; and withal the old "continental" tunes have not been neglected, some 25 general favorites have been inserted. During the progress of the new book through the press it has been under the constant supervision of one of our most competent city choristers. Step by step, with unabating zeal, has he devoted his whole time to the good work, thereby contributing much not only to its practical usefulness in choirs, but to an entire freedom in its pages from errors, which unfortunately too often disfigures some of the pages of the old book.

☞ On application F. J. HUNTINGTON will, for Sixty Cents, furnish to choristers only, for examination, single copies of the "LUTE," and forward them by mail, postage paid.

MORTALITY AMONG SOUTHERN CHILDREN.—It is estimated that in the Southern States, more children are carried off by worms, and the diseases arising from them, than by all other maladies combined. Post mortem examinations of the young too frequently reveals the terrible ravages of these insidious enemies of health and life. It is therefore, only an act of common philanthropy to recommend, with all earnestness, a preparation like Winer's Canadian Vermifuge, which has proved in many thousands of cases, an immediate, safe and radical cure for every kind of vermicular disease.

SAW AND CORN MILLS.

PORTABLE CIRCULAR SAW MILLS,

WITH

Norcross' "Improved Rocker Boxes,"

AND LEE & LEAVITT'S

"IMPROVED HEAD BLOCKS."

The subscriber is now prepared to offer to the public, Circular Saw Mills, (usually called Page's,) with all the recent improvements since their first appearance. The Mill now offered are more simple and less liable to get out of order than those heretofore in use, and those made by Page at present; combining as they do, all the improvements and the additional strength both in the iron and wood-work—are undoubtedly the best Mill ever offered. Engines and Horse Powers suitable to these mills are furnished when required

Norcross' Patent consists in suspending the saw so that it can have a lateral vibration, and, when thrown out of line, will recover itself by the action of the driving-belt, and the arrangement of the parts by which it is sustained; while, at the same time, the arbor has no lateral play in its boxes, and is made to fit close with the shoulders, to prevent the oil from getting out, while in operation; a matter of great importance when the motion is rapid as in circular saws.

Lee & Leavitt's Patent consists in enabling one man to move the log on the ways with ease and with the greatest accuracy—thereby saving one man's wages, and making better work than mills with the usual Screw Head Blocks.

J. H. BURROWS'

Patent Plantation Corn and Flouring Mills.

THE BEST NOW IN USE.

This Mill differs from all others in the construction of the Upper or Runner Stone, which is composed of French Burr Blocks, enclosed in a Cast Iron Case, and forms the back and hoop of the Stone, with a Cast Iron Eye or Bush, that is of greater external diameter at the bottom than at the top, is secured to the back by four bolts, so that every Block is in the form of a dovetail, which gives greater strength to a Stone than any other method that is required in small Mills where the stone is run with great speed and becomes dangerous if not strongly made—it also gives any weight to a Stone of small diameter that is required, without making it thick or high.

They can be run by either Gin, Horse, Water or Steam Power, and require no Millwright to set them up.

ADVANTAGES.

1st. Sufficient weight in the Runner Stone to crush the Grist, without having to supply pressure to the Runner Stone from the Driving Power, as most Undulatory Mills have to do; this is of great importance when Horse Power is used.

2nd. When the Stone is running, its own momentum acts like the Fly Wheel of an Engine, affording regularity and speed to its motion. If a Mill does not run true and regular you cannot make good meal or flower.

3rd. The Stone is composed of four or five French Burr Blocks, because single blocks of sufficient size cannot be had without having soft or imperfect pieces in them.

4th. The Stone having this great weight is enabled to grind near the centre a larger quantity with less power than any other mill now in use.

5th. This Mill is a squirre frame, made of wood, in the form of a husk; the 24 inch occupying a space of only 4 or 5 feet square.

6th. This Mill is simply and strongly constructed, and less liable to get out of order than any other Mill, and does not require a Millwright to set them up.

7th. The Gearing and Pullies of these Mills are all of Iron, and are preferable because there never is necessity of crossing the band, or of extra pullies to keep it in place; the band does not get cut and worn as in the case of Single Geared Mills, nor is their danger in putting the band on or off the pulley as in Single Geared Mills.

By the steady application of Steam Power, the 24 inch Mill will grind 7 to 10 bushels per hour, of good meal, and will grind wheat as well as corn. The 30 inch Mill will grind 12 to 15 bushels per hour; the 36 inch 20 or more bushels per hour, with proper speed.

More than 2500 of these Mills have been used, principally in the South and West, and never have any been returned from failing to please. The above Mill is warranted to give entire satisfaction, or may be returned at our expense.

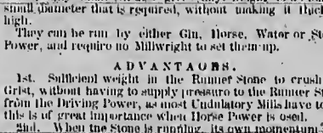
COLEMAN'S



PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING MILLS.

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block. Seven different kinds of these Mills are manufactured, adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The Burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices of from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of the Burr, power applied, and velocity given.

The Mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smaller size (fourteen inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal, in four and a half minutes.

Those desiring such Mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor, WILLIS P. COLEMAN, Box C, 188 New Orleans.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, July 24th, 1856.

Dear Bishop, and members of the Mississippi Conference:—Permit me once more to return my warmest thanks. I feel assured the China Mission will not go down for want of desire and exertion on your part to support it, and in remembering us daily at a throne of grace. I thank you for again pledging yourselves, as a body, at the last Conference, to sustain me in this missionary field, and for appointing one of the brethren to inform me immediately of the resolution; though I have not, as yet, received any communication from you since leaving home. My wants have nearly all been supplied, but there is still something wanting. Ever since I have been able to work, preach, exhort and teach, I have felt greatly the need of a church. It is true we have a place where we preach by turn in the Mission, but it is a Chinese house, low, damp, and at considerable distance from the street. Six months more and we will have to return this to the owner. I do not wish assistance to build me a dwelling, or to support my family. I have a house for the present; and my salary is sufficient to support my family: perhaps more than I deserve. But I do feel the need of a Church, as well as the rest of my brethren in the mission, where we can, not only preach, but meet with inquirers. I am endeavoring to devote my whole time to the work, and have nothing else in view than the glory of God and the salvation of sinners. From the first day of January, up to within a month past, I have been daily engaged in preaching, exhorting and distributing the word of God. In my labors I have not confined myself alone to the city of Shanghai, but extended my visits to every village and town, ten, fifteen and twenty miles around Shanghai, on horseback, preaching and exhorting in the villages, and by the wayside, and returning home to my family the same day. In these visits, our native assistant, Leiw, was with me and did a great deal of good by his preaching. I have also been as far as one hundred miles into the interior by invitation, to preach the Gospel in a certain place, and was cordially received by the people.

It is now so very warm my labors will be confined to the city until the approach of cold weather; when, if God permit, and continue my health, I shall commence again my laboring through the country. About two weeks since I was kept from my work four days by an attack of bilious fever; which, fortunately, was of short duration. My throat has also been troubling me some, but I thank God it is now better, and I am able to preach again and point dying sinners to my blessed Savior. Five days out of seven I am in the city at our church, devoting the evenings of those five days with our assistant Liew, to preaching, exhorting and talking to inquirers. The other two days, and mornings of the five days, I devote wholly to my study, and to receiving inquirers who come to my house to talk about their soul's best interest. I have been much encouraged during the past two months. I have four and five a day frequently to call on me. To-day there were two to see me: one was a woman with whom I became acquainted last year in the country, when my school was in operation. The other was a young man from Soo-Chow, who had been to see me several times.

He seems much interested on the subject of Christianity. He tells me he prays, and that his father, mother, and many of his relations have thrown away their idols, and now read the Holy Scriptures. I am happy to inform you, beloved brethren, that three weeks since I baptized a young man, whose name was Yung-Kiang-Sun, from the country north of Soo-Chow. This is the first to whom I have administered baptism; though I have had several applications. I trust and pray God we may never regret taking this young man into the church of Christ; but, on the other hand, may we have cause to rejoice! This is the second who has been baptized and taken into our branch of the church since my arrival in China. How my heart rejoices to see but one coming out upon the Lord's side from among this wicked people.

This young man, after being baptized, partaking of the Lord's supper, and remaining with us three weeks, attending our prayer-meetings, and coming, frequently to receive instruction from me, has taken leave of us for a few months, to visit his parents, wife and friends, and tell them what the Lord has done for him. He went off with a joyful heart, full of love, and with an earnest desire to save his fellow-men from the wrath of an avenging God. With these two, who have been taken in since my coming to China, we have four now connected with our church. Liew, our native assistant, is truly an eloquent speaker, zealous, and entering into the work of his Master with his whole heart. He meets with much opposition, but is not discouraged; and for seven years he and his wife have continued faithful.

I have no doubt of his conversion, and expect to meet him in that heavenly land, where temptation and opposition never come, and where we shall live with Jesus forever. He would be encouraged, and would gladly hear any word from you; especially from Bishop Andrews, for whom he is named. He sends his love to the presiding Bishop, and to all the members of Conference, and desires to be remembered by all. He is indeed a loving disciple of Jesus, and makes use of every exertion in his power to spread the gospel of our Savior. The people of Shanghai have heard so much preaching that their hearts have been hardened.

Those from a distance seem to pay more attention to the word, and lay hold of it immediately. I suppose there are thirty sermons preached in the city of Shanghai daily—and on Sabbath, forty or fifty. Mrs. Lambuth has a school of twelve little girls, in the city at our church. She is with them three days in the week, and finds they are making rapid progress. We have also four little girls living with us. These we support, giving them their clothes, food &c. She is anxious to have a school-room near the house, where she can be with the children daily.

Our Mission has suffered much during the past year in the loss of our beloved brothers, Belton and Kelly, and their families, from this field of labor. We deeply sympathize with our beloved sister B. in the loss of her companion; but what is our loss when compared to his gain—a saint in glory. We also sympathize with our afflicted brother and sister K. in the loss of their little daughter while at sea. We who still remain on the field of battle number three, and their families. Bro. Jenkins seems desirous of doing all in his power to get the press in order for work—but is destitute of funds. He preaches on Sabbath. Sister Jenkins' health is not good. Beloved Bishop, and brethren, the majority of our mission, Bro. C., and myself, sincerely request you, as a body, to use your influence with the Board at their next meeting, in April, to grant us the power to dispose of the press in our possession to any one who may wish to purchase, and appropriate the money to the erection of churches. For more than one year past we have been in possession of it, and it has not been one dollar's benefit to us, but an expense. We are still without a church. The Chinese are able to print all books of which we may have need, at less expense, and a great deal less trouble to us. Beside Chinese printing, the London Mission has an excellent press, and they, being qualified from long experience, do almost the whole work of printing. Be assured, beloved Bishop, and brethren, so long as you keep this press in China it will be a yearly expense to the Board—far overbalancing the profit received. It is now a dead expense to us. As a brother in Christ, and earnest to see the work of saving souls go on prosperously, I beg of you to take immediate action on this important subject. As one deeply interested in the progress of this mission, I assure you, the press we have on hand is doing us no service. And I trust all will, with one voice, say it is our duty in China to preach the gospel and call sinners to repentance. Bro. C. is also endeavoring to discharge every Christian duty—preaching twice during the week, and twice on Sabbath. Sister C. also has a school. We have many difficulties to contend with in China. The example of foreign merchants at Shanghai has a great tendency to harden the hearts of these poor wretched people, and cause them to be totally unconcerned about the blessed doctrine we preach. Though I meet with difficulties, by God's assisting grace I will not despair.

I need more faith—more of that love from God which knoweth no bounds, that in all these trials and difficulties all may turn to the glory of God, and to the promotion of Christ's Kingdom. It is now very dry at Shanghai, and the surrounding country.

For near two months it has not rained. Almost all vegetables, rice, and cotton are dying, and the Chinese are getting desperate—carrying their gods about the streets and through the country, imploring rain.

Yesterday I met quite a large idol—as large as life—standing erect in a sedan chair, carried by four men, and followed by government officers and servants. I see this every day in passing through the streets of the city. Still there is no rain. The sun shines as brightly as ever. The south gate of the city is closed to-day and will not be opened until we have rain. They suppose this to be the gate of fire, (according to some wise man's saying) and by closing it think to bring rain. But they have been, and are now so wicked God is punishing them. They have heard much preaching, but have not repented—they have mocked God, and laughed at his holy commands. Oh! Lord! how long will these things be? Stay not away; but may Thy kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

As to the Rebels, we know but little just now. They are supposed to be coming in this direction, but we know not whether to expect war or peace. They are said to worship God night and morning; observing Saturday for Sabbath, and ask God to bless their food when eating. They strictly prohibit all smoking of opium, common tobacco, and the use of spirits of any kind. They are brave, and fight with desperation. They have been very successful during the past month, and now occupy some of the most important places in China. I will close for to-day, and write a few more lines before the mail closes, which will be in a five or six days, July 30th. The news we have just received from the interior is more favorable to the insurgents. They seem to hold out on their positions and are gaining the confidence of the people rapidly.

One day hundreds and thousands are worshipping idols, when perhaps the next, their temples and loved idols are in the ashes, and they almost forced from necessity to worship the true God. In the Southern part of the Empire, many have thrown aside the imperial cash or coin, adopted a coin of the insurgent Emperor, and have declared themselves without any form of government. This is indeed strange. At Shanghai the government officers with great difficulty get a support from the people. Their commands are scarcely respected anywhere. They fear the people. May God bless them, and make them Christians. Pray for me, one and all. Yours in Christ,

JAS. W. LAMBUTH.

The Cause of Unfruitfulness.

An Eastern contemporary speaks of a clergyman who for fifteen years was the pastor of the same charge. He was remarkable for his mental discipline, logical accuracy, power of investigation, knowledge of the original language of Scripture, and acquaintance with polemic and practical divinity. His ministry was able, his piety fervent, his walk unexceptionable. Yet his labors were not very successful. His church did not grow. Few "believed his report." The writer of the statement, after modestly declining to account for the Holy Spirit's refusal to bestow a large blessing, yet mentions two causes of the want of fruit as patent and manifest. One is the fact that he preached memoriter. All sermons, addresses, speeches, &c., were written in full, but committed and then uttered from memory. To enable him to do this, the preacher fixed his eye on a distant corner of the meeting-house, and kept it there until he was through, never once looking his audience earnestly in the face. Could the wit of man devise a better way to rob spoken truth of all power over the hearers? The other cause was his want of intercourse with the people. Absorbed in study and thought, the good man rarely made any visits, save in case of sickness or death. For the same reason he would never, if he could avoid it, even speak to his people, but would pass and repass them without seeming to notice their existence. Children and youth were, of course, wholly ignored. One whom he baptized, and who spent his childhood, youth, and early life in the same town, says that he never once obtained a word of recognition from the Dr., although he often put himself in a position where it would seem to be impossible to escape the necessity.

These causes seem to us amply sufficient to explain the facts. Coldness in the pulpit, and distance out of it, must paralyze any minister's efficiency. Men are influenced mainly through the heart, and the pastoral service which builds up barriers against the flow of the social affections, must be inextricably clogged. No doubt this minister loved his work and his people, but his unfortunate mannerisms produced just the contrary impression, and hence he was everlastingly rowing against wind and currents. Alas! how few dead flies will corrupt the most precious pot of perfumer's ointment! (Eccles. 10: 1.)—Christian Intelligencer.

For the N. O. C. Advocate.

Education of Preachers' Children.

In the N. O. C. Advocate of Nov. 1st, there is an article headed, "Education of Preachers' Children?" When it first appeared, I read it hastily, and passed it by as unworthy of further notice, but recently, my attention has been called to it in a way which inclines me to notice it in this public manner. The writer has evidently made statements which are based upon erroneous information, and whether designed or not, well calculated to mislead; and although I am exceedingly unwilling to enter the list of polemics, in any shape or form, yet, for the sake of truth and justice, I must be allowed a few words in the form of objections to the production.

I object to such sentiments; in the first place, because they are designed to arraign and censure a large and respectable class of christian ministers for doing the very thing which the proper authorities of the church authorize and recommend. If I am not mistaken, this whole matter was fully and fairly discussed before the last general Conference, the highest tribunal of the church, and it was urged there by men in this employment, if it was not the policy of the church for the ministers to be engaged in the business of teaching—if they were to be proscribed and hunted down for this act, they wanted to know it; and the result was the rule in the discipline on the subject, and the able report of the committee on Education highly approving the cause. This article proceeds upon the supposition, that it is a special favor to be put into, these high places of ease and distinction; as the writer pleases to call them. Now I will venture the assertion that in nine cases out of ten, these very men who are filling such posts, have been sought after, elected, urged and entreated by Elders, Bishops, Trustees, and all concerned, and sometimes by the vote of their conferences, before they could be induced to accept the place; and yet they are to be held up to public contempt for an act which is hardly their own. For one I know, when I was first appointed to a church school, I had not half as much idea of it as I had of going a missionary to Africa, nor had I the most distant dream, that it had even entered the mind of mortal, until I received notice of my appointment; nor have I ever directly or indirectly sought any such position, and that is not all—never shall. Now I mention my own case, simply for the reason that I have no doubt it has its parallel in a large majority of those now connected with our Church Constitutions.

I object to this article, in the second place, because it represents those ministers engaged in teaching, as being in case, accumulating large fortunes, and appropriating to their own use, what of right belongs to the church, or rather to the children of the Preachers, inasmuch as collections have been taken up with this view, and inducements of this sort have been held out. Here again an erroneous impression is made upon the public mind, for this writer insinuates, that the custom which prevails in some of our Institutions of turning over the profits of tuition, &c., to the President and Faculty, to divide among themselves, was at their instance and for their benefit. Now in every single instance which has come under my observation, when these schools have gone into operation, the Trustees have taken the management of the funds, and they have managed until they have mangled themselves hopelessly in debt; and, as a last resort, they have induced the Faculty to take the whole matter into their own hands and make what they could of it—pay yourselves if you can, and if not, you are not to look to us; nor is the Institution to be involved in farther indebtedness. Surely these preachers are not to be blamed for an act of the Trustees, more especially when they are at any time ready and willing to go back to the old arrangement of a fixed salary, and be content, too, with a very moderate one, provided it is made sure—even a less one than many are receiving who are engaged in the regular work of Districts and Stations. But all this talk about profits will do to parade upon paper, but when you come to count the dollars they are not there! Let us look for a moment at the figures. We are told, that the average number of pupils in these church schools is two hundred, and that the amount of tuition paid by each pupil is one hundred dollars, making a grand total of twenty thousand dollars, as the yearly income; and, as this is all to be divided among the teachers, it must afford them immense profits.

Now, this all looks fair, and will, I have no doubt, mislead hundreds; hence, my great objections to the statement.—But what are the facts in the case? Let us take a single example, as one example is worth a thousand theories, and, as I am better acquainted with the history of the Centenary Institute than any other, let us take this as the basis of our calculation. This Institution has been in operation fourteen years, and has generally averaged about two hundred pupils, and from my certain knowledge, the profits have never reached ten thousand dollars a year, and, in most instances, have fallen below eight.

Now how is this? Well, in the first place, the policy here has been to employ able and experienced men to do the teaching—such as would command high wages any where, (of course this does not refer to myself or the Principal of the male department, but to those on salary.) In the next place, we have had constantly on hand from fifteen to twenty-five of these same preachers' children, about whom this writer is so anxious, who have not paid us one single dollar; and, again, there are always, in every community, the poor, who are anxious to get an education, and our doors have always been open to such, whether they could pay or not. Hence, then, an allowance is to be made for sickness, absence, and other contingences, not likely to enter into the calculation; but all of which tell at the end of the year. Now, here we have in this single item, an error of from ten to twelve thousand dollars yearly—a small matter, it is true, on paper, but a very material one, when we come to pay the debts of the institution. Again, this article is objectionable on the ground that it indirectly attempts to bring down the profits of teachers generally, and consequently humble and degrade the profession. Now, in all conscience, as a class of men they are poor, but compared with teachers, they are rich! Here, again, let me refer to my experience as a teacher, I have been engaged in the business for twenty odd years, and in that time have had, as a matter of course, scores of associates, and to the best of my recollection, since my removal to Alabama, only two of this number were worth two thousand dollars, and both of these obtained it by marriage, and not by teaching. Let any man look around among the teachers of his acquaintance, and tell me are they not poor enough? why degrade them still lower? Does not almost every man by the time he gets a little experience, leave the profession in disgust, even now? and why heap other burdens upon them, and consequently drive others from their rank?

Again, I object still more strenuously to this article, as having a tendency to create distinctions and awaken jealousies among brethren. I can bear to hear politicians contend for the awards of distinction. It will do for men of the world to "seek that honor that cometh of men" but whenever I hear Methodist preachers begining to talk of less honored and neglected brethren, and to show evident dissatisfaction at the standing and positions of others whom they regard as favored, I cannot help but feeling, dear Brother, you have mistaken your calling. Really, I did not know that the church had any honors to award. She has burdens to bear, duties to perform, but no honors to distribute; and whoever wants it, especially in the church, proves thereby that he is unworthy of it. And now, Mr. Editor, lest I should perpetrate a long, tedious article, which may never be read, I must come to a close—not, however, until I have taken you to task a little, for admitting this article into your paper with all its glaring errors; or, if they are truths, you are still more at fault for not acting upon them, for you have several Church Institutions in your Conference, and I believe you are a Trustee of one or more of them—why not, now, according to this plan, save ten or twelve thousand dollars a year, and, in a little less than no time, you have your schools and colleges magnificently endowed, and dispense with this everlasting tease of agents to beg money for such purpose. And, especially, Mr. Editor, you have enlightended him relative to the manner in which the advocates distribute their profits, for to this subject he refers, for you recollect, no doubt, that at the last General Conference, when this distributing came up, one of the advocates was minus of at least two thousand dollars, and every one asked, I believe, from five to ten thousand dollars to keep them afloat. And this is a fair specimen of the profits arising from these church schools.

A. H. MITCHELL.

THE TURN OF LIFE.

Between the years of forty and sixty, a man who has properly regulated himself, may be considered as in the prime of life. His matured strength of constitution renders him almost impervious to the attacks of disease, and experience has given soundness to his judgment. His mind is resolute, firm and equal; all his functions are in the highest order; he assumes the mastery over business; builds up a competence on the foundation he has formed in early manhood, and passes through a period of life attended by many gratifications. Having gone a year or two past sixty, he arrives at a critical period in the road of existence; the river of death flows before him, and he remains at a stand still. But athwart this river is a viaduct, called "The Turn of Life," which if crossed in safety, leads to the valley of "old age," round which the river winds, and then flows beyond without a boat or causeway to affect its passage. The bridge is, however, constructed of fragile materials, and it depends upon how it is trodden whether it bends or breaks. Gout, Apoplexy, and other bad characters are also in the vicinity to waylay the traveler, and trust him from the pass: but let him gird up his loins, and provide himself with a lifting staff, and he may trudge on in safety with perfect composure. To quit metaphor, "The Turn of Life," is a turn either into a prolonged walk, or into the grave. The system and powers having reached their utmost expansion, now begin either to close like flowers at sunset or break down at once. One injudicious stimulant, a single fatal excitement, may force it beyond the strength; whilst a careful supply of props, and the withdrawal of all that tends to force a plant, will sustain it in beauty and in vigor until night has entirely set in.—Science of Life by a Physician.

THE MOMENT AFTER DEATH.

What a moment that must be! how vast its consequences! how overwhelming its revelations! Let us try, by illustration, to realize it. There dies a saint of God. The summons was sudden, but his house was in order, and with a smile on his face, he bids a glad adieu to the scenes and friendships of earth. Coldness passes from point to point in his system; his vision grows dim; his tongue falters: but in strong faith, he commends his all to the Conqueror of death, and passes away shouting an everlasting victory. The spirit soars—angels attend it—the gates of the city are open to receive it—the King is seen in his beauty—and now heaven is enjoyed in all its bliss and glory.—"Waking up from this life-dream, the first sight is Jesus as he is—no flight through immensity—no pilgrimage of spheres—for the everlasting arms are the first resting place of the disembodied soul—it will be in the bosom of Immanuel that the emancipated spirit will inquire, 'where am I?' and read in the face of Jesus, the answer, "Forever with the Lord."

But another, and a different scene. There dies an impenitent sinner, and, as he feels life ebbing away, his soul is filled with unutterable anguish, his sins arrayed before him, his conscience accuses him, lost opportunities mock him—hope perishes, and eternity is made terrible by its treasured up wrath.—But he must die. He that cuts him down, sways him as the feller of wood sways the tottering tree—now a root breaks, now a heart-string—now a eye string snaps asunder! at last, out goes the weary, trembling soul. How awful to such an one is the moment after death! The narrow confines of time passed, a boundless eternity stretches itself before him, and, in the twinkling of an eye, he is ushered into outer darkness, the region of unending woe, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. The torments of hell are already begun, and the souls' bitter reflection is that they are merited and will never end.

Yes, solemn thought! One brief moment will effect an entire change in our mode of being—will make plain what, with respect to a future state, is now involved in mystery, and will bear the soul to the fearful retributions, or to the glorious reward of eternity!

What is wanting in reason upon an argument, is too often supplied by age.

Error is always dangerous, it cannot be harmless.

Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward."—Prov. xxii. 5.

A loving heart incloses within itself an unfading Eden.

A lawyer named Muller, at Weimar, has been dismissed from the bar, for having blasphemed God in a piece of poetry. Besides this, he has been condemned to several months imprisonment.

Dr. Watts has very truly said that he that has the happy talent of parlor-preaching, has sometimes done more for Christ and souls in the space of a few months, than by the labor of many hours and days in the usual course of preaching in the pulpit.

Acknowledgement of Obligations.

We, poor grovellers, are very prone to remember and often to speak of our trials, but we are not so apt to speak of our blessings. Like swinging gates, we make many creaking, jarring sounds, but seldom any musical ones.

So too, we are very apt to enjoy our privileges, and little think what is our dependence or our obligations for them. We breathe the air—we are glad in the sunshine; how often do we bow down and thank the Giver? We do not like to enter into an examination of contrasts in order to get an appreciation of our privileges. Men will not, for example, read missionary papers in order to gain such knowledge as will enable them to make comparisons between their condition and others.

But I would speak of one source of obligation only now. I would hold up one class of my fellow creatures—Sailors. The world is very slow to think of them, and to own its obligations to them. I refer not now to the benefits of commerce as a business, for the cold, selfish world might say, "the sailor is paid (poor pay his,) for what he does, and therefore no obligations." No, I refer to the benefits the sailor confers on the world, for which he receives no pay, are no part of his duty as a seaman, whether officer or sailor. For example, I visited an elegant museum not since in Salem, Mass.—entertaining for the curious, delightful for the scientific, instructive to all classes, young or old—it was the world in a nut-shell, ancient and modern. Who got it up? Men of the ocean. What made it what it is? The contributions of sailors.

So in every museum, cabinet, hall of science; every where there are the stimulants to investigation, and intellectual and moral advancement, there you will find the free will offerings of sailors. I am thankful that there are a few who feel their obligations. Warm clothing for the shipwrecked—warm food for the families of the lost—Sailors' Homes for the tempted, a refuge from land-sharks—bethels—abolition of the lash in the Navy, and of the grog-tub in the merchant service, and the efforts to do it away in the Navy—all these are proofs that some feel their obligations.

But still there is a vast field for improvement into which the grateful can enter and labor. The sailor needs elevating more and more: the officer ought to be freed from a thousand annoyances and trials to which he is now heir. The advance system ought to be done away. It makes a boy, a tool of a man, and is one of the chief sources of his moral degradation—a prolific source of trouble to the officers, and of loss to the owners and underwriters. An apprentice system needs to be adopted with rules and regulations for their intellectual and moral instruction, so that we have American sailors, instead of foreign convicts, as we often have.

But there is no use of trying to enumerate: Legion, is the name of reforms needed on the sea: Where are the generous to take hold and keep on in this matter? Where are the givers to feed and clothe the destitute? Can any one tell how it is that other meetings are well attended and collections good for every thing but seamen?

On Friday evening last, (next evening after Thanksgiving,) the Ladies' Seamen's Friend Society, got up a well ordered public meeting at the New Hall, 8th and Spring Garden streets. But where were the men who live by the labors and perils of the sailor? Not there. Where were the Christians who enjoy luxuries obtained often at the expense of the sailor's life? Not there. Where were the Christians, who in all probability would have been in heathenism to-day, had it not have been for sailors? Very few of them there, indeed. Where were the ministers, who, to-day, had it not been for sailors, instead of being ministers of the gospel, might have been hewers of wood and of stone, and no doubt, wallowing in heathenism? Alas, only two there—one engaged to speak, and the other, a preacher to seamen, also taking part in the exercises. Only think of it, a sea-captain had to be called upon to make the opening prayer, because there were no clergy present, except those above referred to! Only think of it again—some of the ministers refused to read notices of the meeting at their services on Thursday!

Now, why are these things so—not only this year, but every year?

And only think again of the collection taken up on the occasion! Instead of $1000 which the ladies certainly need—it was not enough to pay expenses! O, ingratitude! Certainly, this failure in the money department was not because of a failure in the presentation of the cause. No, indeed. Mr. Jones, of N. Y. city, proved just as clearly as A B C, that the world in its science, civilization and religion, owes its first obligations to sailors—that almost from the days of Abraham to the present day—but particularly from the days of David to the Haldanes, sailors have been in the front rank of civilization and religion. Yes, take out the sailor's work, and the world would go back more than a century—all this was proved beyond dispute.

But notwithstanding all these arguments and appeals, not enough taken up from that audience to pay expenses. Among other small pieces, 70 coppers were laid upon the altar. O the gratitude of the copper donors! What an impulse they gave to the wheels of civilization and of religion! How they appreciated the toil and death of the sailor!

Let reason go before every enterprise, and counsel before every action.

The N. O. Christian Advocate.

Terms, $2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, DEC. 27, 1856.

Bishop Paine and Dr. Sehon arrived on Thursday morning, the 18th inst., from Texas. The former left the same evening for home. The latter remained over Sabbath, and preached in two of our city churches. We regret to learn that Bishop Paine was robbed of his pocket-book, containing several hundred dollars, when he went on board the mail boat for Mobile.

THANKSGIVING.—This day was never so well observed by a New Orleans community before. Services were held in nearly all of the Protestant churches, and were well attended. Bishop Kavanaugh discoursed to a good congregation of the Carondelet street Church.

EPISCOPAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The twenty-fifth session of this body closed on the 17th inst. The Conference was favored with good weather, and the most hospitable accommodations. The citizens of the surrounding country took much interest in the proceedings, as well as the various anniversaries. A few laymen, from distant parts of the Conference, were present and assisting on the financial committees.

The Tract Society held its anniversary Friday night, in the hall of the Female College. Our confrere, Rev. E. H. Myers, made an excellent address from the platform, and was followed by the Bishop, who held a kind of class-meeting with the members of the Conference, inquiring who had and who had not done his duty, during the past year, in distributing tracts and good books. The matter was brought home to each one—some had to confess delinquency. About $400 were raised. We should like to have the report of the agent, Rev. F. G. Ferguson, who was chairman of the meeting. Its publication would do good and also that of the Secretary, Rev. J. Barker.

The Secretary of Conference reported that the journal of the last two years had been destroyed by fire in Mobile.—On motion, he was authorized to restore it, as far as possible, from the printed minutes and other authentic records within his reach.

A communication from T. W. Mathews, a local deacon, enclosing his credentials, was received, and the parchments ordered to file.

The question arose, previously propounded in the N. O. Christian Advocate, whether an unordained preacher was licensed to celebrate the rite of matrimony. The Bishop, having the case submitted to him, gave the following decision:—

"It is wholly inadmissible for a licentiate in our church to perform the rite of matrimony, inasmuch as this is a right and function of one in orders, by express language and long established usage."

So let the fast young men look out.—We are pleased that this irregular and disorderly practice is thus met. There is much call for its correction in Alabama. Many officiating ministers have never had their papers recorded by the probate court, as the law demands. The highest propriety demands carefulness here.

A recommendation from the Quarterly Conference of Pascagoula Circuit was presented, that the credentials of a local deacon—J. H. Allen—be restored. On consideration of the case, it was refused.

The Missionary Anniversary on Saturday night was out of the usual way, and we hope the experiment will succeed. The Treasurer first announced his figures. Much has been said and prophesied about the Alabama Conference reaching her $30,000. Will she? Can she? The whole church has been looking on, and hoping for the introduction of this new era in Missionary collections. The Conference itself, by Saturday night, was wound up to a pretty high pitch. Blue kept his counsel. Having the pleasure of lodging with him, we were aware in advance of the surprise he had in store. A few districts had overgone their apportionment; a few fallen below; but the reading of the report was too rapid to cypher it up.—Have we got the $30,000? was the inquiry. A pause.—The treasurer, in a deliberate voice, read out the sum total, Thirty One Thousand Six Hundred and Ninety Three Dollars! Cheers could not be restrained. Tow-lines were thrown out on each side of the gallant ship to those slow crafts—Georgia and South Carolina.

Those Arabic figures were as stirring as figures of speech. It was resolved not to do less the coming year.

The speakers for the occasion were the pick of the Church and country. It required that to sustain the feeling got up by the Treasurer, Hon. & Rev. H. W. Hilliard plead the cause of the most destitute of all people—those destitute of the Gospel. There is poetry in his motion as well as eloquence in his thought. He was followed by Bishop Pierce. Almost a scene took place. The Bishop, with the vast audience, had felt the charm which the retiring speaker had thrown over us; but there was a touching association working in him, unknown to others. He began:

"Mr. President: I labor under deep and peculiar emotion. When a youth, urged by want and ambition, I was seriously considering a profession that promised to lead me on to honor and gain. After painful struggles and convictions I yielded all to the higher call of duty from God, and became an humble Methodist preacher. The first time, with faltering step, I ever entered the pulpit was to conclude a service after a sermon by the brother who has just preceded me. Since then our paths have been widely divergent. He has won fame and position; stood on the high places of successful statesmanship and done the country service, at home and abroad. I have kept to the plain and unpretending lot of a Methodist preacher. Long years have lapsed; and I rejoice, Mr. President, and (turning to Mr. Hilliard) I congratulate you, sir, that our paths meet on this missionary platform."

The effect was profound. The depths were broken up. The occasion was sublime.

The collection was taken up quietly, and in order. With cards prepared, and hats, collectors waited on the congregation. No joking—no anecdotal stimulation. Duty was the word. Do your duty; consult not your pride or gallantry, or local prejudice—consult your conscience. Pray as you give.—Give seriously. Give as an act of worship. Sanctify the offering. Over seven hundred dollars was realized—at no moral cost.

An Education meeting was held in the chapel on Monday night. Dr. Rivers, Hon. H. W. Hilliard, and Dr. Summers, filled the programme. About $3,500 was realized to pay out the debt due on the college.

This building is newly finished, with grounds ample enough, at a cost of $35,000. The generosity and public spirit of the movement does honor to East Alabama. Dr. Lipscomb has about him a full and complete faculty. No man is above Dr. L. in the philosophy and practice of female education. He has the energetic co-operation of a board of trustees, who know how to appreciate him and his colleagues. Not yet a year has the institution been in operation, and they have 190 students. The building is not finished before there is a demand for more room. The Tuskegee Female College is without a precedent of equal success.

The religious exercises were not without a result. The number of Societies, which seem to be multiplying, crowded out sermons; but those that could be got in were good, and prayer was made for mourners in the congregation. Rev. Josiah Barker performed the affecting duty of preaching the funeral sermon for the deceased members of Conference on Tuesday night. It was a good time.

The Conference Stewards divided 66 per cent. to claimants.

The total increase of church membership during the year was, 3,794.

The reports, which have not yet come to hand, will more fully show the state of the church. We have never spent a more pleasant time at the sessions of this Conference, or contemplated with more satisfaction the results of the deliberations and labors of the one hundred and eighty ministers who compose it.—The amiable and elegant hospitality which it was our good fortune to enjoy at Judge Tate's, was of the kind reported by the brethren generally. By Wednesday midday, Tuskegee was scarce of preachers. The courteous Secretary furnished us with the following items:

REPORTS OF THE MISS. CONFERENCE.

EDUCATION.

The committee on Education beg leave to report, That but two institutions have been represented to this body—both of which they believe to be not only in a condition to promise usefulness, but to be now doing good service in the cause of mental and moral improvement.

Centenary College, the joint patronage and oversight of which is held by the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences is meeting the largest hope of its friends. The catalogue reports 117 students in the College, and 113 in the Preparatory School, for the year ending 1st of August, 1856. 120 young men have gone forth with the highest honors of the Institution; though it numbers no officer who has passed the meridian of life, is composed of scholars—men of litorary taste and culture, whose fortunes are identified with the success of the College, and who seem to have devoted themselves wholly to its prosperity and usefulness.

Up to the present period of the session the number of students exceeds that of any former year; and we are happy to state that the standard of scholarship is being elevated. During the present year the Board of Trustees authorized its Building Committee to contract for a centre building to be used as a chapel, recitation rooms, society halls, &c., at a cost of some $60,000.

This building is now in progress, and it is expected that it will be so far completed as to be ready for use at the next commencement. Liberal men with large hearts and large purses have bade us godspeed in our work, and more than $40,000 of the funds needed to complete the building have been secured. There is still a deficiency and we think we have a right to look to the ministry and frends of education and religion in our bounds to supply it. Our sons are educated there without cost; and as an efficient auxiliary to our work, the importance of education is confessed by us all.

We regard the erection of the centre building indispensable to the success of the College, and we think the more numerous and liberal the helpers to its completion, the more we shall increase its friends and patrons.

We think the time is come for us to provide the means of education at home and we are sure that no Southern College exceeds Centenary in healthfulness of location, industry of Faculty or prospect of patronage.

It is important too that its present endowment $30,000 should be increased to at least $100,000. There are friends enough among the friends of Methodism and education, not only to complete the magnificent edifice now in process of erection, but to give the College an ample endowment, and we think that if the members of this Conference would but allow the people to give, we should soon be placed beyond possible failure. Much has been done and is doing, but the institution is too young to stand alone. We can build up an institution there worthy of us, and we shall be recreant to an important trust unless our individual good wishes shall be seconded by personal efforts to build its walls and throng its recitation rooms.

The other institution represented here is Sharon Female College. While it has done much for female education—that education without which society has no softening and home no joyous influence—it has encountered difficulty and borne embarrassment. It has needed a President who would be known as a fixtern of the College and it has needed additional buildings for College purposes.

The agent appointed by this Conference a year ago, encouraged by promises and by partial success commenced the erection of a handsome and convenient College edifice. But this work drags to its completion, or waits for the offerings of liberal friends. We can and ought to put this institution in a position to accomplish the design of its establishment.

The Trustees have employed a President who is represented as well qualified for his position, and the school is doing well. The college is situated in a pleasant and healthful village—surrounded by an intelligent community. It deserves our fostering care, our patronage, our help, and it ought to have it.

Other female institutions are under the care of ministers and members of our church, and should be assisted by us. Among these we mention Port Gibson Female Academy, whose Principal, Rev. B. Jones, is a member of this Conference; the school of Mrs. Mary Wall, of Clinton, La., and the Mount Hermon School, near Clinton, Miss., under the care of Prof. T. G. Rice; and the Southern Female School, under the care of Prof. T. H. Capers, and Bascom Female Institute.

We regret that our information on the subject of education—as education is being promoted in the bounds of our Conference is so limited—but we are not less less conscious of its importance or less inclined to lend it a willing help than formerly. Indeed we feel that the increasing demand for education and our increasing influence, is adding to our responsibility in this great work, and that it is time that every man should do something to meet these obligations.

We submit the following resolutions for your approval:

That Sharon Female College enjoys our entire confidence, shall have our cordial assistance.

That Centenary College of Louisiana is now doing good service in the cause of education and religion, is entitled to the confidence and patronage of the public; that we will use our influence to increase the number of its students, and that we will appeal personally to our friends for aid in the erection of its buildings and the increase of its endowment fund.

W. H. WATKINS, Chairman.

BOOK COMMITTEE.

The Book Committee ask leave to report, That they have had before them the annual exhibit of the agents of the publishing house at Nashville. Your Committee are led to believe from the facts set forth in the exhibit of the agents, that the publishing house is in a healthy condition, although the concern has done, as yet, but little more, if anything, than pay expenses, after meeting drafts in favor of the Bishops, and losses sustained by "Quarterly Reviews" and Richmond Depository.

When we take into consideration the fact that this now extensive establishment has been in operation but two years, and consider the vast expenditure of money necessary to complete all the arrangements for successful operation, it is clearly evident that it has been managed with commendable skill and ability to place it upon its present commanding position among the publishing houses of like character throughout the country.

Your Committee incline to the belief, that the leading object of our publishing house should be, not to make money, but to furnish the people throughout our extensive and extending country with cheap publications; and we hope that our Book Committee will, as early as they deem it prudent and safe, lower the price of our books, such as will bear it, and especially of our standard publications. In the circulation of our publications we are forced into competition with colporteurs and booksellers of other and like institutions; and unless the price of our books can be brought down to prices corresponding with books of similar character issued from other institutions, we must be, in a great measure forced out of the market.

Your Committee are gratified to learn from the exhibit of the agents, that some of our periodicals are well sustained; some of them not only bettering the world, but yielding also a revenue to the church. It is, however, a matter of deep regret to find, by an exhibit of the affairs of others, that they fall far short in paying the expenses consequent upon their publication. This is a fact deeply to be deplored, and if our preachers generally would make proper exertions, such would not be the case.

In conclusion, your Committee recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we will use our utmost exertions to spread our books and sustain our periodicals, and especially the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

BIBLE CAUSE.

The Committee on the Bible Cause beg leave to report that the Bible is the revelation of God to man, and is the only and sufficient rule of our faith and practice. It needs no apology by us, nor commendation from us. Its authenticity is established, and its genuineness proved. It has become the infallible text-book of Christendom; ten thousand pulpits resound with its enunciated truths; ten thousand times ten thousand hearts rejoice in its glorious doctrines and blessed promises. The statesman adorns his speeches by its sublime poetry; the attorney impresses his pleadings by its awful truths, and enriches them by its eloquent paragraphs. It cheers and comforts the afflicted poor; while it humbles the self-sufficient rich. Blessed Book of God's Inspiration! what would we have been without it? How could we spare it now—so great and glorious a treasure has it ever been regarded by the church, that it has been her desire and aim to introduce it into every human habitation, and to pour its resplendent light upon every mind and heart; and hence she rejoiced in the great catholic idea of a regularly organized society, composed of almost all denominations, whose avowed object is to put a copy of the Holy Scriptures in the hands of every accountable being. Your Committee rejoice to state that our ministers and people within your bounds have co-operated heartily with the agents of the American Bible Society; much has been accomplished by this union of strength, and yet much remains to be done, in which each of us should rejoice to take a part. A considerable amount has been contributed in the course of the year by our people, and paid, in most instances, to the agents of the society; hence only a small amount has been reported and paid to us by the members of our Conference.

We submit the following resolutions:

1st. That we have undiminished confidence in the American Bible Society, to accomplish the objects of its organization.

2nd. That we will co-operate cheerfully and heartily with its regularly authorized agents whon among us.

3rd. That we will take a public collection for the Bible cause, during the coming year, in every circuit and station in our Conference.

J. L. FORSYTH, Chairman.

TEMPERANCE.

The Committee on Temperance, ask leave to report. The subject is one that merits more time and consideration than it has received at their hands.

Your Committee would not cast censure upon any individual member of this Conference, but they have reason to believe that the preachers generally have not attached to this subject the importance it deserves.

Dram drinking is a sin, too common among our people to be unknown and unnoticed; a few of our preachers only labor to enforce discipline upon this subject. Some of them have met it boldly, and without fear or favor have faithfully administered the law. We commend the example of such to all, and submit the following resolutions and ask their adoption by the Conference.

Resolved, That we regard the organization of Temperance Societies among the people as potent for good, and the Temperance Reform movement as one worthy of our hearty co-operation and support.

Resolved, That our preachers be earnestly requested to present everywhere, as opportunity may offer, the importance of this subject, and further, that they be urged to a strict enforcement of the Diciplinary Rule relative to the drinking of spiritual liquors.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

Your Committee on Sabbath Schools respectfully beg leave to submit the following report:

In viewing the various benevolent enterprises now in successful operation within the bounds of our growing Conference, we deem none of more importance to us as a Church and to the good of the world than the cause of Sabbath Schools. Within the limits of the field occupied by this Conference, there are hundreds of children committed to our care to "train up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" and your committee rejoices to know that in many portions of the field the Church is alive to her true interests. Sabbath after Sabbath the tender ones are assembled—wholesome lessons of truth are taught them, and their young hearts early imbued with the doctrines of our holy Christianity, which is able to save their souls.

Your Committee find from the statistics of the various circuits and stations represented in this Conference the following aggregate: 72 schools, 75 superintendents, 267 teachers, 2,471 scholars, 11,401 volumes in libraries, 392 visitors taken, and $905 collected for Sabbath School purposes. These figures, compared with the report of 1855, show a small decrease in the number of schools, superintendents, teachers, scholars, volumes and visitors taken. But an increase of $519.60 in the amount collected. We are gratified at the increase of money collected, which may be attributed, no doubt, in part, to the resolution passed at the last Conference requiring each preacher in charge of a circuit or station to preach in every prominent congregation upon the subject of Sabbath Schools, and take a collection for the same. But it is a melancholy exhibit to see a falling off of even one school, or scholar, or visitor, while the field is already white unto harvest and so inviting, and especially when it is remembered "how great a treasure is committed to the care" of this Conference in the hundreds of children within her bounds and the fearful responsibilities resting upon us as the "watchmen and stewards of the Lord" who "are to feed and provide for the Lord's family, to seek for Christ's sheep that are dispersed abroad, and for His children who are in the midst of this evil world." None, save the infinitely wise God, can estimate the amount of moral and religous good which can be accomplished through the agency of Sabbath Schools. Here is a power almost omnipotent in subduing the force of infidelity and popular errors, and the hastening of the universal reign of Prince Messiah. In a few years the major part of these children will be heads of families and filling important stations in the world, yea, more, it is to this source that the church must look for supplies to fill the ranks of her ministry as God shall call the "Fathers in Israel" from the walls of Zion to their rewards in heaven. But your committee deem it altogether unnecessary to urge the claims of the Sabbath School cause as it has so long and so eloquently spoken for itself; but we would earnestly exhort that all diligence be given to the promotion of this great Christian enterprize. Therefore your committee would offer the following resolutions:

1. That it be the duty of the preacher in charge of each Circuit or Station to preach upon the subject of Sabbath Schools, and wherever ten scholars can be collected, to organize a school, and give all diligence in fostering this important interest of the Church.

2. That we highly recommend the S. S. Visitor as a child's paper and will put forth renewed effort in its circulation.

A Newspaper.

It was Bishop Horner's own opinion that there was no better moralist than the newspaper. He says:—"The follies, vices, and consequent miseries of multitudes, displayed in a newspaper, are so many beacons continually burning to turn others from the rock on which they have been shipwrecked. What more powerful dissuasive from suspicion, jealousy and anger, than the story of one friend murdered by another in a duel? What caution more likely to be effective against gambling and profligacy than the mournful relation of an execution, or the fate of a despairing suicide? What finer lecture on the necessity of economy than the auction of estates, houses and furniture? Only take a newspaper, and consider it well, pay for it, and it will instruct thee."

Happiness is a perfume that one cannot shed over another without a few drops falling on one's self.

Advice, says Coleridge, is like snow—the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon, and the deeper it sinks into the mind.

If we hunger for spiritual blessings, it proves that we have spiritual life, and Jesus will satisfy us; for he filleth the hungry with good things.

TRIUMPH OF LEANING.—Mind constitutes the anjesty of man—virtue his true nobility. The tide of improvement which is now flowing through the land like another Niagara, destined to roll on down to the latest posterity. And it will bear then on its bosom, our virtue or vices, our glory or our shame, or whatever else we may transmit as an inheritance. It then, in a great measure, depends upon the present, whether the moth of immortality, ignorance, and luxury, shall support her against the whirlwind of war, ambition, corruption, and the remorsal tooth of time. Give your children fortune without education, and at least one half the number will go down to the tomb of oblivion, perhaps in ruin. Give them education, and they will be a fortune to themselves and country. It is an inheritance worth more than gold, for it buys true honor; they can never spend or loose it, and through life it proves a friend, in death a consolation.

LOCAL NEWS.

LADIES' FAIRS.—Two of those fairs have been held this week. One at Algiers, for the purpose of erecting a Methodist Church. The other at Odd Fellows' Hall, for the benefit of St. Paul's Church, (Episcopal). Both are said to have done a good business.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The difficult and hazardous task of elevating the spire of the new church on Lafayette Square, was performed on Tuesday morning, without hindrance or accident. It weighed twenty-three tons, and was hoisted by machinery constructed purely on mathematical principles, to an altitude one hundred and twenty feet above that of its construction. As it now stands, it is considerably the tallest spire in the city. It will be very beautiful when it and the tower upon which it rests are completed. The other works of the church are steadily in progress; and ere long the edifice will be "a thing of beauty," if not "a joy forever."

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS.—The annual examination of the High Schools of the First District was held this week. Nothing affords a more refined enjoyment than that of the pupils of the public schools, in displaying the buds and blossoms that the annular round has developed in their intellects.

The proficiency of the various classes in the higher branches of school study, and an intellectual attainment generally, is said to have been well worth the beholding.

THE CELEBRATION TUESDAY.—This day was duly honored as the anniversary of the battle of Lake Borgne. National salutes were fired on the Place de Armes at morning, noon and night. In the afternoon, the different companies composing the Louisiana Legion, under Brig. Gen. Palfrey, turned out, paraded the streets, and had a review on the Place d'Armes. After that, the Legion paid funeral honors to the remains of Col. Thomas F. Hunt, late Assistant Quartermaster General of the U. S. Army—escorting them with sad music and solemn tread, to their last earthly resting place.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The University of Virginia.

The Richmond (Va.) Dispatch gives the following interesting notice of this Southern seat of learning: "The University of Virginia was never in as flourishing a condition as at present. The number of students at this early period of the session is larger than at the close of last session, which was larger than at any previous period in the history of the University. There are now six hundred and two students, from the following States: New York, 2. Pennsylvania, 1. Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, 10. District of Columbia, 10; North Carolina, 6; South Carolina, 43; Georgia, 31; Florida, 7; Alabama, 46; Mississippi, 34; Louisiana, 39; Texas, 7; California, 2; Arkansas, 1; Missouri, 8; Kentucky, 11; Tennessee, 9; making in all from other States 272; from Virginia, 330; total, 602. The whole number of students on the 13th of November was 516. Increase for the remainder of the session, 42, making the whole number during the session, 558. With the same rate of increase this session as last, for the remainder of the session, the total number during the present session will reach 650. It appears that students now enter at a more advanced age than formerly, and than is usual at this generally fast age, when young men are dissatisfied if their education is not finished at seventeen. The ages of the students at their birth days preceding matriculation were as follows: 21 at the age of 16, 72 at the age of 17, 107 at the age of 18, 118 at the age of 19, 118 at the age of 20, 75 at the age of 21, 49 at the age of 22, 22 at the age of 23, 4 at the age of 24, 10 at the age of 25, 5 at the age of 26 This would make the average age of tudents about 20. About 200 students board and lodge within the precincts of the University, leaving 400, or nearly two-thirds of the whole number, to find accomodations at the boarding houses in the vicinity."

VICKSBUAG AND JACKSON RAILROAD.—There is a rumor in our city, says the Vicksburg Whig, that W. C. Smedes, Esq., President of the Southern Railroad, has succeeded in purchasing the Vicksburg and Jackson Railroad. We hope it may be true, as it will certainly insure the speedy completion of the Southern Railroad to the Alabama line. Mr. Smedes will be at home in a few days, and we shall then learn whether it is so, and probably be furnished by him with a statement of the transaction.

TWO MEN KILLED IN VICKSBUAG.—The Vicksburg Times, of the 17th inst.,—About 6 o'clock on Monday night, the coroner was called upon to hold an inquest on the bodies of two persons, being identified by the bystanders as Michael Carroll and Thomas Kain, who were found dead in the boarding house of Mrs. Foley, on Mulbery street. From the best authenticated reports that we have at hand, it appears that several boarders, who were all Irish, were playing a game familiarly known as "five-and-forty," for a watch, when some misunderstanding occurred relative to the game, and a general fisticuff ensued, and in the melee, one of the parties, to whom report has fixed the name of James Riardon, drew a knife and struck the fatal blows successively, that sent two of his fellow beings into eternity, without a moments' warning, and then rushed to the door and made good his escape.

ENTERPRIZING.—The Common Council of Galena have voted to subscribe for $100,000 of the stock of the Mineral Point Railway, and have also appropriated $50,000 to construct a lock in the Galena.

CONGRESSIONAL.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

In the House of Representatives, on Monday, 15th inst., this subject was brought up for action.

Mr. Etheridge, of Tennessee, asked consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House of Representatives regards all suggestions and propositions of every kind, by whomsoever made, for a revival of the African slave trade, as shocking to the moral sentiments of the enlightened portion of mankind, and that any action on the part of Congress conniving at or legalizing that horrid and inhuman traffic would justly subject the Government and citizens of the United States to the reproach and execration of all civilized and Christian people throughout the world.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia, objected to the resolution.

Mr. Etheridge moved a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Walker, of Alabama, would inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether if there should be a suspension of the rules, and the resolution should be received, he would move the previous question so as to cut off debate.

Mr. Etheridge presumed that there was no gentleman here who did not understand this resolution, and that, as he did not intend to debate it himself, he would move the previous question.

Mr. Orr, of South Carolina, said that, if the rules should be suspended, and an opportunity should be afforded to him, he would offer the following, as a substitute to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to repeal the laws prohibiting the slave trade.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, called for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspending the rules.

While the Clerk was calling the roll, the following gentlemen, as their names were called, gave their reasons for voting as they did, as follows:

Mr. Puryear, of North Carolina, stated that he was as much opposed to the re-opening of the African slave trade as any member of the House; but, as he believed that the resolution was out of place and ill-timed, he should vote against it.

Mr. Cobb, of Alabama, said he should vote for a suspension of the rules for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from South Carolina an opportunity of offering his substitute.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia, thought that the revival of the African slave trade was inexpedient, but was of the opinion that the resolution deserved the consideration of the House.

Mr. Zollicoffer, of Tennessee, was decidedly opposed to the revival of the trade, but, as he did not believe any good could grow out of the resolution, he should vote against a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Phelps, of Missouri, was also opposed to the re-opening of the slave trade, and would vote against a bill proposing to repeal the laws prohibiting it; but he was also against abstractions.—The message of the Governor of South Carolina was not before the House, and he should record his vote in the negative.

Mr. Burnett, of Kentucky, was as much opposed to the revival of the slave trade as any man on the floor of the House; but, believing that he fully understood the object of the gentleman who proposed the resolution, and that he could understand all the inducements which had led him to present it at this time, he should vote no.

Mr. Washburn, of Maine, then stated that he should object to any further explanations.

Mr. Barksdale, of Mississippi, remarked that whilst he was not in favor of re-opening the slave trade, and whilst he did not believe that any gentleman on his side of the House were in favor of reviving it, he regarded the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee as ill timed, out of place.

Mr. Greenwood, of Arkansas, stated that, so far as he was advised, there was not a gentleman upon the Democratic side of the House who was in favor of re-opening the slave trade, but he should vote against the suspension of the rules.

Messrs. Kitt of South Carolina, Garnett of Virginia, and Kelly of New York, stated that, had they been within the bar of the House when their names were called, they would have voted against a suspension of the rules.

The vote on the motion to suspend the rules was then announced to be—yeas 140, nays 50.

So the motion to suspend the rules was agreed to.

Mr. Etheridge then submitted his resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption.

Mr. Orr hoped the gentleman would allow him an opportunity to offer the substitute which had been read to the House. He thought that if the gentleman would consent to its introduction, the vote would be a unanimous one.

Mr. Etheridge, in reply, stated that if it were not possible for the gentleman from South Carolina to get his resolution before the House in the same way that he had obtained the consideration of his own, he would most cheerfully comply with the request of the gentleman; but, as it is within the power of the gentleman to present his resolution at another time, he would decline to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. Jones of Tennessee, wished to inquire of his colleague if he desired to have the expression on the part of the House against the re-opening of the African slave trade; or if he desired to leave it in such a way as to make it offensive to his own section of country.

The Speaker ruled all debate out of order.

The previous question was then seconded—ayes 113, noes 77; and the main question ordered to be put—yeas 125, nays 84.

Mr. McQueen, of South Carolina, moved to lay the resolution on the table; which motion was disagreed to—yeas 71, nays 137.

The question was then stated to be on the adoption of the resolution; when the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. Millson, of Virginia, asked to be excused from voting on the resolution, and desired to state his reasons for making the request; but objection was made.

Mr. M stated that a vote for or against would place him in a false position. There were parts and bearings of the resolution to which he had objection, while he was in favor of the general objects of the resolution.

The question was the taken, and Mr. Millson was excused from voting.

The roll was called by the Clerk, and upon this question, as upon the motion to suspend the rules, explanations were made by various members as their names were called.

Mr. Eustis, of Louisiana, stated that he should vote against the resolution, not because he was in favor of reviving the slave trade, for he believed that there was but one opinion on that subject, but because he looked upon the resolution as uncalled for, unwarranted, and full of sound, signifying nothing.

Mr. Florence, of Pennsylvania, amid loud cries of "order!" said that there was not cheese enough upon the "figure four," beautifully gilded as the bait on the trap was, to catch him; so he should vote "no."

Mr. Harris, of Illinois, in voting for the resolution, explained that he voted for all that part of it which denounced the re-opening of the slave trade, but not that part which announced the opinions of other men.

Mr. McMullin, of Virginia, asked to be excused from voting upon this nonsensical question; which request was acquiesced in by the House.

Messrs. Oliver of Missouri, Smith of Tennessee, Smith of Virginia, and Wright of Tennessee, severally explained, that in voting against the resolution, they were opposed to the revival of the slave trade.

Mr. Sneed, of Tennessee, stated that on this stump speech he should vote no.

Mr. Gadwalder, of Pennsylvania, asked leave to explain his vote, but objection was made.

The vote was then announced to be—yeas 152; nays—57.

Mr. Orr, of South Carolina, asked consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient, unwise and contrary to the settled policy of the United States, to repeal the laws prohibiting the African slave trade.

Mr. Barclay, of Pennsylvania, objected.

Mr. Orr moved a suspension of the rules, which motion was agreed to—yeas 181, nays 12.

Mr. Orr then submitted the resolution, and upon its adoption demanded the previous question.

Mr. Quitman of Mississippi, hoped the gentlemen from South Carolina would withdraw the demand for the previous question so that he might be able to move to amend it. He was understood to say that he was in favor of the resolution, excepting the words "contrary to the settled policy of the Government." He did not wish to express an opinion as to its settled policy.

Mr. Boyce, of South Carolina, then offered, as a substitute, the following resolution, which was read; but not agreed to:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives expressing what they believe to be the opinion both of the North and South are opposed to the re-opening of the African slave trade.

Mr. Orr thought that the resolution was in the best shape in which it could be placed, and he therefore declined to withdraw the demand by the previous question.

The previous question was then sustained—yeas, 90; nays 73; and under the operation thereof the question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to—yeas, 183, nays, 8.

Later from Texas.

By the steamship Chas. Morgan, which arrived on Saturday, we have papers from Galveston to the 18th and our files from interior Texas. The news of the 16th says:

We cannot learn definitely what amount of sugar will be made in Texas this year, but it will not, probably, exceed one thousand hogsheads, and will more likely fall short of that amount. Nearly all our planters are compelled to save what little they have for planting cane, in order to make a crop another year.

The Cherokee Sentinel states that Dr. Langley, who resided eight miles north of Larissa, shot himself with a load of buck shot, on the 21st ult. No cause is known for this act of self-destruction.—He was a man of wealth and sustained a good reputation.

We learn from the Lavaca Herald that the agents of the San Antonio Railroad have succeded in their negotiations, and that there is now no doubt but the road will be built.

A correspondent of the Dallas Herald, writing from Weatherford, Parker county, under the date of the 9th inst., states that snow was falling at that time, and that the weather was very cold.

The San Antonio Texan, of the 11th, publishes a letter dated Fort McHavett, Texas, Nov. 30, from which we extract the following:

Captain Brudfute of the 2d Cavalry, with a portion of his Company, whilst scouting up the main branch of the Concho, on the 26th inst., came in contact with ten Comanche warriors and one squaw, on their way down towards the settlements; and after a fight of about three hours, succeeded in killing off the whole party of Indians except the squaw whom they brought into Fort McKavett unhurt.

The whole of their animals, two good rifles, several bows and arrows, shields, and other Indian fixings, fell into the hands of their captors.

Captain Bradfute had one of his men shot through both legs with a rifle ball, and one of his horses wounded with an arrow. The clothing and hats of the captain and his party were pretty severely cut up with arrows.

This has been a gallant affair while it lasted, as the cavalry had to fight the Indians their own fashion—sometimes dismounted and fighting through the chapparral, and again mounting and charging over the prairie, crossing and re-crossing the river, sometimes on foot and again on horseback

From some information Capt. Bradfute gleaned from the squaw, his prisoner, (who speaks Spanish,) he is led to believe that a larger party of Comanches are encamped high up on the Concho, and like a brave warrior, he is again in the saddle and has put out this morning for the Concho, having been re-inforced here by Lieut. Halabird and ten men of the first infantry, mounted on mules.

The Indianola Bulletin of the 16th, says:

Cotton seems to be coming in pretty freely. The levee around the head of the wharf continues blockaded with cotton, although it is generally shipped as fast as it arrives.

The cotton crops appear to have been abundant from the great quantities that are arriving. Produce and pelteries of all kinds arrive freely, and the times seem to be improving in the way of business. The merchants generally appear to be busy and contented.

Later from Havana.

We have files of Havana papers to the 18th inst., inclusive by the Cahawba, but we find in them exceedingly little of interest.

The Prensa, of the 17th inst., has a very long article on the position of Walker in Nicaragua, which it infers to be in the last degree critical, from the late news thence, that is found in New Orleans papers. Mr. Pierre Soule, it says, has abandoned the country, in consequence of the difficulties he had witnessed between Walker and certain of his most ardent partisans—alluding, we presume, to the redoubtable Goicouria. The position taken by President Pierce, from his proclamation exhorting the enforcement of the Neutrality laws, down to his remarks in his message on the opening the present session of Congress are reviewed, and it is gravely asked whether it is not unwise to recognize any Government till the complete triumph of one of the contending parties is decided. And after much more in similar style, thanks are offered to Divine Providence for its protection of Cuba, in the overthrow of Walker in Nicaragua; and the Hispano-American Republics are encouraged to strengthen themselves by all means, and postpone the settlement of any existing difficulties among themselves, until they have made a prestige for themselves, which will forever hereafter protect them against such movements.

An official account of the destruction of the Dutch ship Banca, by fire, is given in the Havana papers. She left Macao on the 12th of July, with 350 Chinese laborers for Cuba. Everything on board had been officially ascertained on her leaving, to be in the most satisfactory possible condition. On the 18th, she returned to port, under the pretext of her having sustained damages, which however, did not appear to be the fact; but notwithstanding very bad weather was prevailing, a new examination of her was proceeded with.

On the night of the 3d of August, an alarm of fire was heard, and she was seen burning. The Portuguese brig-of war Mondego, and the steamer Queen, and other vessels, immediately proceeded to give all posible aid, and managed to save 150 of the emigrants on board, while about 60 more are believed to have saved themselves in boats and by swimming, their number being uncertain on account of their having scattered themselves on landing. Neither the captain nor the mate of the vessel had since been seen, and it is feared they had either been drowned or burned.

No exact origin of the catastrophe had been discovered, but it appears that there was a bad feeling existing between the captain and the Chinese, (the interpreter not being on board) and that the former fired on the Chinese, who desperately defended themselves with such arms as they could find, and then set fire to the ship as a means of defense.

The sugar market during the week ended on the 13th inst., had presented but little animation, owing, it is said, principally to the exorbitant pretensions of holders, especially for the qualities most in demand. The news received from Europe was expected to contribute to a further decrease in the demand.—Boxes of new sugar, sixteen arrobas each net, had been sold, to arrive, at $24; for Spain, first quality white had been sold at sixteen reals per arroba; second quality at fourteen reals, and inferior at eleven reals. Much lower figures are given for old sugar.

The new crop was coming in but slowly. The stock on hand is given at 53,000 boxes. Prices were steady at last advices.

The arrivals of flower had been considerable. It is quoted at from $15 50 to $16 50 per barrel, on time.

PROJECTED TELEGRAPH LINE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CUBA.—It is said that parties have been for some time in correspondence with the Cuban and Spanish authorities for the privilege of laying a telegraph line between Cuba and the United States and selling there for old brass to obtain smaller guns with the proceeds; they were said to be worth seven hundred dollars each. The Central Americans took these pieces, mounted them, and fired them, using six pound balls, against Walker's steamboat, which consequently is compelled to keep a mile and a half from the shore.

The State of Alabama has 4,435,614 acres of improved land, 26,026,466 of unimproved lands within her limits. Notwithstanding the great emigration from her to Arkansas, Texas, &c., her population is constantly increasing. She has millions of acres of good lands, yet uncultivated. Her river swamps are yet uncleared and undrained.—Balt. Sun

NICARAGUA.

The Steamship Tennessee, from San Juan to New York, has brought intelligence of Walker's movement in Nicaragua, of a very different character to that brought to this city about the same date by the Texas. Subjoined is a statement of Dr. Derickson, a surgeon in Walker's army:

I was a volunteer surgeon in Walker's army, for five weeks previous to leaving for home. The first battle fought after I was in the army, was between four hundred of Walker's troops, under Gen. Hornsby, and seven hundred Costa Ricans, on the transit route, between Virgin Bay and San Juan del Lux. It ended in the partial retreat of the Costa Ricans; they were driven from the first barricade but succeed in holding the second.—Walker's loss was two killed and seven or eight wounded; that of the enemy must have been much greater. Hornsby then retreated to Virgin Bay, leaving his force there, he proceeded with haste to Granada, by the steambont Virgin, for reinforcements. Walker himself came down with two hundred riflemen, who constituted the most efficient part of his army. With these he marched out and met the Costa Ricans, and after a short and spirited battle succeeded in driving them from the second baricade. The Costa Ricans retreated, one-half of them to Costa Rica, the others to Rivas, where they fortified themselves.

Walker marched to San Juan, and the next day after the battle from thence to Virgin Bay, during the succeeding night he left for Granada, with his riflemen, leaving a battalion of infantry, under Col. Jaquess, to hold Virgin Bay and protect the transit route. A few hours after arriving at Virgin Bay, Walker marched from Granada to Massaya with seven hundred men, where he attacked two thousand Guatemalans and Costa Ricans, and succeeded, after two days fighting, in taking all the towns except the main plaza. He made several unsuccessful attempts to take that, but finding himself unable to, he retreated to Granada, having lost about twenty killed and forty wounded. This was, I think, on the 20th of November. Soon after his arrival he gave orders, I know not from what cause, to burn the town of Granada. Two-thirds of the town was destroyed next day. On the second day, or the 22d, the rest of the town was destroyed, except the main plaza and a church situated on the road to the Lake of Nicaragua. On the third day he embarked his sick and wounded men, amounting to about two hundred and fifty; also the women and children, and sent them to Ometepe Island, which is situated a short distance from Virgin Bay. On the fourth day, (Nov. 24) the remainder of the army, which consisted of healthy men, and numbered about three hundred and fifty, with about one hundred citizens, were attacked and surrounded by about two thousand five hundred of the combined Central Americans, consisting of Costa Ricans, Guatemalans, San Salvadorians, and some twenty Americans who deserted from General Walker.

They are under the command of Brig. General Henningsen, the commander of artillery. Nothing has been heard from them since they were surrounded; they were cut off from Walker and his remaining forces. Seven cannons, being all Walker's artillery except one howitzer, is with them, and at least half of his ammunition, none of which does he at present appear to be able to save. A straight road leads from Granada to Nicaragua, from which it is not far distant, and a wharf and old fort were situated on the shore of the lake at the end of said road. At the time the Central Americans attacked Granada, Walker was in a steamboat on the lake, and twenty-nine men, called policemen, were on the wharf, having been left to guard some things placed there for shipment.

The Central Americans attacked Granada by advancing between the lake and said city, thereby cutting off the retreat of the beseiged, and preventing Walker from succoring or communicating with them from the lake. The twenty-nine policemen on the wharf were thus, of course, cut off, and suffered the first attack. Five hundred men advanced upon them and were driven back time after time with terrible loss. I was on the steamboat with Walker at the time, and could see it all, though we could not communicate with or aid them. For two days did these twenty-nine men hold their own against such desperate odds, and would not have yielded them if there had not been a traitor among them. On the second day, one, a Cuban, I think, deserted and went over to the enemy, informing them of the number and condition of the twenty-eight, and showing how that an energetic and continued assault would at once take the place. The plan proved but too successful; the bold fellows were taken and every one of them massacred, except five, who threw themselves into the lake and attempted to swim to General Walker's boat, four of them were shot or drowned, one only succeeded in reaching the steamboat. The Central Americans destroyed not only the fort but the wharf, the bungos, and everything that would facilitate the embarkation of troops, or disembarkation, or the lauding of boats and vessels. There were two brass cannons—the one an eighteen pounder, and the other a nine pounder. Both being unfit for service, had been carried down to the wharf for the purpose of shipping to the United States and selling there for old brass to obtain smaller guns with the proceeds; they were said to be worth seven hundred dollars each. The Central Americans took these pieces, mounted them, and fired them, using six pound balls, against Walker's steamboat, which consequently is compelled to keep a mile and a half from the shore.

We are unable, from want of space, to give Dr. Dickerson's statement in full. He concludes with a detail of the circumstances relating to the fight of 24th Nov., in which he represents Walker's troops in a most critical position.

COMMERCIAL,

WEDNESDAY MORNING, Dec. 24, 1856.

COTTON....We stated in our last review that the market closed at an advance of ⅛. There was no material change on Saturday, when buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit and took 7500 bales at the previous improvement. On Monday the demand continued fair and prices were fully maintained, the sales comprising 9000 bales, but yesterday there was less competition, and although the business was to a fair extent, the sales amounting to 9000 bales, yet prices ruled in favor of buyers, at least for the lower grades, without however resulting in any quotable decline. Thus the sales of the three days sum up 25,500 bales.

The receipts since the 19th inst. comprise 42,640 bales, against 36,490 during the corresponding period last year, and the exports 22,884 (16,252 to foreign ports and 6432 coastwise,) embracing 5082 to Liverpool, 1647 to Glasgow, 2444 to Havre, 250 to Bordeaux, 4901 to Barcelona, 1522 to Bremen, 3441 to Boston, 1450 to New York and 600 to Philadelphia, leaving on hand a stock of 340,556 bales against 320,503 same time last year. The receipts proper since 1st Sept. to date (exclusive of those from Mobile, Florida and Texas by sea,) amount to 755,018 bales against 746,551 same time last year—showing an increase of 8361 bales. The decrease at all the ports up to the latest dates reported, is 1902 bales, 11,016,271 against 1,918,173.) Referring to our remarks above, we repeat our quotations, as follows:
